On the mission fields certain matters arise that would not have a place in an association in the north, such as the relation of the missionaries to the native workers, and the desire for greater autonomy by the latter. The problem has not been acute here, doubtless due to the great rapidity with which power has been granted. In this meeting, however, a resolution was passed, asking the society to grant additional powers to the committee on cooperation, so as to enable it to intervene in the selection, discontinuance or transfer of pastors. An excellent spirit prevailed in the presentation and discussion of the resolution; but it is not clear that it would be a wise step. It would certainly not be a step toward more power by the local church, which would be sound Baptist policy, but rather in the contrary direction, increasing the power of a board. And it would in this case actually be a step backward immediately, as the policy of the missionaries is to make no pastoral changes without consultation with the church and pastor concerned, as well as with other native workers. No step of importance relating to missionary administration is taken, in fact, without such consultation. In regard to the manner of settling pastors, the appointment, by an outside agency, of a pastor of a Baptist church can only be justified as a temporary expedient on mission fields, to be relinquished at the earliest possible moment. The surrender of the appointive power, when made by the society, should be made to the church itself, and not to any person or group of persons outside the church.

Caguas, P. R.

A Prayer

By Elsie F. Shaw

ADORED Redeemer, who upon the cross
Didst bear our bitter load of sin and shame,
For this great deed of love and sacrifice,
We laud and magnify thy holy name.

So now we pray, oh blest and gracious Lord
That we with deep humility may strive
To show our love and gratitude to thee,
To live each day as thou wouldst have us live.

As in the Garden of Gethsemane
In lonely grief on Olivet's dark hill,
Thou didst foreknow the suffering of the cross
Yet bowed submissive to thy Father's will.

So teach us, when our time of trial comes—
That bearing of our cross we dare not shun—
We may with willing and with trustful heart
Say, "Father, not my will but thine be done."

And on the cross, in tones of tenderest love,
Thou didst but plead for those that mocked thy pain,
With sweet forgiving gentleness didst die—
The Holy Lamb for scoffing sinners slain.

So, following thine example, gracious Lord
Who reignest now above in highest heaven,
May we when any strive to do us harm,
Forgive as we shall hope to be forgiven.

Oh, may that love, that streameth from the cross—
The sacrifice of thine own life outpoured—
Comfort and bless all humble, contrite souls
And turn the hearts of men unto the Lord.

Iowa Baptist Churches in the Country

By John W. Million

Two churches which should serve as object lessons to the Baptist denomination are country churches on the southern edge of Boone County—The People's Baptist Church, Rev. W. G. Hooper, pastor; and the South Beaver Baptist Church, Rev. C. M. Crowell, pastor.

In recent years people have been reading a great deal about abandoned country churches. Here are two churches whose people seem to have solved the problem of perpetuity. They are at this time what is known as all-time churches, services every Sunday in the month. These churches have evergreen Sunday schools. They realize the importance of having their pastors located permanently and comfortably upon the field. These pastors are building themselves into the affections of the people and into the organic life of their communities.

The People's Church has a distinction which is to be highly commended, and that is the community idea. This church is classed as an open church; it endeavors to carry out the community idea and still retain its identity denominationally. It has a list of associate members—Christian people who do not want to be immersed, but who do definitely make a profession. They are making a community map eight feet square showing the church in the center, with every home within four miles marked with a gold, silver or blue star, indicating whether connected by membership, regular or irregular attendance, home owner or tenant, with colored strings to match running from the church to each home.

The community idea is suggested by the Home Mission Society of New York, who sent a man to look the field over and called the community together and is paying one-third of the salary of the pastor through the state convention. Besides the salary the pastor is given a parsonage and three acres of good Iowa land. The parsonage is a two-story building, heated with a hot-air furnace.

The pastor has a mailing list of nearly 100 names to which he sends mimeograph letters, "The People's Visitor," and special announcements. The Sunday evening offering is used for publicity work.

This church has a life scholarship in Des Moines University for two ministerial students at once, or one in another branch of study, and has also provided and fitted up a room in the girls' dormitory of the university.

The pastor has interested the membership in a remodeling plan, which includes a basement under the entire church. This basement will have a four-inch concrete floor and the walls will also be concrete, solid or in blocks. The church will be raised three feet from its present level. The basement room will accommodate Sunday-school classes and can be used for community gatherings. It will hold a banquet group of 150 or 200 people.

The South Beaver Church also has an interesting program, which is worked out largely by itself, although it adheres to the convention program and tries hard to follow out the instructions given them. Every part of the church and Sunday school is organized with the following in mind:

1. Every one to become a personal worker.
2. Every one working at his task.

All the organized classes meet once a month for a social evening. A community club meets the second Friday in each month and the attendance is about 200. The church is the community center.

After five months of joint work with the church at Grand Junction, the South Beaver Church called for services full time and is now so running. The pastor receives $1,500 per year and the use of ten acres of very good land; a parsonage is provided. The salary and all church expenses are met by the local church, no outside help coming from any source whatever. A movement is on foot to provide a community house.

These pastors have families. Their children are not deprived of any school opportunities. There is transportation provided to the nearby consolidated high school, the one-room school houses being retained and used for all work up to and including the eighth grade. Thus the school problem is solved. A pastor can locate in such a field and know at the same time that his children will have as good advantages as children anywhere. The good roads make it possible for these people to trade at any one of a number of good towns. The rural mail is delivered once a day, and the telephone is as serviceable here as in the city.

There are doubtless many communities in which the economic movement of people and the peculiar industrial development within the communities has compelled such a readjustment as to make it necessary to close rural churches here and there. Hundreds of thousands of people have moved west and southwest from this Mississippi Valley section. The west and southwest, are, however, becoming for the present almost saturated. This means that our own population will pile up on itself. Iowa and other nearby states must get ready to accommodate a denser population. That denomination which weathers this storm of economic change and holds on to strategic country places will add to itself elements of permanent vitality.

B. Y. P. U. European Extension

On Dec. 31, 1921, the representatives of the various local young people's organizations in the French and Belgium Baptist churches met at Lens and formed an organization similar to the B. Y. P. U. of A. called "League of Young Witnesses for Christ" (La Ligue des Jeunes Temoins du Christ). Less than a month after the organization, the general secretary, M. Jean Caudron, sent greetings to the B. Y. P. U. of A. and graciously suggested ways in which it might help the new organization in its great task. Since then other European groups have addressed themselves to our B. Y. P. U. of America, but we have been in no position to help them:, Now with the approach of the Stockholm Convention, there seems to be an auspicious time for B. Y. P. U. World Missionary Service. Will our young people rise to this occasion?

Our board of managers is asking all locals within their territory to make a contribution of about 10 cents per member, or to take a special collection which should equal that amount, and send it as soon as possible to the committee chairman, Rev. Herbert Hines, Kankakee, Ill.

Societies in five states have already answered this urgent call. Will yours be the next?

Shurtleff College

By E. P. Brand

The board meeting of the trustees of Shurtleff College was held in Alton, March 13. It was a successful all-day meeting. The college is now in fine condition. Since President Potter took hold of the work ten years ago, the student body has more than doubled, and there are more than three times as many college students as there were then. The endowment is just double what it was ten years ago and the productive endowment is about treble. The board has bought grounds adjoining the campus until we now have twenty-three acres in the heart of Upper Alton. The first of a group of six buildings for girls will be completed this May, at a cost of $60,000 and the money provided for it. There is a possibility that in June a large administration building will be commenced. The present plan of buildings, when completed, will give Shurtleff one of the finest equipments of any college in the country. It may take twenty-five years to complete the plan, but Illinois Baptists are abundantly able to give their one college one new building each year for a period of fifteen years. The centennial anniversary of Shurtleff will be within three or four years. We ought, by that time, to have an endowment of at least $1,000,000.

The little excitement over the heresy of a new professor has about died down. The professor resigned and left the school within three months of the time that any error was discovered in his theology. President Potter managed the matter wisely and tactfully. He has practically the unanimous sympathy and endorsement of the trustees, faculty, and all people who are well acquainted with the affairs of the school.

The great advance in Shurtleff has been due in a large measure in the past ten years to the industry, skill and wise management of Pres. Geo. M. Potter.

Annual Meeting Woman's A. B. F. M. Society

The fifty-second annual meeting of the Womans' American Baptist Foreign Mission Society will be held in Convention Hall in Atlantic City, N. J., May 25, 1923, at 9:45 a. m., and succeeding days, to act upon any report that shall then be presented, to elect officers and members of the board of managers, and to transact any other business that may properly come before the meeting.

By order of the board of managers,
Mrs. T. E. Adams.

CONNECTICUT

Rev. E. S. Burket, South China, who is at present studying in the Hartford Theological Seminary, is serving Connecticut churches in a most exceptional manner, and making a profound impression upon those who hear him, as he speaks out of his experience in the foreign field.

Dr. J. C. Robbins has found it possible to attend some of the missionary conferences in the New Haven Association. He has also spoken in the First Church, Ansonia; Danbury; First Church, Bridgeport, and the Stamford churches. Dr. Robbins has a real message and stirs the hearts of the people tremendously.

On March 5, the ministers' meeting of the New London and Stonington Union Associations met with the Central Church, Norwich, Dr. David A. Pitt, pastor. Rev. F. L. Anderson, Newton Theological Seminary, who preached in the Central Church on Sunday, was the speaker.

On March 11, Rev. D. G. Haring spoke forcibly in the Memorial and the Second Baptist churches of Bridgeport.

An Association Conference was held on March 13, in First Baptist Church, Bridgeport. Thirteen of the eighteen churches were represented by sixty delegates. This was an unusually fine attendance, notwithstanding the impassable roads and the very inclement weather. Dr. J. Y. Aitchison, general director, and Mrs. J. M. Baker, of Ongole, were speakers. Seldom, if ever, has a Connecticut audience listened to two such searching addresses. The gathering closed in a profoundly prayerful atmosphere. Pastor and Mrs. Decker are admirable hosts and are deeply interested in our great program. Luncheon was served at 12:30, after which the conference was held.

Rev. J. W. Higgins, pastor of the Packerville Church, was eighty years old, March 17. He is the oldest acting Baptist minister in the state of Connecticut. He has been with the Packerville Church fifteen years. There are six adult members in the church. The pastor is aflame with zeal for the New World Movement and is leading his church in the fullest cooperation. The church has increased its contributions to benevolences over 300 per cent and has increased the pastor's salary 50 per cent. Several young people united with the church a year ago, and this "ardent servant of the Lord" is now planning another evangelistic campaign this spring. Many join in the prayer that it may be given him to see the desire of his heart and that last days of his ministry may be his greatest days.

The Stamford Baptist Church has had a successful campaign for the increasing of their finances, led by Dr. F. H. Devine of New York. While the campaign closed on March 4, pledges are still coming in. The amount has now passed the $38,000 mark. Extensive repairs are to be made on the church.

CONSIDERABLE INTEREST is being manifested in men's Bible classes in some of our churches. The attendance at the men's Bible class, March 4, in the Central Church, Norwich, was 123. The Central Church is leading the First Church, New London, by 14 points, in the contest on attendance. The attendance of the Everyman's Bible Class in the First Baptist Church, Bridgeport, on the same date, was 153. Bridgeport, undoubtedly, has the banner class of men in the state, as far as Baptist churches are concerned.

THE CITY OF BRIDGEPORT is witnessing a unique spectacle. A united evangelistic campaign is being conducted, under the auspices of the Ministers' Union. The meetings are being held in the First Methodist Episcopal Church, Dr. H. L. Goodell as evangelist. There is a growing interest in the meetings. Your scribe attended a workers' supper recently, after which Doctor Goodell addressed the workers. After his address, a pastor asked Doctor Goodell how he got his crowds. Doctor Goodell replied: "A crowd will attend a fire inside the church, as well as a crowd will attend a fire outside the church" and drew the workers' attention to the difference between an audience and a congregation—a show will get an audience, "the heralds of passion" will get a congregation.

MASSACHUSETTS

DEACON COWER A. BELKNAP died in Framingham Center, Mass., March 12. For over fifty-eight years he had been an active member of the First Church and had served for long periods as clerk, Sunday-school superintendent and deacon. Mr. Belknap was also president of the Framingham Historical and Natural History Society. He is survived by his wife and two children. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Franklin Hutchinson who had been his pastor for more than forty years.

DR. WOODMAN BRADBURY, professor of homiletics at Newton, cuts a wide swath inside the seminary, and out among the churches and schools. Recently he spent three days at Colby College, during which he made seven addresses. The principal address was the Phi Beta Kappa on "Why Read Poetry?" He has lately preached two Sundays at Wheaton College.

REV. BERNARD C. CLAUSEN, of Syracuse, N. Y., was the preacher at Wellesley College on March 11. Colleges covet preachers with personality and a message.

PROFESSOR THEODORE G. SOARES, of Chicago University, the specialist on religious education, is here for a series of lectures on his subject at the Unity House, Boston. He is a favorite preacher at Harvard, and his coming also gave the Ministers' Conference an opportunity to sit at his feet March 26.

SOMETIMES THE COMPETITIVE Sunday announcements startle us more than was intended. Here is a recent one: "A Trip to Hell and Back—Bring Your Friends."

THE MARCH SOCIAL UNION night was given to negro speakers and guests, and to their "vespers" mixed quartet. The chief speaker was James Weldon Johnson of New York on the "Imaginative Genius of the Negro." He proved himself abundantly competent as one of their leaders, and made it a matter of surprise to us that the genius of his race had been so wide and so versatile in its contributions. The quartet also took us captive. Smoother artistry in the rendering of songs familiar and unfamiliar, we have not had.

DR. JOHN Y. AITCHISON, general director of our Board of Promotion, gave a masterly address before the Ministers' Conference on the nineteenth, and gave a long quiz. Of course he was handling the whole of our World Movement, and meeting and anticipating views of the attempted achievement up to date. Dr. Aitchison is so frank, fair, hospitable to every possible question or objection, and so fully armed with conclusive answers, that there are no ragged edges when he gets through. The outstanding impression was that the best that could be said, was said in the best manner and spirit, and that there was every reason for confidence, and for getting "On the March."

TRINITY CHURCH, ARLINGTON, Rev. Jas. E. Norcross pastor, will give a formal yet happy social welcome to the minister and family on April 4. The minister is considering well the whole field and its possibilities, and thoroughly planning for results. Peculiarly is that field a land of promise, and well worthy of the strength of a strong leader.

RHODE ISLAND

REV. RAYMOND W. COOPER, pastor of the church at Millinocket, Me., recently closed a two weeks' meeting with the Pawtuxet Church. Forty persons were baptized and pledges were secured amounting to $19,000. Of this amount $10,000 will be used for a new parsonage.

NEW YORK

REV. C. H. RUST OF SCRANTON, PA., closed a series of ten-day special services with the Washington Heights Church, New York City, of which Rev. Harold Pattison is pastor. A three-hour service was held on Good Friday. Rev. Anson P. Atterbury, New York Federation of Churches; Rev. Burton Scott Easton, General Theological Seminary; Rev. D. J. G. Smith, Mt. Morris Church; Rev. Christian F. Reisner, Chelsea Methodist Church; Prof. E. F. Scott, Union Theological Seminary and Rev. Anthony Evans, West Park Presbyterian Church, were the speakers.

A NEW BAPTIST CHURCH is being put on the map of Rochester which will be known as Immanuel. A few years ago when the Park Avenue Church united with the Second Church to form the East Avenue Church, it was agreed that the old Second Church building should be sold and a new location secured on East Avenue. After the war, however, it seemed unwise to move to the new location, and it was voted that the church, the Baptist Temple, should remain in its present location and assist in the formation of a new church in the southeast section of the city, dividing its invested funds with the new enterprise. Recently the Baptist Temple dismissed over seventy of its members and these, with about twenty from other churches, have formed the new Immanuel Church. In cooperation with the Baptist Union, an excellent site has been selected and it is expected that a building will be erected in the near future. This new church will in no way affect the plans of the Baptist Temple, which, under the leadership of Rev. Clinton Wunder, is forging ahead and has plans under consideration for the erection of a business cathedral in the heart of Rochester.

THE CHURCH AT HAMBURG dedicated its remodeled building Sunday, March 11. Rev. E. H. Dutton preached the dedicatory sermon in the morning. In the evening Rev. G. A. Briggs and Rev. John Muntz delivered addresses. This church was organized in 1811 and is the second oldest church in the Buffalo Association. The pastor, Rev. James G. Hill, has presented his resignation, but no action as yet has been taken.

THE ANNUAL COLGATE training conference for daily vacation Bible school workers will be held in the theological seminary at Hamilton, April 30-May 4. Rev. W. G. Towart will be in charge. Music will be taught by Miss Marguerite Hazzard of New York and Mrs. F. W. Tomlinson will teach story telling. Pastors whose churches are within 150 miles of Hamilton and who contemplate a vacation Bible school this summer will be provided with traveling expenses in order that they may attend this conference in company with at least one of their local helpers. Pastors and superintendents who are interested should communicate with Rev. Chas. W. Briggs, 414 McCarty Bldg., Syracuse, N. Y.

NEW JERSEY

MR. HARRY S. MYERS of the General Board of Promotion occupied the pulpit of the Mt. Pleasant Church, Newark, Sunday, March 18. The pastor, Rev. Sidney W. Powell, is conducting a men's forum at the Y. M. C. A.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

THE PICTURE ROCKS CHURCH has had a successful campaign under the leadership of Evangelist E. G. Crabill. Fifteen have been baptized thus far and there are a number to follow.

BUCKNELL UNIVERSITY has called Mr. Stanley P. Davies to its chair of sociology. He is a graduate of the Conshohocken high school and Bucknell University, and has had post-graduate work at the University of Pennsylvania and Columbia University. During the world war he was engaged in social work with the United States Army and is now executive secretary of the committee on mental hygiene of the state charities aid association of New York City. Mr. Davies is a son of Rev. and Mrs. Abner J. Davies of Conshohocken.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

DUBOIS: FIVE NEW MEMBERS were recently received. In February more than $4,000 was raised to purchase a lot for a parsonage, work upon which will begin April 1. In June the church will entertain the Clearfield Association. Rev. H. J. Baker is pastor.

Clarion Association

THIS ASSOCIATION IS WELL MANNED. Smalley, at Clarion, is building slowly but surely; Van Gorder, at Brookville, is having conversions and teaching a Union Bible Class; Jones at New Bethlehem is through the first spurt, and is making his life count through earnest pastoral work, good preaching and sound Bible teaching; McKinley at Oakland and Deanville, is having a happy time with continuous conversions; Freeman, from the Sunny South, is doing fine work at East Brady and Kylor; MacPhail is kept busy caring for Montgomeryville, Salem and Pine Creek; Beanland at Old Union has been made happy by his people through the presentation of an automobile; Cunningham, the last arrival, has already won the hearts of the people at Limestone; F. N. Thomas is doing substantial work at Richardsville, while the writer is trying to "feed the church of God" at Kittanning. One church is vacant but expects to call a pastor soon. The reports to the association were very encouraging—a large number of baptisms, one church (Kittanning) reporting 131, various improvements in the church property, the Kittanning church just completing a new parsonage and Sunday-school rooms connected with the church at a cost of $20,000, over $17,000 of which has already been subscribed, the church is also building a chapel on the outskirts of the town to cost about $3,000. It is being used for Sunday school and regular preaching services and prayer meeting. The reports also indicate an increase in beneficence, the brethren have sweet fellowship and communion together, and harmony in the work of the Lord. Rev. Mark R. Smith, a successful evangelist, belongs to the Kittannning church and works largely in the vicinity, a large tent being a great help in the work.

A council held at Kittanning recommended the ordination of John F. Moore, a missionary of the A. S. S. U. David Beanland was moderator; Rev. Ira Freeman, clerk; Harvey Jones preached the sermon. Other parts—Cunningham, Freeman, Thomas, MacPhail. Drs. Maxwell and Boddis conducted a fundamentals conference on the day preceding the ordination.

WEST VIRGINIA

Evangelist Paul Montgomery and his wife recently closed a two weeks' meeting with the Weirton Church. Twenty-four new members were added to the membership and the church has experienced a revival of enthusiasm.

The New York District Woman's American Baptist Home and Foreign Missionary Societies will hold their annual meeting at the Tabernacle Church, Utica, May 8-10. An excellent program is being arranged which includes the following speakers: Miss Vickland of Assam, Dr. Joseph Taylor of China, Miss Howard of Porto Rico and Dr. Eleanor Campbell of Judson Health Center.

Mississippi Valley

MICHIGAN

Chesaming: Rev. Geo. W. Broome, under the direction of the state convention, last June reopened the church which had been closed for seven years. A Sunday school with sixty scholars has been organized and the church now has twenty-six members.

Rev. F. L. Cilley, Quincy, has accepted the call to the church at Brown City. While the church was pastorless repairs to the extent of $100 were made on the parsonage. Mr. Cilley also preaches at the Goodland Church Sunday afternoons Evangelist H. P. Hoskins closed a three weeks' campaign with the church at Mt. Morris. There were forty-seven additions to the church membership. Rev. H. C. Trabert is pastor.

Rev. H. V. Gould, formerly pastor of the church at Aurelius, has accepted the call of the church at Elsie.

North Branch: Rev. A. R. Ferguson recently held a series of special meetings which resulted in fifty-two people accepting Christ. Two days of prayer were held. Ten people made full surrender of their lives at these all-day meetings. A great three-year gospel program has been mapped out.

Rev. W. T. Roberts has accepted the unanimous call of the Alma Church. Mr. Roberts for more than seven years was on the staff of the state convention, and served as district superintendent for four years, and three years as director of city extension.

The Fountain Street Church, Grand Rapids, has published a series of five sermons by the pastor, Alfred W. Wishart, on the general theme of evolution and religion dealing with liberal and orthodox views of science, religion and the Bible. The subjects are "Science and Religion," "Evolution and the Bible," "Man in the Light of Evolution," "Jesus and Evolution" and "Evolution and the Ideals of Jesus." A new church house, to cost about $700,000 (not including an organ of $50,000 which is the gift of three men) and with a seating capacity of 1,700, is about one-half completed. It is expected the new edifice will be dedicated some time in November and architectually will be one of the finest churches in the country.

OHIO

Akron: The Arlington Street Church closed a successful series of revival meetings. Rev. R. J. Pirkey, pastor of the Broadway Church, Louisville, Kentucky, assisted the pastor, Rev. C. E. Hamric, with the result that there were fifty additions to the church membership.

Dayton Association

Central: Extensive Repairs amounting to about $12,000 will be made on the church building. Rev. F. W. Staley is pastor.

Colorado Avenue: Rev. J. S. Hill, acting pastor, has organized a young people's society. There have been eleven additions to the church membership.

Summit Street: Rev. O. E. Hall, assisted by Evangelist Muir, closed a meeting in which twenty-two were baptized.

Third Street: Because of the growth of the work, it has been necessary to purchase a site suitable for the enlarging needs of the church. Mr. MacDaniel of Martin's Ferry assisted the pastor, Rev. W. R. Sloman, in special meetings.

Springfield, First: Rev. Howard Johnson is acting pastor since the death of Rev. R. B. Smith.—Philip Bauer.

ILLINOIS

Dr Frank M. Goodchild, pastor of the Central Church, New York City, gave a course of addresses at the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, for the instruction of the students in Baptist church polity.

Rev. F. E. Pelton, pastor of the First Church, Aledo, has accepted a unanimous call to the First Church, Buda.

The Cairo Church had a helpful meeting recently in which Pastor Pearce was assisted by Dr. McMinn, pastor of the Carbondale church. Ten persons were baptized. Mr. Pearce is to conduct a party to Europe which will sail June 30. He will be glad to give further information to anyone communicating with him.

The Woman's Mission Union of the Chicago Asssociation held its regular meeting, March 13, at the Lorimer Memorial Church. There were 500 present. The morning session was devoted to reports of last year's work, which showed an increasing interest in all branches of missionary endeavor. The following officers were elected for the year 1923-24: Pres., Mrs. F. S. Osgood; first vice-pres., Mrs. George W. Taft; second vice-pres., Mrs. W. H. Cossum (reelected); Rec. Secy. and Treas., Mrs. Charles H. Parkes (reelected); Corr. Sec., Mrs. S. Schiele.

The First Church of Hoopeston celebrated its fiftieth anniversary March 6, Mrs. Marie Naylor, the daughter of the pastor who organized the church in 1853, gave a resume. Pres. G. W. Taft of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary and Dr. Howard R. Chapman, pastor of the student body of the University of Michigan, were the principal speakers. Special tribute was paid to D. H. Chapman who has been a deacon in the church for fifty years. This church has a wonderful opportunity for service. The present pastor, Rev. Lester Boyd, has been on the field about a year.

IOWA

[Rev. J. Orrin Gould of Des Moines, has agreed to act as Iowa correspondent to The Baptist. He would appreciate news from any church or pastor in the state. Iowa has been slow to avail itself of the news service of the paper but reasonable space is yours for use. Address Mr. Gould at Des Moines, or send news direct.—Editor.]

A complete tabulation of the religious census of Des Moines University has recently been compiled for the winter quarter by Chaplain Gould, pastor of University Church. Twenty-one religious denominations are represented by the students enrolled. The high religious qualifications of the students as a whole are indicated by the following general summary: 80.6 per cent are members of churches; 14.6 per cent give a church preference; while 4.8 per cent indicate that they have no particular church preference. The survey also shows that the larger part of the students live on the campus or within a radius of about four blocks.

The Young People's Depaktment of the University church gave a "Boston Tea Party" Sunday, March 11. A large number of young people from the Baptist churches of the city were present. A social of one hour, devotional meeting, and lecture on the slides of the "Wonder Tour" comprised the program of the evening. Ballots were prepared and the officers for the next six months elected.

The Ministerial Association of Des Moines is conducting meetings in the various churches of the city, special topics being discussed relative to the personal evangelism campaign being held during March. Passion week will also be observed, there being a meeting every night of the week, with a union communion service on Friday evening, March 30.

Dr. Howland Hanson, professor of Biblical literature in D. M. U., supplied the pulpit of the First Church of Iowa City Sunday, March 11. This church is looking for a pastor. Students in attendance at Iowa University make this a very important field for some energetic pastor.

Rev. Victor N. Witter, director of religious education for the Iowa Convention began his work May 1 last year. He has completely reorganized the work of his department, and has projected a program that is building anew the Sunday schools and Young People's unions of the state. At the present time he is conducting Sunday-school and young people's institutes in the various associations throughout Iowa. He is receiving hearty cooperation throughout the state, and is leading in a constructive religious educational program that will help to prepare the religious leaders for the churches in years to come. Mr. Witter lives in Des Moines, and with his family, has his membership in the University Church.

J. SHADE FRANKLIN, a senior at Des Moines University, has accepted a call to the church at Protection, Mo.

NORTH DAKOTA

THE MISSIONARY CONFERENCE which was held at Grand Forks recently faced the most critical financial task that has existed in the forty years of the state's history. No less than $22,000 is necessary to complete the state's allotment by May 1. In spite of the greatness of the task, every church represented at the conference cheerfully accepted its share of the allotment. Following the discussion of the financial situation it was voted to have an oil portrait made of Elijah Terry, the first Baptist missionary in Dakota territory. The portrait is to be presented to the Williams Memorial Church, Washington, D. C. The fund for the painting is to be raised by popular subscription after the close of the missionary campaign.

THE IMMANUEL CHURCH, FARGO, is celebrating its fortieth anniversary. Rev. F. E. Stockton delivered an address on Friday, March 30, and on Saturday Rev. W. S. Holmberg, pastor of the Swedish Baptist Church, was the speaker. On April 1 there will be a mother's and daughter's service. The First Church and the Swedish Church will be guests and Rev. R. W. Hobbs, pastor of the First Church, will preach. Rev. C. W. Finwall is pastor of the entertaining church.

COLORADO

THE CALENDAR OF THE FIRST CHURCH, Eaton, announces that Mr. W. O. Thompson, who had previously contributed $1,100 to the church building fund, has made a gift of $2,800 for religious education. The principal is to be used in building enterprises and the church has the use of it for the next five years. The interest will be used to educate men for the ministry. The fund is in the hands of the state convention. Rev. N. J. Peterson is pastor.

REV. WILLIAM JACKSON, formerly of Greybull, Wyo., has accepted the call to the First Church, Salida, Colorado.

NEVADA

FIRST CHURCH, FALLON: Rev. J. D. Chappelle, Alturas, Calif., concluded a series of revival meetings which resulted in thirty-three additions to the church membership by baptism and forty on profession of faith. While the meetings were in progress a number of street services were held. Rev. F. A. Landers is pastor.

Pacific Coast

WASHINGTON

FIRST CHURCH, TACOMA: Pastor C. Oscar Johnson has held a successful series of meetings which have resulted in 100 additions to the church membership. For the past two years the church has been holding services in the Tacoma theater. April 4-15, Rev. F. H. Divine will conduct a campaign for $250,000 to erect a modern down-town church building. Last year the contributions for all purposes totaled $29,000. The state convention will meet with the church, May 9-11.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

OAKLAND, FIRST: Rev. Arthur V. Willey assisted Pastor John Snape in a series of special meetings.

A Tribute to Mrs. W. S. Upham

BY MRS. W. M. GRAY

Upon the last day of February, while visiting her daughter—Mrs. Charles David Eldridge—at San Diego, California, Mrs. Willard Stowe Upham, of Coffeyville, Kansas, passed from the activities of this life.

Endowed by nature and circumstances with qualities and gifts which would have secured for her a superior post in any walk of life, yet she chose the path that her Master trod and found her delight in the service of his house and the cultivation of his vineyard where she let her light shine with a steadfast brilliance which was as rare as it was illuminating.

The Coffeyville Baptist Church, of which she and her husband (deceased) were charter members, was in a peculiar sense the object of her first and most solicitous care, and upon this organization she lavishly bestowed time, thought, energy and substance with a never-wavering devotion. For years she was the teacher and inspiration of the Young Men's Bible class, members of which acted as pall-bearers at her funeral. As organizer, and president of the mission circle from its very beginning until the day of her death, she made her influence felt to the ends of the earth.

The pipe-organ in the church was presented by her in memory of her daughter Vera, who departed this life July 3, 1909. Upon Christmas morning, 1921, she gave to the church a deed to the house and land adjoining the church edifice on the east, to be used for the children in the ever-enlarging Bible school. To Christian education and the cause of missions, her gifts were likewise unremitting and generous—cheerfully bestowed.

In the home she was ideal. The marked devotion of her three surviving children — William, Margaret, and George—has always attested to the crowning glory of her motherhood.

Hospitable to all, especially to those of the "household of faith," her inviting home was hailed by Baptists from everywhere as a veritable "haven of rest."

We shall miss her letters of cheer and offices of love, but in the words of Spurgeon, we can say: "We do believe that she, at this moment, is joining in the hallelujahs of paradise, feasting on the fruits of the tree of life, and walking by the side of the river 'the streams whereof make glad the city of our God,' and on her account, we, therefore, have cause to rejoice rather than to weep."

Upon others may her mantle fall!

It Pays to Advertise in the Philippines

BY G. B. CAMERON, SECRETARY OF THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY, PHILIPPINE AGENCY

The Filipino young people are at the "catalog stage." They scan the papers eagerly, especially the weeklies carrying United States advertisements, looking for ads that offer catalogs or samples free. This is not done with a view to purchase, as many of these students have barely enough to live upon, but for the joy of receiving mail, particularly from a foreign country.

We have taken advantage of this eagerness for mail on the part of the young Filipinos and for the past year have been advertising in the Manila periodicals. True, we have not made large sales, but the results have warranted the expenditure, for thousands of students and other English-speaking Filipinos have written for catalogs; and with each catalog has gone printed matter on the Bible, telling what it is and what men say about it. For, strange as it may seem, in this country which was governed for so many years by the Roman church, the Bible is almost an unknown book. To be sure, certain Old Testament stories were taught here and there in purely Spanish centers, but these were known by the titles of the stories, as "Joseph," "Joshua," and so on. They were considered sacred stories, but not as part of the whole Bible.

Not only have the young people living in the islands written us from north, south, east and west, but from other countries also inquiries have come. One young Filipino living in Indo-China received our catalog and sent his peso for which we sent him a Bible in his native dialect. We have received letters from Hawaii and also from the United States. Not long ago there came a request for a catalog from Chicago. We sent it with the usual printed matter of educational and spiritual value. By return mail we received an order accompanied by the money and postage fees for Bibles in three Philippine dialects and in Spanish and English. We shipped the former and asked our Chicago agency to send the two latter. We have just had a letter acknowledging receipt of the five Bibles and thanking us for "those valued books."

Does it pay to advertise? It does in the Philippine Islands. It is not possible to estimate the spiritual results of sending these catalogs in response to inquiries. The good we can do is limited only by the amount we are able to invest in this phase of our work.

Change Your Rhythm

By F. L. Garside

YOU can't succeed in your business whether it be as president of a bank, or the porter who opens the door, unless you are well; so success goes back to happiness, and that depends on rhythm.

This is the latest key to health, according to those who make the good health of the people their business. If you start the day on the wrong rhythm (a bad mood) you are more tired at night, your health is not so good, and you have made more than the usual number of mistakes. If you doubt this, consider the case of Simon Jones.

Simon Jones had a bad dream, and he woke up depressed and irritable. He spoke sharply to his wife, and Mrs. Simon Jones, exercising her rights, spoke as sharply in reply. When Simon Jones left the house it was in a mood that would have resulted in terrorizing the office boy, humiliating his stenographer, and estranging business associates and friends if he had not changed his rhythm.

Now Simon Jones knew the history of other disastrous days when resentment persisted. So he changed his rhythm by sending his wife a box of sweets with his apology, and reached the office in the mood of a man who wants to be friends with everybody on earth. You know how it is yourself. The day proved a profitable one for Simon Jones.

"Tell me what rhythm a person lives by and I will tell you what he is," said Miss Era Betzner, who is engaged through the National Board of the Young Womens Christian Associations in spreading this gospel of good health. "If we ran our automobiles as we run ourselves we would divide our time between a hospital and the police court. In running a car, we change gears, obey city ordinances and control the speed as a matter of course. In running ourselves we fail to recognize the necessity of changing gears at all. To get the most out of life we must not run at wild speed all the time; we must watch our speed variation. Those who never change or relax suffer in consequence."

Miss Betzner would have a tired world slacken its pace by making a trial balance-sheet of every day, and then balance it with a deliberate change of mood. Thinking along one line too much has fatal results. The melancholy find will and mind growing weaker; the resentful accumulate cause for resentment; those engaged in hatreds brew more reasons for hating. Take a walk; find something to laugh over; hunt up someone who needs cheering. If a man, dig in the garden; if a woman, get out the washboard or broom. Do something to make you forget yourself, and in this way you will get into a better rhythm.

In New York City alone 26,855 girls yearly find a change of rhythm in the recreations and educational and club activities of the Young Women's Christian Association. Every city where there is an association has a showing proportionately as large. The girls may not know it, but they are growing healthier and happier and becoming more sure of success chiefly because entering an association door changes the course of their thought.

Why It Hurts

By Charles L. White

YES, my son is well established in life, and your words about child training recall what he once said to me. He was then a little fellow and I knew that he had disobeyed, for I had seen him playing in the street. He had gone beyond bounds and I had called him in to ask where he had been.

He looked down and was silent. I said, "Look me right in the eye, Harry," but he still kept his eyes on the carpet, and then I said, "Harry, why don't you look me right in the eye?" "Because it hurts, mamma," he cried.

Little Harry spoke for a large number of persons who are not children now and who have not yet reached their second childhood. They have gone beyond the bounds of the way of life and when they look their Lord straight in the eye it hurts.

They have entered into social relations and business plans, and have turned aside so far into the fields which skirt the path of duty that they have quite forgotten where the straight way is. They have followed the birds and the wild flowers; they have not noticed the path; they have simply drifted along.

They could retrace their steps, for they see the hillside where the path of duty stretches its rugged way; but they still wander on farther and farther from what they know is right, and the purple hills are beginning to dip toward the horizon.

They cannot look upon the face of the poor or behold the squalor of the tenements. It hurts. They do not care to study facts that stir the heart to pity and to action, for it hurts. They will not interest themselves in the needs of backward races or listen to the discordant notes of human harps that once gave rich harmonies, for it hurts. They care little for any who live beyond the pleasure gardens where they listen to the music of the fountains, or for such as dwell beyond their own shrinking horizons. For to know is to feel, and to feel is to do, and the contemplation of such duties hurts. To give to another's need hurts. To part with a benefit in order that a fellowman may part with the bruise in life hurts.

A GIFT

With a Guaranteed Return Income

Are you interested in receiving a guaranteed income at a rate ranging from 4 to 9 per cent, if you are single; and from 4 to 8.3 per cent on an agreement covering two lives?

Are you interested in making a gift to a great cause known as foreign missions, but detained from doing so because you are in need of the use of the principal during your life?

The Annuity Plan of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society solves both problems in one transaction. An Annuity Agreement represents a gift in return for which a fixed income is paid semi-annually during the life of the annuitant. After death the net principal is used for the work of the Society.

This form of gift constitutes a financial investment in a spiritual enterprise to which our Lord gave His life, and enables the donor to furnish substantial support to the work of the Society and at the same time, in view of financial needs, receive an income on the investment as long as the donor lives.

For information write to Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City. All communications will be treated sacredly confidential.

Our Book Shelf

"The Sunday School at Work in Town and Country," by William Mouzon Brabham. New York: Geo. H. Doran Co. $1.50 net.

Out of his wide experience as superintendent of Sunday-school administration of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, the author writes a practical guide book for pastors and superintendents of his field. Twenty chapters based on a thorough, progressive, religious educational method and psychology, deal briefly with every phase of Sunday-school work, and include a suggestive bibliography for further reading. A sane, well-balanced judgment is expressed on every page, and the last chapters sound clearly a note of educational evangelism, that should be more largely recognized North as well as South. A chapter also on "The Building" presents suggestive plans and drawings for remodeling inadequate equipment; and the appendix outlines a standard of efficiency as authorized by the Methodist Episcopal church, south, for Sunday schools of the one-room type.

The Meaning of the Old Testament, by Hugh Martin, literary and assistant secretary Student Christian movement of Great Britain and Ireland. New York: George H. Doran. $1.60.

This is one of many books on this subject reviewed in these columns within five years. We accord to this author the credit of good and successful sailing between the Scylla of destructive criticism on the one hand, and the Charybdis of devotion to literalistic interpretation on the other, and not losing one step in scholarship by deviation or shying. It is a lucid, fearless, reverent discussion of the Old Testament that wins for the Book a clearer understanding of its meaning and a deeper confidence in its mission.

The Seven Deadly Sins, by Norman Mac Leod Cate. New York: Doran Company. $1.

The seven deadly sins discussed are pride, envy, anger, sloth, avarice, gluttony and sensuality. About 15,000 words cover the contents. Medieval ages devoted more time and interest to these burning acids of sin than we do. Not often do they appear as sermon themes. Poets do not notice them as Dante did. Those who read the "Night Scenes of the Scriptures" by the same author need no introduction to the crisp incisiveness and literary finish which characterize the writings of this well-known writer. In the discussion of these "deadly sins" those features characterize his style even more manifest than in his former volume. The moral and religious lessons inculcated add to its readableness and interest.

Our Ambiguous Life, by John A. Hutton, D.D. Boston: Pilgrim Press. $2.25.

This recent volume of Dr. Hutton, who has been a frequent visitor to America, and who has preached in several of our leading cities, will be gladly welcomed by the readers of his other books. Dr. Hutton is regarded as "one of the first dozen preachers of Britain. He has the vision of a poet, the skill of an orator, and the message of a prophet." That Dr. Hutton knows the fine art of preaching is evident to any one who will take time even casually to examine this volume. He takes well-known themes and texts and makes them glow under his treatment of them. To him the Christian life is a great adventure, and he puts new and illuminating meanings into the messages, whether they be from the stories of the Old Testament, or the great sayings of Jesus.

Bible Types of Modern Women, by W. Mackintosh Mackay. New York: Doran Co. $1.50.

This is a second volume of talks on Bible women, and their modern representatives, by this author. The former volume has gone through several editions. In sixteen sermons, in which all the characters are from the Old Testament except three, the author deals with modern types of women. This is one of those volumes of sermons from which the minister will receive much help in his sermon preparation, for it is filled with many suggestive illustrations, as well as splendid subject matter, dealing with the modern woman, who seems to be so much in evidence in these days. It is interesting to note that the author dedicates his book to his American readers "who have so often encouraged him by their sympathy and support."

The Lord of Thought, by Lily Dougall and Cyril W. Emmet. New York: Doran. $2.50.

This is an interesting study of the problems which confronted Jesus in his ministry and the solution he offered. The authors themselves describe it as "an apologetic on new lines for the uniqueness of Christianity and the supremacy of Jesus." Because of his recorded impact upon the human race Jesus is not only original but dominant in the realm of thought, is the chief contention of the authors. Their interpretation of his life, which forms the basis of the work, is set forth from the following point of view: "It is now widely held," they declare, "that the whole thought of Jesus was governed by the belief that the end of the world was very near. Our aim is to show that Jesus did not expect a speedy and supernatural destruction of the world, but that he did expect the termination of an order of society based on oppression." This view gives a conception of his dominance in the sphere of thought that is commensurate with the historical results of his impact upon the world of men. Part one deals with the world into which Jesus came. Part two is entitled "The Genius of Jesus" and part three develops a critical verification of his teachings.

A story of a Tudor judge is told of Sir Nicholas Bacon, who in the time of Elizabeth was importuned by a criminal to spare his life on account of kinship. "How so?" demanded the judge. "Because my name is Hog and yours is Bacon, and hog and bacon are so near akin that they cannot be separated." "Aye," responded the judge, dryly, "but you and I cannot yet be kindred, for the hog is not bacon until it be well hanged."

A Fine New Choral Work.

Attention of choir leaders is called to a new work by the Welsh composer, Cyril Jenkins, an ambitious and effective setting of the beloved hymn-poem, "Lead, Kindly Light." The music, while modern in feeling, and varied and dramatic, is very singable, not of a prohibitive grade of difficulty, strongly vocal, and truly devotional in its treatment. The services of a baritone soloist are called for. He has a splendid opportunity for display of good singing and for genuine interpretation. Orchestral parts are available if desired, though the accompaniment is so set for the organ (or piano) that it is rich and adequate as it stands.

MUSIC REVIEWS

From J. Fischer & Bro., New York, N. Y.

Early Spanish-Californian Folk-Songs, harmonized and set for piano by Gertrude Ross.

Some months ago we reviewed approvingly a set of Creole songs by Lily Strickland, called "Bayou Ballads," and at that time expressed the sentiment that it was significant that the native composer was paying more definite attention to the rich lore of folk-song and distinctive native material which is so varied and so characteristic—the varied types of nationalistic tunes to be found in this great nation, a composite of the whole world. We pointed to the valuable work done by Burleigh and Dett in the field of the Negroid "spirituals," the idealizations of the Indian themes by MacDowell, Troyer, Cadman, Lieurance; the strange survivals of old English folk-tunes and dance lilts reclaimed from the hills of Kentucky by Loomis and Wyman, the revisions of French chansons from the Louisiana hinterland by Ferrata, and other successful delvings into this broad field. Now we have to treat of another significant contribution to our national bill-of-fare: a volume of fascinating folksongs of old Spanish California, harmonized and set for piano and voice by the Los Angeles composer, Gertrude Ross. Not in a long time has there appeared such an interesting, pleasing group of tunes. The moods are many and varied; the melodies are the kind which linger long in the memory, singable and rich in the subtle flirts and changes that make for interest and attention. Mrs. Ross has shown good taste in not overloading the accompaniments with too many notes; the musical craftsmanship is expert, and the vocal lay-out gives evidence of a keen appreciation for vocal effectiveness. Mrs. Lester and I proved the value of the songs as program numbers—the "Old Maid's Song" has been the hit of several programs lately.

From Harold Flammer, Inc., New York, N. Y.

Reflection. . . .....Friml-Vail
Wistful. . . .....Friml-Vail

Here are two toothsome tidbits for the organist who wants to please his audience—and not have to work very hard to do so. Rudolf Friml has written two characteristic melodies, graceful and sweet, and Mr. Vail has placed them for the organ with evident authority and skill. Registration is expertly marked—the music will sound well on a large or a small organ; which point makes the music of that much more value to most of us. The pieces are suitable either for prelude or offertory use in the church services, or for relief purposes in the recital program.

Thus fear hath torment, but love is the fulfilling of the law; and the love that casteth out fear is the kind of love that some one must have if he is to lift the burdens, heal the hurts of souls and make his neighbor's desert into a garden. The soil of the life near to him may be covered now with the sage bush, but it needs only the cool, constant stream of his helpfulness to cover itself with verdure and to produce a continual harvest. The sight of another's need that is not met, at first hurts, then injures, then destroys one's spiritual perceptions. Such a man grows more timid, more narrow, more selfish, more hesitant. He becomes more and more nearsighted, until at last he is blind. Fortunate is that blind man if he is not made to grind at the mill like Samson.

Harry has grown to be a strong man, bearing heavy burdens, and we are glad to say mostly burdens other than his own. To look into his mother's eyes hurt him frequently until he early learned the victory over his boyish wilfulness and accepted her ideal of conduct. It hurts him no longer to look into her eyes, for love and inspiration and approval are there.

Central America

and slum districts in our large American cities.

We must not lose sight of the fact that the Latin American is temperamental, emotional, passionate, quick-tempered and spectacular, and that to him a thing may seem perfectly right and proper which appears to us utterly wrong and indefensible, and vice versa. In seeking to reach the Latin American we must bear in mind that we are not going to alter the Latin American temperament or the Latin American point of view all at once. We must take things as they are, and adjust ourselves to make the best of them. For their own benefit as well as ours, our heads and hands and hearts must cooperate with them in making sanitary their towns and cities, and removing certain prejudices and customs which are not in accord with the ideas of the rest of the world. Cooperation is the spirit that is most needed in Central America today — cooperation in keeping them in touch with the outside world, and broadening their ideas, and helping them overcome racial and religious prejudice. In the country districts especially, many of the people live in the past and think as did their forefathers three centuries ago. They have not yet learned that the days of Roman Catholic persecution are over; and too many of them, under the leadership of the priests, look upon a Protestant as beyond the pale of law or consideration, and every foreigner as an object of suspicion and distrust. Superstition, fanaticism, and racial antipathy are still pronounced elements of Roman Catholic teaching. But, thank God—

"The morning Light is breaking
The darkness disappears."

The Latin American may lack initiative, and be content with the ways of his ancestors, but once started in the right way, he goes into it as fervently and enthusiastically.

More schools, more men, and more MAN, and more churches are the greatest need of Central America today. "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward."

Thirty Days in April

AS a fact in the calendar this has little significance; as a time limit in our denominational work it is of the utmost importance; it means THERE ARE ONLY THIRTY DAYS before the close of the fiscal year.

The amount which Northern Baptists promised to pay which is due this year is $13,449,816. On March 1st the treasurer reported that $4,197,363.32 had been received.

When each Baptist conscientiously answers the question, "What shall I render unto the Lord in return for all His benefits toward me?" these pledges will be paid.

Three Suggestions

1. Pay promptly your pledge to the New World Movement. "When thou vowest a vow unto the Lord, defer not to pay it; pay that which thou hast vowed."

2. Make an extra gift over and above your pledge. The world needs men and women who will go a second mile in giving as well as in service.

3. See that all remittances are mailed not later than April 30th.

We must not permit our missionary organizations to reduce their work again next year.

Send checks to your State Collecting office, or to the Treasurers of the participating organizations, or to the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

If you are the man

WHO believes that all unbelieving men and women in the world are not lost and do not need a Saviour.

WHO believes that the gospel is not the power of God unto salvation, and that Christ cannot save the heathen.

WHO believes that "go ye into all the world and make disciples of all nations" is not necessary today.

If you are the woman

WHO believes that all unbelieving men and women in the world are not lost and do not need a Saviour.

WHO believes that the gospel is not the power of God unto salvation, and that Christ cannot save the heathen.

WHO believes that "go ye into all the world and make disciples of all nations" is not necessary today.

WHO believes that she is not accountable to God for the money entrusted to her.

WHO believes it is "every woman for herself" in this world and who disregards the needs of others.

WHO wishes that missionaries had never come to our ancestors and that we were still worshipers of wood and stone.

If you are the man or the woman, the two Foreign Mission Societies will expect no contributions from you toward the support of their work

You need missionaries sent to you

If you do not belong in that class, gifts will be gratefully received toward the payment of missionaries' salaries, passage expenses to fields, work of native agencies, care of property, and numerous other items in this vast foreign mission enterprise.

The Foreign Mission Society needs for the current fiscal year, $1,507,890.00.
Up to March 1, a total of $787,226.00 had been received leaving a balance of $720,664.00.

The Woman's Foreign Mission Society needs for the current fiscal year, $502,326.95.
Up to March 1 a total of $245,533.08 had been received leaving a balance of $256,793.87.

How Refreshing

"Many thanks for your splendid call. But I really enjoy your regular weekly visits more than this 'special' one." The special call from the editor was simply to remind our good brother, Chaplain F. C. Rideout, that he was a whole year older and in memory of the event he could send us $2.50 for the renewal of his subscription to THE BAPTIST. He enjoyed our telling him that we wanted his money. It may be the result of military discipline. Read your date label and see if you do not find pleasure in sending us your check, if your subscription is about to expire. We shall enjoy your courtesy for it will save a "special" visit.

Killam's Kollum

It Is a Question of Duty

In an unguarded moment some weeks ago we mentioned the strange fact that some of our ministerial friends seem always to be literally deluged with calls to churches, while in seven years no church had so much as winked at the editor. As a result one church "winked" but everything stopped there. Another did a little better. The church at Podunk Center, writes: "We are a missionary Baptist church. We feel that we could make no greater contribution to the common cause than to accept the inevitable martyrdom of a pastorate under the editor. Our church is obscure but it loves its denomination. Its average pastorate has been sixteen months with plenty of time for the members to rest up between pastorates." In a worldly age like the present it is gratifying to find such a shining example of sacrifice. Negotiations are now under way. We find however a long list of candidates. There's many a slip possible between the trial sermon and the call. We would arouse no false hopes. In the meantime let us all make the best of things and build up a great list of subscribers to THE BAPTIST.

On to Berlin

The Michigan Tradesman dealing editorially with our contemporary, the Christian Century, suggests an addition to the editorial staff in the persons of Hindenberg and Von Terpitz. "That publication will never meet the needs and aspirations of American Christians because of its Teutonic leanings and pro-German utterances . . . The Christian Century should remove its office of publication to Berlin, and add Hindenberg and Von Terpitz to its editorial staff." We had failed to notice this tendency until one of our readers, whose subscription was paid in advance, asked that his subscription be discontinued and a refund made because THE BAPTIST is "blurring the moral vision of its readers." This subscriber then proceeded to point to our neighbor as setting an example of "justice and truth" in its attitude toward Germany. After all, do not these European nations remind you of a lot of children quarreling at their play? Where is there any evidence of outstanding statesmanship or even good sportsmanship? THE BAPTIST does not aspire to the position of arbiter. We have just a little more than we can do to live at peace with all Baptist men and women.

Fresh from the Field

The Northern Baptist Convention will meet at Atlantic City, May 23-29; Evangelistic Conference, May 20-21; Fundamentalist Conference, May 22. Have you secured credentials entitling you to purchase a ticket at the special convention rate? Better write for application blanks, Baptist headquarters in your state or to W. G. Brimson, 125 North Wabash Ave., Chicago.

We are pleased to learn of the deep interest that many of our Baptist people have in the annuity bonds which the missionary societies are offering. We understand that more than a fourth of the annuitants now on the list of one of the societies were not satisfied with receiving one bond, but have secured others. Two have come back nine times for a bond. One person has ten bonds, and one has twenty-one, each bearing a very liberal rate of interest.

Dr. J. F. Watson, Burke Bldg., Seattle, writes: "The Protestant churches of Seattle are soon to engage in a simultaneous reclamation service, in an effort to win back to the churches the hundreds of derelicts and delinquents. If pastors of Baptist churches throughout the country, knowing of Baptists living in Seattle who have not transferred their membership, would send their names and addresses to me it would be of real service at this time."

We read in the "Christian World" of London that two dentists at large have been appointed for attendance on the 5,000 missionaries and their families resident in China. The arrangement, which has been carried out through the American Presbyterian Mission, is an example of conservation of energy and of practical economy on the part of the missionary societies. These traveling dentists, who will themselves be regularly appointed missionaries, will devote themselves entirely to work in the missionary community, among whose members, like other residents abroad, tooth trouble causes much physical and mental inefficiency, often necessitating long furlough and expensive visits home to England and America.

A former Buddhist priest has been baptized in Moulmein, Burma. Missionary C. L. Klein, who is in charge of the school for Karens there, tells the following story of the priest's conversion: "A former Buddhist priest brought his son to our school a year ago. I asked him then why he didn't take his son to the monastery schools. He replied that Buddhism left a heart hunger and there seemed to him to be something even greater than anything connected with Buddha. We gave the man a Bible. He read it, became convinced of its message and applied for baptism five times. He not only came to the kingdom himself but he also brought his wife and a neighbor woman with him." Since April 1, 1922, the Karen Mission in Moulmein has been self-supporting and advance has marked all lines of work, especially the church membership, the number of baptisms and the contributions. The school has experienced a 33 per cent growth, the people have put more workers in the field and have increased the salaries of all workers.

In order to go to South China as a missionary, Rev. L. H. R. Hass has resigned as pastor of the First Church, Marblehead, Mass.

"Baptists Are Not All in Jail," which appeared in the Open Forum of March 31, should have been run above the signature of A. P. Howells, Jacksonville, Ill.

The Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, announced that Rev. Solomon Birnbaum, director of Emmanuel Neighborhood House, Baltimore, Md., has accepted a call to the chair of Jewish missions.

Rev. E. W. Rumsey has resigned as pastor of the Beth Eden Church, Pittsburgh, to accept a position with the speakers' bureau of the National Reform Association. Mr. Rumsey's territory will be Western Pennsylvania.

Rev. Robert W. Van Kirk, who has been pastor of the Community Church at Osterville, Mass., will make his home in California. Mr. Van Kirk is well-known in the Middle West as pastor of the First Church, Jackson, Mich., and the Normal Park Church, Chicago.

One of the most inviting fields in the Indian work, and one which Southern Baptists have not entered as yet, is that among the 23,000 Indians in New Mexico. Work was recently established among the Cajans in southwestern Alabama.

Alexander Schaap, church editor of the St. Louis Times, the story of whose conversion was told in THE BAPTIST of Feb. 17, died the latter part of March. He lived a useful life and gave a clear-cut testimony after his conversion from Judaism.

Mound Bayou, Miss., has not had a jail for the past twenty-five years. Mound Bayou is a negro town with a $50,000 school, hospital, bank, negro citizens only, and negro city officials. "People are too busy to get into trouble," says Isaiah Montgomery, the founder.

The Indians have a true friend in Dr. Bruce Kinney. Under date of March 20 he writes: "One of our Indian missions is much in need of an organ to help in its music. If any church or individual has a good cabinet organ on which they will pay the boxing and freight I should be glad to communicate with them. A folding organ, which would cost about $50, is also needed. Write to Dr. Kinney at Baptist headquarters, Denver.

The Catholic church in America is giving increasing attention to negro education. According to a recent statement, it has "eight special schools of more than local importance and about 125 small parochial schools," with total property values of half a million dollars. Plans are under way for the opening of a new school in Maryland—the Cardinal Gibbons Institute. The Catholic church claims a negro membership of 250,000 in the United States.

With the summer quarter of 1923 marked changes in the tuition fees at the University of Chicago will go into effect. The new schedule will affect all students whether or not they have been in residence previous to the summer quarter. The present annual income from tuition fees does not provide for more than one-third of the actual running expenses of the university. The new schedule will be introduced in order to maintain through increased income the standard of educational work set by the university, in face of the constant increase in operating costs. This advance in tuition charges will be accompanied by an increase in scholarships and fellowships, which will largely offset the increase in fees, as far as promising students of limited means are concerned.

The annual meeting of the Central District of the Woman's American Home and Foreign Mission Societies will be held in the Third Church, St. Louis, Apr. 23-25. Among the speakers will be Mrs. George Caleb Moor, Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery, Miss Alma Noble and Mrs. Clara D. Pinkham. Dr. Catherine Mabie of Africa is also scheduled for an address, Miss Garec Pennington of China, and Miss Louise Carter of Central America are expected to have a part on the program. Those planning to attend should write to Mrs. John A. Hope, 5711 Chamberlain Ave., St. Louis, Missouri, for assignment and program.

Readers of "The Baptist" will observe that our missionary societies and boards have been carrying advertisements, calling attention to the subject of annuities, which have been paid in many instances on one or two lives. We understand that from these advertisements, the secretaries of the societies are receiving numerous inquiries. THE BAPTIST hopes that many thousands of our people who may have money to invest, and who desire their gifts ultimately to go for missionary work but who must receive a sure and ample income during their lifetime, will send for information concerning the annuity form of missionary investment.

At the request of Acting President Ernest De Witt Burton the University of Chicago board of trustees has created the office of dean of the faculties, defining the duties of the new officer as cooperation with the president in matters pertaining to the educational administration of the university. To the new office the board of trustees has elected a member of the faculties who has served the university from its foundation and is intimately acquainted with its life—Prof. James Hayden Tufts, head of the department of philosophy and former dean of the Senior colleges.

Fifty-four bishops of the Protestant Episcopal church have taken the same stand as Bishop Charles H. Brent, formerly chief of the chaplain service, A. E. F., in asking for the release of all political prisoners serving sentences for their economic beliefs. Appeals have been pouring in to the president from bishops in every section of the country—from Maine, Massachusetts and Connecticut, from North and South Carolina, from Texas, Colorado and Minnesota, from California and Idaho. One comes from the bishop of Porto Rico and another from Bishop Logan H. Roots, of Hankow, China, who is at present in the United States. Bishop Daniel S. Tuttle of Missouri, the presiding bishop of the church for many years, and generally regarded as the head of the Episcopal church in this country, says in a letter: "You may append my name to the list of bishops applying to the president for the granting of amnesty to political prisoners held only for the expression of unfavoring sentiments about the war."

The Baptist

For the Sake of the Name

IN his intimate little letter to Gaius the aged apostle John speaks of certain ministers of Jesus Christ whom he commends to Gaius for the exercise of his hospitality. He begs him to receive them, entertain them, and set them on their journey "worthily of God." He proceeds to set forth the supreme reason for such action in the simple affecting words, "because that for the sake of the Name they went forth."

We believe that in these experiences taken from that brief personal letter of the apostle, a letter which might at first glance seem so casual as to have exhausted its purpose in providing an introduction for certain traveling preachers, we have the permanent principles underlying the beautiful ministry which has developed so remarkably of late in our own and other denominations in order to provide for the declining and unproductive years of the minister. Our own ministers' and missionaries' benefit board has been formed later than those of some other denominations, and the voluntariness and lack of supervision in the recruiting of our ministry has made its task a more difficult one than that of any other denomination with a membership in the millions; but the results are already most gratifying and hold forth hope of still greater effectiveness.

It was that statesman and general of the denomination, Henry L. Morehouse, who for ten years or more before his death fathered the plan which gave us the benefit board. With no need of its provisions for himself Doctor Morehouse, solely in the interest of his ministerial brethren and the churches, held to the plan through the years when little headway was made, as some of us know who were on the committee of the convention with him. He made generous provision in his will for the devotion of the most of his modest possessions to this sacred purpose and he lived to see the movement well on its way before his death. The wise plans for the conduct of the fund and the admirable business management of its officers and trustees have given the full confidence of large givers to it, and the hearts of the people have responded in a most gratifying way to the calls for increasing funds.

That which may be called the emergency provision of the board is its oldest form of work and was taken over from previously existing state or district societies for ministerial relief. It makes definite appropriations for cases of great need, and has at times saved our aged ministers from the poorhouse, or has been the means of allowing the minister and his wife, with rigid economy, to maintain their little home together; and otherwise it has been able in merciful ways to show the kindness of God to the men who "went forth for the sake of the Name" in the years of their strength, with stipends seldom adequate to a provision for old age.

But in addition to the emergency provision, which will to some extent doubtless be required indefinitely, there has at length been provided the far more satisfactory normal provision for the minister's old age. It enables him to plan far in advance for that time of need; it enables him with self-respect to make some definite provision by payments in his productive years toward an assured annuity beginning from a certain age (his sixty-fifth year), these payments, however, being partly met from the income of the funds of the board. This annuity is then an assured thing, not dependent upon emergency appropriations which may or may not be available to him, and which must come wholly as a matter of beneficence from the board.

This annuity or pension provision is one of the most gracious ministries of the churches to their aged ministers. It will enable many a servant of Christ to continue his work with so great relief from the haunting fear of a penniless old age without adequate provision for himself or the wife who has shared his labors, that years of service—and far more effective service—will be added to his ministry. The feeling, too, that the churches to which he has given his life-blood and his best years are not ungrateful will sweeten and brighten all of his waning years.

IT must be a peculiar privilege and pleasure which the administrators of this particular denominational service have in bringing light and awakening hope to so many aged and noble lives, unless the joy of it be too greatly offset by the knowledge of a far greater need than our funds are as yet adequate to meet. But the work so splendidly begun surely will be carried to completion.

"Worthily of God"—as the ambassador will be entertained worthily of the sovereign he represents, so God's servants are to be treated worthily of God himself. Or does it mean that we are treating God's representative with such hospitality as we would show if we had God for our guest? "For the sake of the Name"—there is but one name that could have sent them on such a mission; and it is to us also the "Name above every name."

All Must Prosper Together

The physical body reveals to us that there is a very potent union between the body centers and its extremities. If anything goes wrong either with the main trunk or the body extremities and it is not quickly righted, it is not long before the whole life shows the effects of the trouble. A life is a unit.

The spiritual life is a unit and in its activities and manifestations it must constantly express that oneness. A spiritual life is designed to be closely related at one and the same time to people and things close at hand and far away. By personal ministry contacts, through a well-sustained worship life and a properly developed giving function, the nearest parts of Christian living are cared for; and by our knowledge of faraway peoples, our prayers and our giving, the rank and file of Christians relate themselves to the extremities of their spiritual living. The whole of life is a unit. One phase of that life cannot long prosper at the expense of the other.

In order, therefore, to keep the proper relation between the centers and the extremities of spiritual life we have organized, under the will of the Lord we are sure, cooperative forms of activity called local churches, associations, state conventions, and then our societies and boards, through which each individual does his or her work in the wider spheres of life and at its extremities.

We have no hesitation in saying that it is unwise to exploit the Christian for mission enterprise at the expense of a fair and proportional participation in the work of the local church. The reverse of this is equally true. In fact we must not exploit anybody for anything, but we must develop and maintain a properly balanced participation on the part of every church member in each and every phase of all that means Christian living and conquest. We must do more in the future in all these lines than we have ever done in the past.

Our missionary societies, the ministers and missionaries benefit board and all the other boards, as well as the state and Northern Baptist Conventions, must be related to the churches in such an intimate way that all of them will prosper together because sound work is being done with every church member in every relationship. The key to the whole task lies primarily in the individual life. We must do our first work there.

Our missionary societies, boards and conventions are today in sore straits because we have endeavored to promote the production of money without paying proper attention to the sources of supply which are contained in the individuals who compose the membership of our local churches. On the other hand, we are sure that there is no cause to blame our societies and boards for debts which have accumulated because a cooperative movement was started without a proper understanding of how it should function, and in consequence we failed to produce all the results which were so generously desired.

We hope to see our whole work and all our constituency built up through intelligent cultivation and not through promotional methods which are too likely to savor of worldly haste and money getting unrelated to concrete facts and spiritual processes.

In spite of all our difficulties, debts and misunderstandings of these past three years we have seen great progress in many a life, in many a local church and in the activities carried on around the world by our various agencies. But we dare not be satisfied till all have participated and advanced. We must consolidate our gains and conserve all that is good in the present cooperative movement and when we have brought that to as successful a close as possible we must go forward into a short-term, bigger and better movement that will link up very closely the individuals in our local churches with a concrete task that reaches around the world and is done through our own Baptist agencies at home and abroad.

Our societies and boards will never prosper until our local churches are prosperous, and unless our missionary and other agencies prosper. Their lack of prosperity will blight the life of all our local churches to the extent that they fail to do adequately their share of the whole round of home and world service.

The individual, the local church, the association, the state convention, our missionary societies and boards and also the Northern Baptist Convention itself must all either prosper and progress together or they will all fail together more or less.

We vote, and vote heartily, in favor of progress and prosperity and as individuals and as a unit of denominational life THE BAPTIST will do its best to bring progress and prosperity to all parts of our Christian body. We will all prosper together. The task is a great unit, after all.

Conventions and Pre-Conventions

IN this issue you will find announcements of several important Baptist gatherings to be held during the month of May. The program of the Northern Baptist Convention has a place this week and committees representing the fundamentalists and the Baptist Bible Union of America address the churches. Then there is the conference on evangelism.

The pre-convention conference at Atlantic City follows closely the plan of other years with a greater number of speakers more widely representing the constituency. Our interest centers, however, in the first annual meeting of the Baptist Bible Union in Kansas City. The Southern Baptist Convention meets in that city immediately following this conference. For the first time as far as we know southern Baptists are to have a "pre-convention conference" on "fundamentals." We do not mean, of course, that there is any official relation existing, any more than in the case of Northern Baptists. But the meeting, according to the statement issued by the committee, is located and timed to make possible the attendance of a large number of southern Baptists. A study of the names of those promoting the Kansas City meeting will show a number of persons who have formerly been most prominent in the fundamentalist conferences.

The meetings of the conventions themselves will for the vast majority of Baptists, both North and South, hold first place. These gatherings are not intended to be primarily inspirational meetings nor gatherings to decide doctrinal questions. They came into being because of the far-reaching, many-sided work in which the churches are cooperatively engaged. These pre-convention conferences are not an unmixed evil as some seem to feel. This is especially true where place is given for open and unhampered discussion of controverted questions. We note with approval the place to be given to such discussion in the plans of the Kansas City meeting.

Contributing Churches

IN response to recent inquiries concerning the number of churches participating in the New World Movement J. Y. Aitchison, General Director, states the following facts: "A questionnaire on this subject was sent by the General Board of Promotion about a year ago to the secretary of each state convention. A partial report, based on incomplete returns, was made at the time of the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis last year. Since then the information has been received from all states.

"The total number of Baptist churches in the states related to the Northern Baptist Convention was found to be 9,152, with a total membership of 1,364,441. Of this total 1,299 churches, with a membership of 224,501, belong to foreign-speaking groups, such as the Swedish Baptists and the German Baptists, or to the negro conferences, all of which carry on their own work independently. The deduction of these leaves 7,853 churches, with a membership of 1,139,940, which would normally be expected to cooperate in the general denominational program. Of this number 6,712 churches, whose membership aggregates 1,088,705, made contributions applying on the New World Movement fund during the fiscal year 1921-22. From the remaining 1,141 churches, with a membership of 51,235, no contributions applying on the New World Movement were reported. These churches average less than fifty members each.

"This means that over 85 per cent of the churches in the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention, excepting those which are affiliated with groups of their own, contributed to the New World Movement during 1921-22, and that more than 95 per cent of Northern Baptists, excepting such groups, are members of churches which contribute to the New World Movement. The churches which have most generously supported the program, contributing on a scale which if reached by all, would insure its success, include churches of every shade of theological opinion and of every type, large and small, city and rural."

Give Us All the Facts

LETTERS from all sections of the country ask—almost demand—that THE BAPTIST give to the constituency all the facts concerning the financial condition of the Board of Promotion and of all the cooperating organizations. "Why this silence?" asks an outstanding layman.

We, therefore, addressed the Board of Promotion as follows: "There is a widespread and constantly increasing demand that we tell the constituency through THE BAPTIST the exact financial situation. We believe that the demand is warranted and that it grows out of a desire to meet the situation rather than out of a desire to criticise the condition."

We were assured some days ago that "the publicity department is preparing a statement to go to the denominational papers today." The only statement received as we go to press is that which we have displayed on another page. It is a good statement of its kind and gives us some general—very general—information. To sum up the matter we have received "about" $4,000,000 of "distributable" money during the first ten and a half months. We must therefore raise during the last six weeks of the fiscal year $6,000,000 of "distributable" money if we carry out the plan adopted by the Indianapolis convention. Perhaps this is all we need to know.

We confess that we are anxious, not merely curious, to know what the prospects are. We want to understand what will be the result if we succeed in raising the $10,000,000. Shall we be able to reduce our debt? If so, how much? If we fail shall we be under the necessity of making further reduction in our work? We want to know the best and the worst of the situation. We want to know because we are interested. It is our work because it is our Lord's work.

Wet Attacks Unsuccessful

NO one at all familiar with the forces which oppose prohibition is surprised at the subtle efforts made to discredit the law and to nullify its enforcement. New York was confidently announced as a "wet" state with a governor opposed to prohibition. When the test came on the Mullan-Gage law it resulted in the rout of the wet forces and a confirmation of the prohibition enforcement law. Rhode Island shows a similar result, and Pennsylvania finds itself in the hands of a governor who is not only in favor of rigid enforcement but has put into motion forces which have demoralized the law-breaking elements. The attempt of the friends of rum to discredit Superintendent Anderson of the Anti-Saloon League have been far from successful. It is gradually dawning upon the lawless interests that the eighteenth amendment was the result of deliberate educational and legislative action and that there was nothing "put over" on a country taken unawares.

The Rebirth of Evangelical Christianity

Presidential address at the National Evangelical Free Church Council, Bristol, Eng., Feb. 27, 1923

By F. C. Spurr

IN SPEAKING to you from this chair today, I am deeply conscious, both of the honor and the responsibility which your charity has laid upon me. The honor is a great one, and I pray that no word or action of mine may diminish its glory.

The responsibility is even greater than the honor, for we have arrived at one of those decisive epochs in human history when a distracted world and an anxious church alike demand of their reputed leaders some definite direction; and this calls for clearness of vision, courage of speech, and enduring strength of performance.

We cry with the apostle, "Who is sufficient for these things?"

May grace be given to answer with him from the heart, "Our sufficiency is of God."

The subject I ask you to consider is suggested by the needs and by the signs of our time. The entire world of today is in a state of ferment. There are not a few, indeed, who proclaim a coming final cataclysm.

But a true perspective shows that greater crises of human history have arisen as the result of a movement in which the decay of one epoch and the birth of another are blended. God shakes the heaven and the earth in order that the corrupt and outgrown things of life may pass, and the things which cannot be shaken may have room for fuller development. The process is painful, but if we believe in God at all we must believe that all things are working together for good. This is no time for craven fear, for panic, for pessimism.

Facing the Situation

The present tragedy and distress of human life constitute the clear call of God to his church to face the situation with calm courage, to think things through afresh, to renew at their divine source its enfeebled spiritual energies, and to embark upon a new crusade on behalf of the kingdom of God.

Christianity came into the world when the Jewish church-state was rapidly approaching its end, and when the Roman empire had entered upon the first stage of its final phase. And it saved the world by its gospel.

It entered human life, not as a philosophy, but as an evangel. It brought a real human brotherhood upon the basis of a common living relation to Jesus Christ. All down the ages the church has won its victories only when it has been true to its gospel. Whenever it has tampered with it, for whatever reason, the church has been defeated, and as a result the world has suffered. But history shows that whenever the church has recovered its message and its dynamic, the life of the world has revived. And I submit, therefore, that the hope of the world today, as in other times, lies in the rebirth of essential evangelical Christianity.

A Grand Word

The word evangelical has had at times unfortunate associations. It has been made the badge of a party and a covering term for a strange medley of narrow religious opinions. Nevertheless, it is a grand word, and we must not surrender it. On the contrary we must recover its vital content and its breadth.

Narrowness there has been and is, in its interpretation and in its application to life, but there is nothing narrow in the evangel itself. It asks of man a heart completely open to the love of Jesus Christ, a mind completely open to all truth, and a hand completely open to all men.

What would you have more liberal than that?

But I am speaking of a rebirth of evangelical Christianity, by which I mean more than a simple revival.

To be reborn is to enter a new world with new powers adapted to new conditions. A simple revival may be an anachronism—a mere repetition of what was once new, but is now antique and without meaning. Life is never static, it is always being reborn. Christianity is a living thing, hence it must express itself to every new epoch in a living way. It must be alive and evangelical in the presence of new discoveries, growing light and fresh social orientations. It must speak to the whole of man's life, capturing, satisfying and directing not only his emotions but his thoughts and activities in all realms.

Thank God we already see signs of this rebirth in many directions. But we see at present only the beginning of the new order. We are yet at the dawn of the new day.

Here we must invoke the illuminating aid of history. When we use the term "rebirth," inevitably we recall that great movement of the middle ages known as the Renaissance. The parallel between that remarkable period and our own is very striking and merits the closest attention.

The Renaissance was a powerful movement of the human spirit in the direction of intellectual liberty and humanism. It was a break with tradition and authority. It marked the passing of medievalism and the opening of the modern period. The factors that produced it were three. First, there was revolt against organized Christianity, grown contemptible and inefficient through continuous strife and unworthy ambitions. Is there a more scandalous story upon the pages of history than that of the papacy of the three centuries before the fall of Constantinople? Petty conflicts and abominable intrigues between popes and kings ended in the spectacle of rival vicars of Christ at Rome and Avignon anathematizing each other. Little wonder that the world was sick to death of that "holy Roman Empire," so conspicuous for its lack of holiness.

New Knowledge

A second factor was that of discovery and invention. Printing was invented about the year 1450, and with that art there came a growing liberation of man's mind. Gunpowder had not long been mixed. Copernicus (1473-1543) had destroyed at a stroke the world's accepted beliefs about the heavens; while Columbus (1446-1506) was widening the horizon of the earth and toppling the pillars of Hercules into the sea. All these things came together. Ancient boundaries disappeared under an ever broadening earth and heaven.

Is it surprising that, staggered by the new knowledge, men lost their balance and gravitated towards gross secularism?

We must not, however, forget the third factor in the process, which was religion itself.

If the Renaissance assumed a secular aspect, the first impulse towards it came from religious leaders.

St. Francis of Assisi, John Wycliffe, the Cistercians, and others by their powerful witness to the simplicity of the faith, prepared the way for that emancipation of the human spirit which characterized the Renaissance and of which we are the inheritors.

But chiefly it was the appearance of the Bible in the vulgar tongue that gave the greatest impetus to the revival of learning. Thus it was the Christian spirit that inspired the greatest intellectual movement of the middle ages as it has inspired all great movements of the human mind.

Coronation of the Renaissance

But if the Renaissance expressed itself in Italy in secular forms, elsewhere, and chiefly in Germany, it uttered itself in a mighty revival of religion. The Reformation may fairly be called the coronation of the Renaissance: the religious transformation of man's awakened powers. Mid-Europe was awaiting its leaders and saviors. They appeared in the persons of Erasmus and Luther. Erasmus was the great intellectual who absorbed the new learning and sought to use it in the service of religion. His interest lay in practical Christianity, disentangled from Roman dogmas, and his contribution to liberty took the form of a new Latin translation of the Bible. Again the Bible appears as an emancipating force.

Luther was the antithesis of Erasmus. The latter was clever, but cold. The former was hot and creative. Erasmus had no great inner spiritual upheaval. Luther had. And it was the man of mighty spiritual experience, rather than the man of genius, who became the agent of God for the spiritual enfranchisement of Europe.

I have dwelt upon the Renaissance because of the remarkable parallel between that period and our own.

We, too, are experiencing, as the fifteenth century experienced, a revolt against traditional forms of Christianity; we are in the throes of one of the most serious economic and spiritual crises the world has ever known; we, too, are dazed with the brilliant light of the new knowledge which is being poured upon all departments of life. New heavens and a new earth are opening before us also.

And yet, in spite of all this, the hungry spirit of man is crying out afresh for the living God. Often its cry, like the cry of an infant, is instinctive and not intelligent, but it is nevertheless a real cry of hunger for food. "Thou hast made us for thyself, and our hearts are disquieted until they rest in thee."

There runs through our best literature today a wistful longing for God, and although God is not often named, as if it were a sort of degradation for the creature to name the Creator, he is intended.

CALVARY was outside the city walls because it is eternally inside the soul of God. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." When we have sounded the deeps and heights of these words, we shall have a clue to stars and suns and matter and motion and mind and heart; for all, all are of God, and God is love—so loves that he must give his best, that which conditions and underlies his Godhead — his only begotten Son! So, stripped down to the marrow of reality, we conclude that the greatness of God consists of service and sacrifice.

—From Dr. F. F. Shannon's Sermon.

The hour then is ripe for a fresh Renaissance, but what shall be its character? Certain pseudo-prophets, lacking insight and vision, are busy repeating the discredited enchantment that the world can still be saved by science, education and philosophy alone. The dread events of the last nine years have taught them nothing. With men and women, however, of all schools, who seek to penetrate to the heart of things, it is a settled conviction, capable almost of a demonstration, that nothing less than a spiritual revival can recover us. It is in the spirit that man is sick; it is there that healing must come. And the quickening power proceeds from the evangelical message which alone answers completely to the purpose of God and to the needs of man.

Evangelical Christianity, however, must be reborn and completely free from the bondage of its own traditions. In its first birth it was courageous and went forth unbound to deliver its message. And it saved the world. New born, it must be equally courageous, shedding the last vestiges of intellectual timidity and revealing itself as the child of light. It is necessary not only to abandon fear of new truth; we have to welcome truth with open arms when once (but not until) it reveals itself to be truth. Evangelicals too frequently have exhibited a dread of new light, as though they were not quite certain of their foundation. But of all men they who are the disciples and apostles of him who is the truth, have the least reason to be afraid of truth—from whatever quarter it may come.

Can Truth Oppose Truth?

How can truth oppose truth, or light be contrary to light?

"Every good and perfect gift cometh down from above, from the Father of lights with whom is no variableness, nor shadow cast by turning."

New born, it must address itself with greater zest than ever to the social redemption of human life, never resting until all tyrannies and exploitations of mankind cease, whether these be of masters or of men, of landlords or of tenants, of governors or the governed.

New born, it must so proclaim the eternal gospel that every man will "hear in his own tongue" the mighty works of God. For every Pentecost brings a new miracle of apostolic speech and a new miracle of human listening. The heart of the evangelical message can never change; the form of its presentation must ever change; the force of things demands it.

In this rebirth Erasmus and Luther will enter into a perfect partnership. Scholar and saint; critic and evangelist; investigator and apostle; apologist and witness must be one. The tragedy and scandal of their isolation and misunderstanding must end. There is nothing in the search for fuller truth that of necessity involves the extinguishing of the passion for souls. And there is nothing in evangelistic zeal that necessarily calls for the abnegation of the intellect.

Knowledge, apart from a Christ-like passion for the salvation of men, is, as St. Paul says, mere emptiness; while hot zeal without knowledge is likely to prove a destroying flame, particularly if the spirit of bigotry animate it.

The evangelical rebirth which the world awaits needs to be complete and entirely adequate to the terrible needs of a disordered and sinful world; we must have again a gospel covering the whole life of man and claiming it for Jesus Christ.

When, in the quietness of our own oratories, we are plunged in meditation and prayer, there rises before the mind the vision of an evangelical church reborn, a conquering and compelling church, confronting the proud intellect of man with unassailable and saving divine truth, offering to his sinful heart a redemptive and healing balm; and to his civilization the gospel of a divine social direction.

Would to God that the dream might speedily be fulfilled!

Admitting the need, what are the conditions of this rebirth? It will not come in any magical way. Life and power reach us along the lines of spiritual law. First of all we must recover, at all costs, love for, and careful study of, the Bible. Ignorance of the Bible is at the bottom of most of our troubles. We have produced a generation of people uncertain of the foundations of their faith and therefore at the mercy of any new cult, and this because they "know not the scriptures." The church has always been strongest when its children have been "mighty in the scriptures," and weakest when the Bible has been neglected. The Bible today is a more living book than ever, thanks to the work of devout scholars. The historic method of reading it removes all dullness and confusion from its study and is the surest way of demonstrating the inherent inspiration of the book. Back then to the Bible.

The Art of Meditation

With this, too, must return the lost art of meditation, that is, the use of the Bible for the feeding of devotion and for the ordering of life. Nothing is really ours until we make it so by means of mental and spiritual assimilation. The divine word must become flesh—our flesh. For this, time is needed; time for reflection and self-examination. And both we and our people need to rearrange our lives in view of the absolute necessity of that deep communion with God in solitude which alone creates the strongest characters. Neglect of it will leave us with impoverished and anemic souls.

Bible reading and meditation have as their corollary the vital fellowship of the church. And here there is abundant room for improvement. We have Sunday congregations, and week-end social gatherings and certain prayer meetings. But Christian fellowship needs more than these for its perfection. The ancient Methodist class meeting, revived and revised, might well be adopted in some form by all our churches. At any rate we need increased opportunities for interchange of thought, for the comparing of spiritual experiences and for that corporate prayer to which Christ has attached such great promises. Think of the early church in its first fervor of love, with its daily fellowship, its prevailing prayer, its influence over the multitude and its story of daily additions to the membership! And contrast these with the weaknesses and doubts and ineffectiveness of much of our church life today! Christ has not failed. The sources of spiritual power are not dried up. Whatever be the price we must recover our heritage of spiritual power. Without it we may make a "goodly show in the flesh," but we shall raise no dead, nor heal any sick, nor save men from their sins.

WAS the trial sore?
Temptation sharp? Thank God a second time!
Why comes temptation but for man to meet
And master, and make crouch beneath his feet,
And so be pedestaled in triumph?
—Browning.

These conditions fulfilled, the church of God would be lifted above all petty controversies about secondary things. The presence of Christ among us would be known, felt and seen. The joy of the saints would become the common possession of the whole body of the faithful, and once again it would be written "Fear came upon every soul and many wonders and signs were done. Day by day they took their food with gladness and singleness of heart, praising God and having favor with all the people." God fulfil that vision.

It is not immodest at this point to say that the Free churches have emerged in history as the natural trustees, but trustees only, of the evangelical principle. One by one the great Free Church bodies came into being to preserve from obscurity or decay some evangelical truth which the main body had denied or changed or shelved.

The Virtue of Assent

Ignorance, or vanity, or crass prejudice can still speak of "dissent" as the "sin" of the Free churches. But ours was not, and is not, the sin of dissent; it was and is the virtue of assent to truths which might have perished, had not our fathers gone to gaol to preserve them. Was it, and is it, a crime to try and recover for the whole body of Christ the simplicity of New Testament Christianity, with its emphasis upon the priesthood of all believers rather than upon a sacerdotal caste; upon a real brotherhood of believers rather than a hierarchy of officials, and upon a salvation vital in its method and results rather than upon a system of unethical magical ceremonies? What, think you, would be the state of Christianity in Britain today but for the witness of the Free churches? And where, too, would America have been? New England, which is the soul of America proper, owes all to the exiled Pilgrim fathers and their successors. They gave her the charter of religious and intellectual liberty in which today she rejoices. And while numbers are by no means everything, or even the chief thing, yet it is a matter for astonishment and humble thanksgiving that the Free churches which started with the handicap of prison, prosecution and persecution, have so grown that today in the English-speaking world alone, the four chief bodies number nearly thirty millions of communicants.

We have no need, then, to blush for our history. And our work is certainly not yet done. It is ours still to maintain, to develop and to apply the evangelical principle, and to hold it as a sacred trust on behalf of our Lord Christ until such time as the non-evangelical churches recover their heritage. For not until the entire church of God becomes completely evangelical can it, with any success, evangelize the rest of the world.

And this leads me in the most natural way to a larger question. I am speaking of the rebirth of evangelical Christianity, with especial emphasis upon the part which the Free churches are called upon to play in the movement. But there are many evangelical Christians who belong to other communions, and, notably in this country, to the state church. They, too, are earnestly desirous of seeing a reborn evangelicalism of the type I have tried to express. They and we are, at heart, one. But they belong to a church which, as a whole, is by no means one with them. The most powerful section in the Anglican body is the sacerdotal and the sacramental party. That party dislikes the evangelicals within its own communion almost as much as it dislikes us of the Free churches. The Anglican house is divided against itself. And yet, from the bench of bishops, representative of high and low churchmen, we have that truly magnificent Lambeth appeal for reunion which is now receiving the sympathetic attention of our denominational committees.

It is not my business to examine that appeal or to reply to it; but I have the right here and now, in the light of my thesis this morning, to say two things upon the question of reunion. And the first is that we Free churchmen are ardently desirous of cooperating heart and soul with all our true brethren in Christ who seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness. We are certain that if the world is to be saved from the bottomless pit the entire Christian forces must be mobilized. And there is absolutely no reason whatever, so far as we are concerned, why practical union should not become operative at once. Let us start on the question of peace and war: we shall have enough to do. No question of "orders" or "sacraments" can enter into the consideration of this vital matter upon which the very life of the world depends.

A Principle Which Is Life

The second thing is this: Whatever changes may be necessary or desirable in the matter of the regularization of the ministry and other things that are in dispute, the one thing Free churchmen will never surrender is the evangelical principle, which is their very life, and of which they have been historically, in later times at least, the chief trustees. That principle includes the fundamental Christian truths of the sole headship of Christ over his church, the common priesthood of all believers, carrying with it all its implications of direct access to God through Christ without intermediaries; a fellowship based upon the decisive word of the Lord. "One is your Master, and all ye are brethren," and upon that other word of the Apostle, "not lording it over God's heritage," and the practice of Christian rites and ceremonies which correspond with Christian realities and have nothing in common with magic.

A reunion of institutions alone has no interest for us. We cannot begin with institutions, we must begin with spiritual and evangelical men to whom Christ is all. The dream of a great visible united church is alluring, but there can be no reunion between incongruous elements. And I, for one, cannot see for the life of me how at present there can be corporate reunion between those who hold the evangelical and New Testament view of the holy communion and those who hold in any form the Roman or magical view. And there is this to be said that the latter as little desire it as do we. To say this is not to close and bar the door to reunion; it is simply to state a most patent fact. Nor can we yield to the spell of antiquity. We are not concerned with the age of an institution or a thing so much as with its truth. Old institutions exercise upon certain minds an almost hypnotic influence. Age to them is more important than usefulness. The collector of antiques thinks wholly in this way. But a modern house, if well built, is far better as a protection against storms and as a gathering place for the family than the most ancient castle which, unroofed and broken, admits the wind and rain. Antiquity and continuity are in themselves precious if they be allied to life, truth and usefulness; but if they preserve only the outgrown or the encrusted then their age merits only the respect due to what has been, and the modern world, alive, must build for itself. We cannot admit the validity of mere religious antiquity and mere continuity unless these bring to us unchanged the original deposit of essential evangelical truth, developed in a natural and living way under the guidance of the Spirit of God. For we also believe in "development;" but we distinguish between development and displacement, which, often confounded, are two vastly different things.

HE is counting on you!
Oh, the wonder and grace
To look Christ in the face
And not be ashamed,
For you gave what he claimed.
And you laid down your all
For his sake—at his call—
He is counting on you—
And you failed not.
What then?

The question, therefore, becomes a simple one.

Removing Accretions

We who speak of reunion must first settle in our minds who and what are to be reunited; whether an inchoate mass of contradictory elements, or spiritually living people who are already one in their fundamental Christian life and faith. This settled, the next step would be for all to reexamine their formularies with the courageous purpose of removing those accretions which have gathered during the centuries and which are foreign to the simplicity and beauty of the Christian gospel, such as a magical or semi-magical view of the sacraments, or an administration of the sacraments which suggests magic rather than fellowship, or a hierarchy of officials which diminishes the idea of the brotherhood of all disciples, or creedal formulas which bind the spirit of man and prevent its growth, or a slovenliness of thought or rite which makes for irreverence.

And after excision must come addition. They who desire reunion must be prepared to lay aside every weight of hindering tradition whether of the older or younger churches and receive from each other, for the common Christian good, whatever of truth or of rite can be shown to belong to the spirit of the evangel. All ecclesiastical pride must perish, in whatever church it has entrenched itself, and be replaced by Christian humility which will recognize that we have all more or less departed from the simplicity of the gospel and that we are all under the obligation to return to it. Only in this way, it seems to many of us, can we arrive at any reunion worthy of the name. The barnacles must be scraped off all round. We have to get beyond ancient forms and creeds, and above all bid farewell to our ancestral pride, whether it date from 383 or 1570.

Courage to follow Christ at all hazards is our first necessity.

Charity is our second.

Many would perhaps say, charity is our first need. But let the order stand. No real movement can be made until prejudice is nailed to the cross, and all blind bigotries are sublimated in charity. Matthew Arnold's impertinent classification of "beershops, ritualism, dissent and the Salvation Army," as the great hindrances to religion still obtains amongst men whose culture does not go deep enough. Myope can make so good a man as Father Paul Bull speak of the Free churches as "those vast religious organizations which are doing so much to hamper the work of the true church." And another, one of the excellent of the earth, cannot regard us as true churches, although he "readily concedes that the evangelical bodies far surpass us" (C. of E.) in nationality, and that they really interpret certain sections of society and thought better than we do, as also that they "actually represent English religion more effectually."

While such views prevail all talk of reunion is heavily discounted.

Education and charity between them have much to do in preparing a better day. Meanwhile we Free churchmen must get on with our proper business, which is to present Christ to men in such a way that they shall know him to be indeed the complete Saviour of the world.

It is ours to further in every way the rebirth of evangelical Christianity.

With all my heart I believe that the best days of the church lie ahead. Our set-backs have been many, we suffer from much unnecessary weakness, we have often lacked courage to take Christ seriously; and we have failed to use to the full the spiritual forces which would render us invincible. We are not boastful today; rather we are humbled at our remembrance of our faults, and our hungry hearts cry out for a rebaptism of the Holy Ghost.

But we are sure that the Christ cannot fail, his kingdom must come. He must reign.

And today in the midst of the sorrowful travail of mankind he calls us to follow him anew, to be baptized with his spirit and to go forth, armed anew with the divine evangel to the conquest of the world for him.

A Statement to Northern Baptists

"MY only hope for the world is in bringing the human mind into contact with Divine revelation," said Gladstone. That is our only hope.

Personal responsibility for every Baptist in the territory of the Northern Baptist Convention is the keynote of the hour. No one is without responsibility. Though we are interested in one board or society or state convention more than another, they are all parts of the work of Christ. That must not suffer. On this point there is no difference of opinion. Less than our best will result in further debts and loss to the work.

Our state convention representatives are working in each state. Our home missionaries and Bible workers are among the Indians, the foreign-speaking people, the thickly populated centers, and on the frontier fields. Religious education is lifting the minds and hearts of our boys and girls to a wider Christian service. Our foreign missionaries are winning thousands to Christ. Our schools and our student pastors are preparing an educated leadership for the future Christian enterprise. Our old ministers and missionaries, their wives and widows are being helped. The world-wide work is going on. It cannot stop. It must not even slacken. A great volume of sacrifice and service must win for Christ.

Northern Baptists are achieving great things. Over $31,000,000 has been expended on denominational work during the last four years. Such giving ought to inspire every heart.

Apr. 30, 1923, will close the present fiscal year of our societies and boards. In view of the amount due on pledges the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis voted $10,000,000 of DISTRIBUTABLE MONEY as our financial goal for the year so soon to end. The total receipts from donations for the first ten and a half months were $4,749,665, of which approximately $4,000,000 was DISTRIBUTABLE money. Hence $6,000,000 of distributable money must come in during the last one and a half months.

Apr. 30 is less than a month away! What will you do?

Going Further

"And he went a little further."—Matthew 26:39

BY RALPH M. JONES

ONE does not need to run over the story again. The Last Supper has been eaten by Jesus and the twelve. Judas has gone out to betray his Master. . . Jesus makes no effort to avoid arrest, or to hide himself, as he might have done. Into his accustomed trysting place on the Mount of Olives he goes to wait for Judas and the soldiers. It is night: no one sees the Master go. Only three go with him: the loved three, Peter, James and John. They are drowsy and indifferent, but the Master loves to have them near. . . He leaves them at the entrance to the garden where almost at once they fall asleep. Then he himself goes on "a little further" and falls upon his face and prays.

He Went a Little Further

I confess I shall use these words in a purely symbolistic way this morning. In no other way will they have any intelligent meaning for us. But lately this symbolism has taken hold of me every time I have read the words over. "He went a little further"—a little further into the garden; a little further than his disciples did; a little further on his way to the cross.

A little further than his disciples—yes, he left them there asleep behind him. The Master always goes a little further than his disciples do, even the best of them; even Peter and James and John. He is always there ahead. He looks back and finds us sleeping.

A little further on his way to the cross. It was essential that he should do this. Suppose he had stayed in the upper room, or hid himself away, or resisted arrest. Suppose he had been too intimidated to go further. Suppose he had said: "I have healed a thousand men; I have preached the gospel all up and down through Palestine. I am tired, I have done enough." What then? The world would be now without a Saviour, and the glory of his name would have perished from the earth. But blessed be God, he went a little further. He went as far as God wanted him to go. He looked out and saw the shining spears; he looked through them to the crown of thorns and the scourge and the jeering people; and still beyond these to the towering cross. And he never quailed or hesitated or rebelled or said, "God asks too much!" He went a little further.

And in that simple phrase, as I use it, is laid up all the glory of his life and all the hope of our salvation.

Is not this indeed the history of all human progress that one man has been willing to run ahead of the others and show the way? Luther goes a little further than his contemporaries, and the Reformation finds a leader. Patrick Henry leaps ahead of the sluggish minds of his fellow congressmen, with his defiant peroration, and the Revolution is born. Galileo in science, Lloyd George in politics, Carey in missions, Napoleon in the art of war, Neal Dow in temperance, were all men who were ahead of their times. They went a little further than the others did. And the slow mind of the common people decided at last to follow. So arts, sciences, religions, reformations and revolutions have come upon the earth; and after the names of genius and greatness can generally be inscribed the words: He went a little further than the others did.

"Vox populi, vox Dei," we say. The voice of the people is the voice of God. But it isn't. The voice of God is nearly always the voice of some isolated prophet who leaped ahead of the rest. And later the rest caught up with him.

Not only are these words true of human progress in the widest sense but they are the secret of individual achievement. No life is a success unless it is eager every day to go a little further; to add something new and better to what is already done. Life otherwise is stagnant and dead. It is well that each man every night should ask himself seriously: "In what way have I progressed over the self of yesterday? Have I done more? Have I done better? Have I learned more? Have I loved more? Have I gone a little further on the way to self-realization and divine perfection If not then I have wasted a day." Happy is that man who says each day of his life: "I have gone a little further. I have done a charitable deed. I have helped a friend. I have forgiven an enemy. I have found and put into my soul a sweet and gracious thought. I feel that I have added to my character some new grace, some better judgment, some larger tolerance, some finer sympathy, than I had yesterday." Happy is that man. Fortunate and gracious is that life.

How often we meet people whose only sin is that they are not willing to go a little further. They have set a limit to themselves. They are governed by standards that shut them in instead of by ideals that pull them on.

GOD has given the wealth of his love to a plan for winning his world back on its own feet. That plan called for his Son. And he spared not his Son. And that plan called for the Son's life. And the Son spared not his life. But Jesus' dying is not enough. Men must be told that he died that so they may choose.

God has given us five things to use in helping him win his world back; the life, what we are; our lips, what we say; our service, what we do; our money, what we do not keep; and our prayer, what we claim in Jesus, the victor's, name.

I want to say a word about the fourth — money. Money is queer stuff. It may be a master or it may be a servant. If a master it is the veriest tyrant. If a servant the very best world-trained trusty servant And the amount does not matter. You can shut out the whole world with a single copper cent, if you hold it close enough to your eye.

—S. D. GORDON

There was Peter. Peter once asked the Master about the limit of forgiveness. "How often," said he, "shall I forgive my brother? Seven times?" And Jesus said: "No, Peter, you must go a little further. Not seven times, but seventy times seven. In other words, Peter, there must be no end to forgiveness." And Peter, doubtless, learned his lesson.

There was the rich young man. He said to Jesus: "What must I do to possess eternal life? I have kept all the commandments from my youth up. I have not broken one of them." And Jesus said: "You must go a little further. You must be not only just, but generous; you must be not only charitable, but unselfish." And the young man went away sorrowing, because he could not bring himself to do that extra bit that Jesus asked of him.

Setting Limits

So people, like that rich young man, set limits beyond which they will not go.

Ah, my brethren, if we would live up to the recipe of Jesus we must go a little further than mere inclination, or even obligation, demands of us. Out of the region of tolerance into the realm of active love; out of the region of forbearance into the realm of forgiveness; out of the region of charity into the realm of stewardship; out of the region of ritual into the realm of vital religion. Else we are not his true disciples.

Did it ever occur to you (of course it did) how much the church depends on those who are willing to go a little further—not only a little further than the others, but a little beyond their own literal obligations, as we think of obligations? Who give more than they are able, who spend their money and their time and their vital energies unstintedly to make up for the deficiences of others? Oh, yes, we do depend on them. There are so many in the church who do not go far enough: who are bitter in their loving and penurious in their giving and slack in their religious service. The man who goes a little further, who does more than we have any right to expect of him, must make up for their deficiences and fill out the measure of their life by the generosity and richness of his own discipleship.

Thank God for the men and women in the church who go a little further than a strict accounting would demand of them: who ask not, "What are my obligations?" but, "What are my possibilities?" These people who are without measure, who are not governed by standards that shut them in but by ideals that pull them on. For these I say "Thank God!" To the others (myself included) I would say: Go a little further.

Is there some one whom you merely tolerate? Go a little further. Forgive him, and so fill out what you lack in your discipleship.

Are you just and careful, in your judgments? Go a little further. Be generous and pitiful and kind.

Are you putting something into your church's treasury that is absurd in the light of your profession of loyalty to Christ and his cause? Go a little further. Give more. Others must make up for your deficiencies.

Or, it may be that you are a teacher in the Sunday school. You are a conscientious teacher, I feel sure: you are willing to study the lesson, to be always in your place, and to apply the truth as best you can to those eager young minds. You are industrious, faithful, punctual, efficient. Go a little further. Be not only teacher but evangelist.

Or, you have children in the home, who have come to that time in life when a decision for the Master is most easily made. You are good to them, I know. I see them pass my window on their way to school, and I can see that they are clean and well-dressed and amirably mannered. You would work your fingertips off to add one extra ounce to their contentment. You want them to receive a thorough schooling. You have done so much for them already that I rather hate to ask for more. And yet I would say: Go a little further. Be not only breadwinner and housewife and mother, but their religious guide and teacher.

But there is one in particular to whom I would apply these words today. Here is a man among us who is Christian in all but name. His character is above reproach. His sympathies are wide and generous. His good deeds are known to all of us. His kindly nature is universally appreciated. His desire for God's house and his genuine religiousness are beyond any question. Only I would say to him, as to the others: Go a little further. Don't call yourself complete until you have taken Christ publicly, and without any trace of denial, as the Master and Saviour of life.

Yes, it applies to all of us. Go a little further, my brother. A little further in your love. A little further in your sympathy. A little further in your giving. A little further in your domestic obligations. A little further in your teaching and profession of religion. For that which counts in religion is what, over and above our inclinations and our bare duty, we are willing to do for the Master.

Again. Go a little further into the depths of the knowledge of Christ. There is no limit here.

Away back in the fourth century a young man came to Macarius, the great preacher.

"Tell me, father," said he, "what it means to be dead and buried in Christ?"

"My son," answered Macarius, "you remember our dear brother who died and was buried a short time ago? Go now to his grave and tell him all the unkind things you ever heard against him, say that we are glad he is dead, and thankful to be rid of him, for he was such a worry to us and caused so much discomfort to the church. Go, my son, and say that, and hear what he will answer."

The young man did as he was told and returned.

"Well, what did our brother say?" asked Macarius.

"Say! father," he exclaimed, "how could he say anything, he is dead?"

"Go now again, my son, and repeat every kind and flattering thing you have ever heard of him; tell him how much we miss him; how great a saint he was; what a noble work he did; how the whole church depended upon him; and come again and tell me what he says."

The young man began to see the lesson Macarius would teach. He went to the grave, addressed many flattering things to the dead and then returned to his master.

"He answers nothing, father; he is dead and buried."

"You know now, my son, what it is to be dead and buried with Christ. Praise and blame equally are nothing to him who is really dead and buried in Christ."

Have you gone that far, my brother, into the infinite riches of the knowledge of Christ: so that you are equally oblivious of praise and blame, conscious only of his great love for you and of your duty to him? No?

Then go a little further. A little further into the depths of his love. A little further into the tenderness of his pity. A little further into the breadth of his sympathy. A little further into the wideness of his purpose. A little further into the power and splendor of the Great Commission. So shall men know, as they do not now know, that you are his very true disciples and not altogether like the people of the world.

The Atlantic City Convention

PLANS have been completed for the entertainment of the Northern Baptist Convention at Atlantic City, May 23-29, and every one is looking forward to a great convention. Word came to the executive committee early in January, stating that Washington would not be able to entertain the convention this year, due to the fact that the new auditorium would not be completed by that time.

It has become a problem to find a city with the proper auditorium available on the fixed dates, and with Baptists that are able to do the work and meet the heavy expense involved in entertaining the convention. Every one can readily understand that it was no small task to complete arrangements in so short a space of time. It is a pleasure to state that the New Jersey State Convention, with Dr. Charles E. Goodall as executive secretary, and the Baptists of Atlantic City, with Dr. Hinson V. Howlett as chairman, are cooperating with the Atlantic City Hotel Men's Association in providing every convenience and comfort for the entertainment of the convention.

There are over 100 hotels in the Hotel Men's Association, and they have agreed to furnish the steel pier, the assembly halls, committee rooms, registration clerks, registration blanks, and to entertain the foreign missionaries free of expense. Hotel rates are in no case to be higher than the regular rates, and in many cases slightly lower. All delegates, upon arrival, are to register first at the hotel, secure a certificate from the hotel, and then register on the steel pier as a delegate to the convention, and pay the convention registration fee of $2. Residents of Atlantic City, and others who do not choose to register in cooperating hotels, will be asked to pay an additional dollar toward defraying the local expenses of the meeting.

A rate sheet, giving the list of cooperating hotels and their rates, is being issued, and will be in every state convention office, ready for distribution early in April. Mr. F. Wayland Ayer was preparing a statement for this rate sheet when his sudden death caused a delay in printing. It is suggested that all persons expecting to attend the convention write at once to state convention headquarters for a rate sheet, or to Mr. A. T. Bell, secretary of the Hotel Men's Association, Chalfonte Hotel, Atlantic City, N. J., and then as soon as convenient make a reservation with a hotel of your own choice.

There is to be no other convention in Atlantic City during the above-mentioned dates, except a small convention of bankers, which will be quartered in Hadden Hall. All hotels, with the exception of Hadden Hall, will be at the disposal of delegates to the Northern Baptist Convention. Those who come without reservations will find ample room in the hotels, and will be well cared for.

There will be meetings of the Board of Promotion, the executive committee, and many other boards and conferences before the convention opens. Halls and committee rooms are to be furnished for these meetings free of charge. The program committee is preparing a program worthy of the occasion, and largely with speakers that have never appeared before the convention.

The Baptists of Atlantic City and the state of New Jersey join in extending an invitation to all Baptists of the Northern Baptist Convention to come to the finest convention city in America, and to what they believe will prove to be one of the most helpful conferences the Northern Baptists have ever enjoyed.

JOSEPH C. HAZEN, Orange, N. J.
Chairman of General Committee on Arrangements.

Delegates to Northern Baptist Convention

The Northern Baptist Convention will meet at Atlantic City, N. J., May 23 to May 29, inclusive. Delegates to the convention are of three classes:

1. Those appointed by Baptist churches, one delegate for each church and one additional delegate for every 100 members. Fractions of 100 are not considered.

2. Officers and members of the boards of managers of the cooperating organizations are ex-officio delegates.

3. All members of convention committees that are to report at Atlantic City are ex-officio members.

It is necessary for every delegate to present written credentials. Blank forms for credentials of delegates appointed by churches will be distributed through the secretaries of the state conventions to whom all applications for such forms should be made. Credentials for ex-officio delegates will be distributed by the corresponding secretary. A registration fee of $2 will be required from every delegate. These fees will pay the expenses of the convention meeting and also of the annual which will be sent to every registered delegate.

Secretaries of state conventions are requested to inform the corresponding secretary of the convention of the probable number of blank credential forms they will require. Members of churches who expect to attend the convention are requested to notify state convention secretaries of their purpose to do so.

The railroads have granted special rates which have already been announced in the denominational papers. Hotel rates will soon be announced in the denominational papers.

The First Church of Ogden, Utah

By Joseph Hudnut

On May 27, 1921, the following letter was received in the offices of the department of architecture of the Home Mission Society, from The First Baptist Church of Ogden, Utah:

"My dear Mr. Merrill: We are planning to erect a new meeting house here in Ogden to cost about $100,000. We wish it to be equipped for social work—a gymnasium, swimming pool, and social rooms—in addition to the room for worship. Have you any plans for such buildings that can be built for that amount? What will your services cost us? Thanking you, I am, very truly, L. A. Garrison (signed), Pastor."

The kind of help given to Ogden is described here, not because it is unique, but because it is typical of the help given to a large number of western churches.

Mr. Garrison asks in his letter for plans of churches that can be built for $100,000. Had Mr. Merrill replied by sending Dr. Garrison a portfolio of such plans, he would have rendered the church at Ogden a doubtful service. The experience of the department has proved no one fact more completely than that no stock plans, or ready-made plans are of any real value to a church intending to develop a plan of its own. The conditions are so varied in different parts of the country and in the many types of communities, that it scarcely ever happens that a church plan fitted to meet the conditions and needs of one locality, can possibly be used in another.

The kind of service which the department of architect renders is fitted to the local and special conditions of each particular church that applies to it for help. without thought of any general formula and without the least attempt at standardization. Every church comes as a fresh, living, human project—not one to be turned through a formal mill, but one to be intensively and individually studied, with a view to helping it toward a solution of its own special problems in the light of the wider experience and broader knowledge of a centralized organization which has behind it the entire resources of the church.

One of the surprising facts about the service rendered by the department is the small cost which it entails upon the local church. The fee of the department is 1 per cent of the total cost of the church building—an amount which does not by any means cover the cost of the service rendered, so that not one penny of missionary money received from the churches goes into the support of the department.

Yet even this 1 per cent of the cost does not constitute a real charge to the local church. This is true because the service rendered by the department is a kind of service which would ordinarily be rendered by the local architect. For that reason the architect, being relieved of this service, willingly reduces his fee by the 1 per cent which is paid to the department, so that in the end, the church receives, therefore, the highly specialized and efficient service of the department without any net increase in the total cost of the architectural service.

All these matters with regard to the department's service were explained to Dr. Garrison. Instead of sending Mr. Garrison a sheaf of plans, Mr. Merrill asked for complete facts and data regarding the project of the First Church of Ogden, its history and present conditions, the facts concerning the environment in which it was working, and facts regarding the site on which the proposed building was to be erected. Finally, it asked for the future program of the church: what the church intended to do for the further welfare of the people of Ogden by the maintenance of a more worthy place of worship, by undertaking a larger work in religious education, and by offering to Ogden the use of more ample facilities for recreational and social life.

After due consideration the Ogden Church signed the department's agreement form, and, the data requested in hand, the department immediately began a development of a preliminary plan for the new church.

It was found that the lot was small for the provision for all of the facilities and capacities which the church ought to have, so that very careful and economical planning was necessary in order to work out a building which could properly function within these narrow limits. The questions of light, air, and corridor circulation, in so small a space, proved to be exceedingly perplexing.

During the progress of the studies, which naturally occupied several weeks, Mr. Merrill was able to visit personally the city of Ogden and to sit in conference with Dr. Garrison and the building committee. Mr. Merrill, and other members of the department, are constantly making these personal visits to local churches which have asked for their help and advice.

Choosing an Architect

Another way in which the department was able to help the church in Ogden was in the selection of an architect. There are many architects who can build excellent secular buildings, but it is often difficult to find a man competent to assume the serious responsibility of church building. The department makes a special effort to search for such men in all parts of the country and to encourage churches to go to them for professional services. In the case of the church at Ogden, the department endorsed the selection of Mr. Slack W. Winburn, and this selection has proved to be a most happy one. Mr. Winburn's plans here shown are a direct development of the plans of the department, which has kept in touch intimately with these plans as they progressed in Mr. Winburn's office.

The building at Ogden stands out in contradistinction from the ordinary church architecture of Utah and surrounding states, which seems to have borrowed the Mormon idea to the extent of making it necessary to read the church name in order to know that it is not a Mormon meeting house. The First Baptist Church in Ogden will be known to be a Christian church as far as it can be seen.

Another grave danger in modern church architecture, not confined to Utah and vicinity, is that the building may have a secular, rather than an ecclesiastical appearance.

It was for these reasons that the department provided for a spire, a feature recognized by the local church as both beautiful and appropriate. Slender, and not as expensive as many suppose, and delicately proportioned, the spire will rise above the roofs of Ogden as a symbol of Christian faith and aspiration, and signal the presence of that faith as far as its bells and chimes can be heard.

The CHRISTIAN CENTURY

"THE GREATEST JOURNALISTIC FORCE working for social and international righteousness coming from any press of the Christian Church,"—so writes Bishop Francis J. McConnell, concerning The Christian Century. "The ablest and most influential religious paper in America," says the Westminster Gazette (London), of this journal of religion. "The most discussed religious periodical in America,"—comes from many sources. Thus The Christian Century is regarded throughout the English speaking world as the voice of the awakening social conscience in twentieth century Christianity. It has taken a unique position as the journalistic common denominator of American Christian leadership.

We are now undertaking a program, for the next thirty days, of broadcasting the message of The Christian Century to ten thousand additional readers — thoughtful churchmen and churchwomen in all communions throughout the land. Specifically speaking, we have devised a plan which will make it easy for ten thousand people to "tune in" and enjoy the stimulating discussion of religion and the interpretation of world events from the Christian point of view, afforded by the weekly issues of The Christian Century.

OUR SLOGAN FOR THE SPRIN

Ten Thousand New

THE CHRIST

DURING the past year the subscription list of The Christian Century has been fully doubled. We desire to cap the season by securing 10,000 additional new readers during the next thirty days. With 10,000 Christian leaders, lay and clerical, added to our present far-reaching subscription list, there will not be a nook or corner of the American church and of American public opinion that will not be influenced by the message of this journal of religion.

Following its characteristic purpose, The Christian Century will soon publish a series of notable articles by the leading exponents of social Christianity in our American churches. Such authoritative and brilliant writers as Professor Charles A. Ellwood, Dr. Albion W. Small, Bishop Francis J. McConnell, Dr. Alva W. Taylor, Dr. Samuel Z. Batten, Professor Harry F. Ward, Dr. A. E. Holt, Professor Ross L. Finney, and others will challenge the pagan motives, false ideas, principles and presuppositions of our social order with a view to the discovery of a truly Christian way of life for modern men. Among the questions they will consider are these:

Is Nationalism Compatible with the Principles of Jesus?
Does a Tariff Violate Christian Ethics?
Is American Business Christian or Pagan?
Is the Ownership of Land Property Morally Defensible?
Is the Ownership of Capital in Itself a Clear Title to Income from Capital?
Does the Earth and its Resources Belong to Those Who "Grab First"?
Is Competition in Business Justifiable from a Christian Viewpoint?
Does the Principle of Competition in Business Really Bring Peace and Prosperity?
Are Profits the Legitimate First Concern of Industry?
Is Labor a Commodity?
Has Labor No Claim Beyond the Agreed Wage?
Has Religion Anything to Do With Industry?
Is War Inevitable?

SPEAKING OF THE CHRISTIAN CENTURY

"Wherever I go among men, east and west, I find they are reading your journal."—Rev. Charles E. Jefferson.

"Here is a journal that puts first things first and leaves the petty things far out on the circumference."—Pres. W. H. P. Faunce, Brown University.

"I consider The Christian Century the most promising journalistic venture in the field of organized religion."—Prof. Harry F. Ward.

"There are some things that a man cannot get along without in these days. The Christian Century is one of them."—Pres. Ozora S. Davis, Chicago Theological Seminary.

"The Christian Century is fearlessly sounding forth the truth that America in general and the Christian church in particular need to hear."—Dr. Sherwood Eddy.

"I want the editor of The Christian Century to know that I am back of him with all my power."—Edwin Markham.

"The Christian Century is the one publication which comes to my home that gets a reading straight through upon its arrival."—Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, Fifth Ave. Baptist Church, New York.

Gentlemen:

It is hard to write you concerning your magazine without being effusive. My heart fairly leaps on Mondays when I see it on my desk. There is hope for the Christian world if only such leadership as that provided in your paper could be extended so as to touch a sufficient number of ministers and laymen.

I am wondering how best to secure a large number of subscriptions in the families of our own church and community. Please give me the benefit of any experience in this matter. Let me know how we can put this thing over together. I would give anything if it had only been possible to have the assurance that a number of the families in our church had read your sterling weekly for the last few months.

Enthusiastically yours,

PAPINI'S LIFE OF CHRIST

By GIOVANNI PAPINI

(Translated from the Italian by Dorothy Canfield Fisher)

WHO IS GIOVANNI PAPINI? He is the foremost man of letters in Italy; he has been hailed as a master by Bergson, and was a friend and disciple of William James; he has written novels, poems, plays, essays, and has studied all the systems of philosophy. Furthermore, he was a hater rather than a lover of his kind, an anarchist, atheist, nihilist. But now he turns, in Saul-of-Tarsus fashion, to the simple faith of Christ. His new book has been hailed in Europe as has no other book written within a decade. It has been translated into a dozen languages.

Here is the one book of the year that every minister and thoughtful Christian layman will have to buy. (Price of book, $3.50, plus 14 cents postage.)

Three Other Great Books You Should Have

THE RECONSTRUCTION OF RELIGION—By Charles A. Ellwood. Readers in seventeen states were recently canvassed by a leading bookseller as to religious books of late and current publication found most helpful. The volume most favored was the book by Professor Ellwood. This work points a way out of the confusion in which the religious world now finds itself. (Price of book, $2.25, plus 12 cents postage.)

THE WORLD'S GREAT RELIGIOUS POETRY—Caroline M. Hill, editor. This work, just from the press, brings into one volume the poems which are constantly called for in sermon-making; and it is furthermore the finest book for devotional reading published in many years. Dr. Frank Crane says, "My advice to ministers and church people everywhere is to get it at once." (Price, $5.00, plus 15 cents postage.)

THE NEW CONCORDANCE TO THE AMERICAN REVISED BIBLE—For a score of years you have waited for a concordance which you could use with your American Revised Bible. Here it is, just from the press. Dr. M. C. Hazard has done every Bible student great service in preparing such a book. You will buy it eventually. Why not now? (Price, $5.00, plus 15 cents postage.)

ANY OF THESE BOOKS WILL BE MAILED YOU AT ONCE, UPON YOUR ORDER.

NOTE: We can supply you with any book published, now in print. Watch the columns of The Christian Century for full information on the latest and best books on religion.

Another Record of Recent Denominational Progress

The Best Years of Life Before Them

"OUT in the open air, in the big court and on the banks around the stone baptistry in our little valley here in Kakchieh, China, eight or nine hundred people—possibly a third of them Christians—were gathered to witness the solemn rite of baptism. Potted flowers bloomed around the edge of the basin, and the picture was completed by the score or so of baby faces which peered wonderingly through the blossoms close to the rim of the pool. Then the candidates came forward and we had the happiness of seeing fifty-nine young men and women, boys and girls, confess before the world their determination to follow Christ as Master and Lord. Only one or two of the fifty-nine have even reached middle age; the others have the best part of a lifetime before them to honor God here in this country where he is so sorely needed." —From a letter from Miss Abbie Sanderson, of Swatow.

Not Spectacular, But Growing Steadily

During the first six months of the year 1922, according to a report from Missionary J. E. Geil, there has been a marked progress on the Banza Manteke field of the Foreign Mission Society in Belgian Congo. There were 450 baptisms and seventy restorations of fellowship. Twenty church members died during this period and fifty-six were expelled, thus making a total net gain of nearly 450 in the membership of the Baptist churches on that field. Mr. Geil reports: "On the whole our work is progressing well. There is nothing spectacular about it, but a steady growth is taking place in all parts of the field."

Nearly Seventy New Buildings

During the last three years, the Foreign Mission Society has been able to supply on its 110 mission fields nearly seventy new buildings. Of these, nine are church buildings, thus furnishing new houses of worship for people so recently won from heathenism, and twenty-seven of the buildings are homes for missionaries, thus replacing inadequate temporary shelters or relieving overcrowded conditions where two or more families had to occupy the same house. The remaining buildings include six dormitories for students, five hospitals, a dispensary and several hostels. Many of these buildings have been provided out of funds which were specifically designated and could not be credited as New World Movement gifts. Some of them were made possible through the contributions on the Layman's Victory Campaign which ended in 1919, and others came from the interest and generosity of friends, who wished to have their gifts counted in addition to regular New World Movement contributions.

Not a Cent From America

Developments in self-support on foreign mission fields are always of deep significance and great encouragement. A most recent case is that of a new gymnasium for the 400 or more boys at the Cushing High School at Rangoon, Burma, maintained by the Foreign Mission Society. This gymnasium is a modern steel construction, and in size and equipment, will be one of the finest of its kind in all Burma. The most interesting thing about it is that not a cent of its cost will need to be provided from mission contributions in America, as the construction will be financed entirely by gifts from the people of Burma.

Floors Covered With Mud

At Sandoway, Burma, an isolated station, the missionary residence was poorly located and in bad condition. The land was under water in the rainy season, the thatched roof was rotten and the spiders often dropped through to the floors, which were covered with mud from the rains. It was not a very interesting place for a missionary to live. For five years the missionary waited for a new site and a new bungalow. The answer has come in the gift of $5,000 made in memory of a father.

More Students for the Ministry

At the Baptist Theological Seminary in Ramapatnam, South India, missionaries have had to add six rooms for dormitory purposes in order to take care of the increased enrolment. The student body numbers ninety-five, compared with eighty-two during the preceding year. The present enrolment includes fifty-seven men and thirty-eight women. For fifty years, this seminary has been training hundreds of Telugu preachers, the majority of whom are today in active service as pastors of the 182 churches in South India.

For the Women of Europe

A new work has been begun in Prague as a direct result of the Jubilee. Madame Kolator, whom many will remember as one of the foreign guests of the Woman's Society, raised funds from Czecho-Slovak Baptist churches in the United States to house an orphanage in that city. Madame Kolator's salary and the equipment and upkeep of the orphanage were provided by a special gift, and the first year of this experiment in international friendship and evangelism has already been completed. The orphanage is named the Peabody-Montgomery Home. Another venture bearing the same name, is the Peabody-Montgomery Hospital, recently established at Lodz, Poland. This is under the direction of Miss Martha Wenske (also a Jubilee guest) and her coworkers. Another gift has made it possible to secure a school and Christian center for girls and women in Esthonia.

Ninety-Two More Missionaries Since 1919

In 1919 at the beginning of the New World Movement there were 755 missionaries including women in the service of the Foreign Mission Society and the Woman's Society. At the present time, 847 consecrated men and women are reported in foreign service, an increase of ninety-two during the last three years. These have cared for some of the vital needs but missionaries on all the fields are still in need of reenforcements. Those in service are all primarily evangelists, though many of them engage in educational, medical and industrial work. Their chief aim, however, is to win men and women to personal allegiance to Jesus Christ.

The Foreign Mission Society's Deficit

Many questions have been asked as to the chief reason for the accumulated deficit in the work of the Foreign Mission Society, which amounted to $914,-22.50 at the beginning of the present fiscal year. There are several reasons to account for this. In the fiscal year following the Denver Convention, no customary special efforts were made to close successfully the fiscal year, because it was felt such efforts would interfere with the subscription drive of the New World Movement. During the same year because of the rapidly increased cost of living, the board increased missionary salaries. That same year witnessed also a tremendous rise in the cost of international exchange, particularly in the transfer of American currency into Chinese currency. Furthermore, the convention extended the fiscal year by one month, having it end April 30, instead of March 31 as heretofore, thereby involving thirteen months of expenditure, but without guaranteeing a corresponding increase in income. These reasons accounted for the deficit at the end of that year, of $808,000, which, in 1921 was reduced to $689,000 but which was increased to $914,252.50 last year because of the great shrinkage in payment on pledges. Deficits are unpopular; nevertheless the fact remains that this deficit represents money spent for the preaching of the gospel, the education and training of native Christians and their leaders, the maintenance of hospitals and the treatment of the sick, and the passage and salaries of missionaries and the administration of the entire enterprise. Because of this deficit, appropriations had to be seriously reduced this year. It depends on gifts this year, whether or not such appropriations must be reduced still further next year.

Assam Christians Help Reduce the Deficit

One of the most encouraging letters received at the headquarters of the society in recent months came from a church in the faraway hill country of Assam, the members of which are few in number and poor in worldly goods. The letter stated: "We have learned with deep sorrow of the heavy debt now resting upon all of us who are loyal members of the great Baptist brotherhood in Christ. As a small token of our appreciation of what our friends in America and our loving missionaries in Assam have done for the bringing of the knowledge of the light of the world to us and to our countrymen, we beg to enclose our check for 150 rupees (about $50) with the hope that it may in a slight way help to lighten the burden resting upon your heads at headquarters in New York City."

The Certainty of Persecution

A residence for the missionaries has been erected at Kaying and the funds have been provided for a new girls' school building at Kityang. The school is now housed in an old worn-out building and needs new equipment greatly. One of the missionaries who lives in the new residence at Kaying, writes as follows: "One girl came to us with her face shining and tears in her eyes, saying, 'I have made up my mind and I want to be baptized.' We knew something of the struggle she must have gone through to come to that conclusion. Her heart had long been ready but probably no girl in the school would have to meet more bitter persecution than she. When this dear girl came before the church, one of the deacons said, on learning her name, 'If she is from that clan there is little need of questioning her; if she wasn't a sincere believer she would not dare face the persecution that will surely be inflicted on her.'"

Increase in Self-Support

Recent years have witnessed a remarkable increase in self-support on the mission fields of the Foreign Mission Society. In Belgian Congo the native Christians have contributed three times as much as four years ago, while the Japanese Baptists in five years have increased their gifts more than threefold. In East China a great model school has been founded in Dinghage, built and endowed almost entirely by Christian and non-Christian Chinese. Out of 1889 churches in the ten mission fields of the denomination in Africa and Asia today, 1114 or 59 per cent each are entirely self-supporting. This is in harmony with the policy of the Foreign Mission Society which seeks, as one of its great objectives, the establishing of self-supporting and self-propagating Christian churches on the foreign field.

The India of the Present

Very little is the house of the Indian villager and very wide is his universe.

BY GERTRUDE EMERSON

MORE and more, as one tries to understand India, the conviction grows that nothing is haphazard; nothing is without an explanation to be found in an inexorable tradition, rooted in dead centuries. And this tradition is an embodiment of an essentially religious attitude toward life. Long before Buddhism flowered and died on the stem, men in India were reciting hymns of praise to the great forces of nature deified as gods of fire and rain, wind and sun and sky, hymns which represent the earliest literature of the Aryan people from which we ourselves are sprung. Still today, in spite of all the later developments of a Hindu pantheon, the rise and fall of dynasties, the political changes inherent in foreign invasions, these identical hymns are recited by countless thousands of Hindus. India's fundamental unity lies in an unbroken recognition of a spiritual order in the universe, outlasting wordly phenomena; in the aspiration manifest in all India philosophic thought toward an identification of the self with spiritual forces; in the emphasis in Indian social thought on obedience to a system of moral law. Out of the answers that have been found and discarded and found again, in India's quest for knowledge of the supreme truth, Indian civilization has slowly been built up.

India has produced many great philosophers, but it is not to the philosophers, after all, that one must turn for an appreciation of the essential quality of Indian life. Only the fused experience of millions can reveal that; and against the millions, I was one, and alien. At the bathing-ghats of Benares, I saw, as every one may see, countless multitudes of Hindus gathered to be healed of sickness, to be cleansed of sin and defilement, to die, that in their last immersion in the sacred river, they might come forth in purity, as they believed, and enter straight into heaven. Slowly I was poled up and down the Ganges. I saw the funeral pyres being lighted and smoke curling lazily upward. I saw attendants bringing bodies, wrapped like mummies and laid on stretchers, down the steps of the burning-ghats; dipping them into the water; letting them rest with the feet immersed and the face cloth thrown back: for the dead are fortunate, they think, who have their last look on the sacred river. A little farther down the stream, the living were standing up to their waists in the water, or resting after their ablutions under the great woven umbrellas, like pavilions, scattered along the ghats, or casting orange marigolds, one by one, as offering upon the surface of the muddy river. But temperament alone decides, perhaps, whether one shall see the bright rays of the rising sun illuminating the red stone palace of the Maharaja of Benares and gilding the domes of the many temples, the fluttering doves, the crowds, the color, the motion, the life; or whether one shall remember chiefly the superstition and degradation and filth, the unsanitary mingling of the dead and the living; or most marvel that here, as perhaps in no other place in the world, men clasp their hands in worship to the rising sun and a great river, and repeat prayers to them as gods.

India is the saddest land I have ever seen. Yet I am not sure that the material wealth of my own country, nor a philosophy synonymous with "all modern conveniences," has produced much fundamental happiness for us of the West, nor peace of mind. Multiplicity of comforts does not answer the need of the soul for significant beauty, nor teach adjustment to life, unconditioned by material resources. In our eagerness to produce, we have found little time to possess our souls. In spite of India's failures to meet the tests by which we commonly measure a given state of civilization, India has a perception of life that is spiritually significant. It is the saint and the ascetic, after all, who are the living ideal of India's millions. What other country patiently supports, as India, over a million sadhus, who have "renounced" life as a great illusion? What country, except India, would have allowed Gandhi, with his preaching of self-discipline, of nonviolence, of fasting and prayer, to become the national leader? The masses of India are rich in their unconquerable love of the marvelous, out of which they fashion the ceaseless miracles of their gods. They have hallowed their own land with the beauty of imagination. Everywhere are the sacred spots about which myth and legend cling, and the humblest peasant in India may, and does, become a pilgrim to the sacred shrines of his inheritance. Through the objective expression of religious feeling in past ages, art is closely interwoven with the threads of all life in India. The Indian villager is not shut in by the mud walls of his hut. Very little is his house, and very wide his universe. Without is the forever dominant and ruthless nature of the tropics, enlarging the world of his individual experience beyond the limits of the horizon. He is the plaything of great forces, such as torrential rains and a merciless sun. For months in the wet season, he cannnot work; he becomes the possessor of infinite time. He is rich beyond the mighty of earth. From below, as from above, Indian thought slowly converges and takes form; not accomplishment, not progress, not happiness, is the purpose of life, but the working out of a conscious relationship with spiritual truth. Out of narrow circumstance, the illiterate Indian finds escape in his mystic heart, where dwell the gods whom he worships.

The educational leaders in India today are uniting in an effort to reform many institutions that have grown out of debased Hinduism and a rigid form of society. They are borrowing from the West the Christian ideal of social service and are losing something of their old sense of isolated individualism. But not all change is progress, and Indian philosophy has so far wisely been unwilling to forego its vision of an ideal peace and order. The greatest minds of India believe that no product of western energy, and no expression of our mechanistic genius, will solve the problem of the old questing for spiritual wisdom.—In March issue of Asia.

World Alliance Credentials

The constitution of the Baptist World Alliance contains these clauses:

"Membership: Any general union, convention, or association of Baptist churches, or conference of native churches and missionaries or general foreign missionary society, shall be eligible for membership in the Alliance.

"Representation for general meeting: Each constituent body of the Alliance may appoint messengers to the general meeting from its own resident members on a basis to be determined by the executive committee."

The Northern Baptist Convention is entitled to send delegates. The executive committee of the convention has authorized the corresponding secretary to issue credentials to all members of Baptist churches cooperating with the Northern Baptist Convention who desire to attend the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm, Sweden, July 21-27, 1923. Those who wish these credentials should write directly to the corresponding secretary, Rev. W. C. Bitting, 5109 Waterman Avenue, St. Louis, Mo., enclosing stamped and addressed envelope for the credentials which will be promptly forwarded. All applications should also state the Baptist Church of which the applicant is a member.

International Sunday School Lesson for April 22

MOSES: LIBERATOR AND LAWGIVER

Lesson: Ex. 2:1-19:25; 32:1-33:23; Deut. 34:1-8.

Golden Text: Exodus 14:13.

Introductory

With the death of Joseph the book of Genesis ends. The book of Exodus begins with the birth of Moses. Exodus means departure. Whereas Genesis treats of individuals, Exodus gives an account of a nation—the Israelites. There is no biblical record of the 400 years that transpire between the ending of Genesis and the beginning of Exodus. During the famine period Joseph had comfortably settled his people in Goshen, the richest pasture land of Egypt, and there they had thrived until there came to the throne a ruler who "knew not Joseph." Then the Hebrews were little better than slaves to the Egyptians. To them came Moses as deliverer.

The Lesson

Today's lesson takes up a critical moment in the history of the Israelites. They were encamped on the seashore. Pharaoh thought that by sending his host upon them they would be trapped with the sea in front of them and the enemy behind them. They were afraid and cried unto God for help. Moses was calm with a mighty faith. "Fear ye not," he urged. "Stand still and see the salvation of Jehovah, which he will work for you today; for the Egyptians which ye have seen today, ye shall see them again no more forever. For Jehovah will fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace." God's command to Moses was to act, to stretch forth his hand and divide the sea so that the children of Israel might pass over on dry ground. Then the pillar of cloud which had before this been in front of the Israelites was shifted to the rear, so that it appeared to the Egyptians as a cloud and darkness, hiding the Israelites from them, while to the Israelites it still gave light. Moses stretched his hand out over the sea "and Jehovah caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all the night, and made the sea dry land, and the waters were divided." With a wall of water on both sides of them, the Israelites passed safely through on dry land to the other side. The Egyptians tried to follow, but they became panic stricken and confused among themselves, and the waters overwhelmed them.

Leading Thoughts

1. There is a time to pray but "faith without works is dead." 2. "Men of morals admire Moses because he put the laws of right and wrong in form so clear that they still hold in all courts of justice."—Newton Dwight Hillis. 3. To walk the highway of life a man must have vision and then live in absolute and unquestioning obedience to that vision.

The Member Who Is Always Late

By Edward Moore

There was a ring of annoyance — justifiable, as I ascertained later — in Mrs. Allan's voice, as she stood discussing one of her difficulties with one or two of the executives of her class after school.

"I wish somebody would put a bomb under her once," she said. "She walks in here on Sunday when we are discussing an item of business, and has to be told, for her sole benefit, what it's all about. Next Sunday she won't come in till I get nicely into the lesson, and when the rest of you begin to talk about it she doesn't know what theme we are following. She is splendid in other things, and one can't help liking her, but——"

It isn't the wisest thing in the category for a teacher to discuss the failings of one of her class-members with others, even the executives, unless the difficulty is one which affects the class generally. In this case it was. And I could quite appreciate the lady's indignation. I had gone on invitation to address the class that day on a pet subject of my own, and "she"—a decidedly prepossessing young lady, who seemed to be able or inclined to dress rather better than the other members—had come in perhaps fifteen minutes after the opening of the session, when I was trying specially to get hold of the members' interest, and with an air of "I am specially permitted to do this," walked unconcernedly up to a vacant chair near the front of the room and settled down with a sweetly attentive smile.

Is there an adult class without at least one member of this type? If yours is so blessed, be thankful, for you are one of few.

Such people exist in business, in collegiate circles, indeed, everywhere. It is unfortunately a too prevalent characteristic. And the peculiar fact about such people is that, as the habit grows they seem to develop a superior sort of attitude, as though they, for some special reason, should be allowed to take such liberties systematically without being in any way disregarded by the other members. Analyzed, it is, of course, purely a matter of carelessness and thoughtlessness.

Of course, there may be legitimate cases of systematic lateness where home conditions prevent promptness. But every teacher knows his or her pupils well enough to recognize these. In such cases, too, it is a kindly thing, if the conditions are such as to permit, to comment occasionally on the delinquent's faithfulness, and in doing so explain or refer to the reason for his or her lateness.

The others should not be tolerated in any class—for long. But what, you ask, are you to do with them?

Several methods have been tried, all with some measure of success, one proving effective in one case, but failing in another.

One teacher I know, who gets really close to her young lady class-members, makes a point of finding a reference in the lesson occasionally to the sin of dilatoriness and quite frankly mentions as an example the very thing we are discussing. If this fails, she says, she speaks to the offender kindly but directly, explaining that she does it for the good of the whole body.

A man teacher who has run against the same problem tells me he has cured several cases of it by calling for several Sundays for the offender on his way to school and taking him along. One would think that if this were not convenient, the same plan could be worked out by having a dependable worker who lived in the same locality do this. Of course, again, one would have to be careful in utilizing this plan. A spirited man would see through the dodge in a moment and might resent it enough to make him get out of the way about the time that call was to be expected and keep away from the class altogether.

The other plan, and the one which seems to present the real and a final solution of the difficulty, is to have the dilatory one elected to an office which requires his presence at the class early. Make him an official welcomer, or, as one class puts it, "glad-hand artist," librarian, or recorder of attendance, and make him feel that that job is important enough to need being well done. Nine times out of ten, when responsibility is placed, particularly in an organization where life and vigor are manifest, the nominee will measure up. I have seen case after case where the mere fact of giving a class member something to do, something in which he or she could feel a personal responsibility, has worked wonders in the creation of class interest. Try it and see.—The Men's Class.

Dr. Robert R. Moton, who became principal of Tuskegee institute seven years ago, stated that during that period the enrolment was increased from 1,600 to 2,100 and the average attendance from 1,100 to about 1,850. And in this same period a debt of $185,000 was wiped out. Doctor Moton attributes this gain to the loyalty of the American people to Booker T. Washington, founder of the institute, Gen. Samuel C. Armstrong and Dr. Hollis B. Frissell.

This Color Warranted Not to Run

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

"CATCH me staying another minute!" muttered Piney to herself. "Catch me pegging away at another lesson! Catch me toting another dish or spreading another bed! I'm through! I just naturally 'bominate working, and can I stay here and not work? So just you catch me staying another minute to hear folks say: 'Piney, got your lessons studied yet? Piney, done your housework yet? Piney, are the supper tables set?' Huh, catch me putting up with it any longer," and Piney flung her school books into a far corner, and jumped to her feet. "I'm going back home, that's what I'm going to do! I'm going back to my mammy's little log cabin—'deed I am! And when I get to that little log cabin I'm going to sit me down in the shade for forty days and forty nights and not lift my fingers to do a stroke of work. 'Deed I am! Not read a word, or spread a bed, nor tote a dish! I'm sick and tired of being bossed . . ." and still mumbling, she began gathering her few belongings into a bundle.

Perhaps teachers have a sixth sense,—some little seismograph needle in their mentality that registers the earthquakes which are shocking their pupils; or perhaps, instead of intuition, it was practical common sense which took Miss Lucy to Piney's door.

At the sound of the knock, Piney looked around the little room in a frenzy of haste: where, oh where could she hide her bulky bundle in the twinkling of an eye? Just as she was whisking it out of sight under the bed, Miss Lucy walked in, and if her quick eye noted the curious emptiness of the room, Miss Lucy herself gave not the slightest sign.

"Piney," she said, in her cheerfullest voice, "I am in trouble, my dear. I find I haven't a pair of black stockings to my name; evidently when I left home I forgot to pack them; and the weather has been so warm all this term that I've worn white clothes entirely. But today is so cold, I simply must have black stockings to go with my warmer clothes, and have them for this very evening, too; but I cannot go down-town myself, so I'm wondering if you would go on an errand to the store for me?"

"Oh, I'd just admire to go for you," breathed Piney, really flattered at the beautiful importance of providing Miss Lucy with the necessities of life.

"Thank you very much, my dear. Here's the money—five dollars, so count the change carefully, won't you? And get me black lisle thread, please. One pair; they will probably be about fifty cents."

"Yes, Miss Lucy!" smiled Piney, and in another minute found herself alone in the room with the five-dollar bill, her conscience, and that bundle under the bed.

"Tell you what," whispered Piney to herself, "'stead of walking all those forty miles home, I could buy me a railroad ticket with this five dollars. 'Deed I could! And after I bought me that ticket, I could afford to fetch home a fine present for mammy and a fine present for Aunt Eliza and a perfectly scrumptious fine present for Sapphronia Jane! 'Deed I could! Wouldn't they open their eyes to see Piney coming home so grand and all? Reckon I can hear them this minute saying: 'Piney's got to be a right smart girl; does a powerful heap o' good to a colored girl to send her up to that there Baptist school. 'Deed it does! Piney's so got up in the world by eddication that she's much too grand to work; oh yes, she just sits in the shade for forty days and forty nights till she gets herself all rested up."

It was the pleasantest kind of a day dream, but so strong was Piney's love for Miss Lucy that she decided she really wanted to get those stockings first. "Miss Lucy, she ain't got no black stockings, and there's something special doing tonight—lots of folks from town invited out here to meet our faculty; 'twouldn't do for Miss Lucy not to be gotten up proper in black stockings, no indeedy! I'll just get her some black ones, 'fore I slip off home, secret-like."

So Piney went to the dry-goods store, but all on account of a label on the stocking box she could not bring herself to run away after all. For in enormously big type the label said: "BLACK: THIS COLOR WARRANTED NOT TO RUN." And as if one box with one label were not enough, the clerk brought down other boxes with other labels, until every single one of them twinkled its letters at Piney in saucy warning: "Black! Black! Black! warranted not to run—to run—to run!"

With an exasperated grunt Piney turned several of the boxes slyly the other end around, but would you believe it? Even those opposite ends announced with amazing distinctness: "Black. This color warranted not to run."

"Poof! Poof!" snapped Piney with grim determination, "guess I won't be dictated to by any silly old red stocking box!" So she hurriedly selected a pair that the clerk recommended, and after paying for them pocketed the change and turned away from the tell-tale labels. Yet through the wrapping-paper she could tell by the "feel" that Miss Lucy's stockings were in a box . . . and in imagination she still saw the eight words that decorated each end. As she pattered along the street her very heels clicked down to the absurd rhythm of: This color—warranted—not to run—to run—to run—

Then the four dollars and a half in change took up the tune: not to run—not to run—warranted—warranted—And before she knew it the carts rumbled it at her, the motors honked it at her, even the people's voices as they passed seemed to murmur: "Black! black! color warranted not to run"—until you might almost think it was a conspiracy.

Certain it is that Piney felt weak in the knees. "Guess I dasn't run off today, anyhow!" she muttered, "Guess those stockings have got me."

So when she reached the school, she hurried to Miss Lucy's room like some one wanting to drop a hot potato. "Here they are!" she cried breathlessly, flinging them down, "Fast black, Miss Lucy! Warranted not to run, Miss Lucy! And here's the change, four dollars and a half."

"They're exactly what I would have chosen myself," said Miss Lucy delightedly, "thank you a dozen times, Piney. I hope the little outing did you good. I thought at noon you seemed a bit glum and depressed—did you manage to walk it off?"

Piney gave an exasperated sigh: "'Deed I didn't walk it off, Miss Lucy, I walked it on, worser than ever!"

"Oh!" cried Miss Lucy in that very special sorry tone of voice that invites the telling of secrets; so Piney blurted out the whole tale—her hatred of work, the bundle under the bed ready for flight that night, the temptation to steal Miss Lucy's money, and then that ridiculous red stocking box with its staring white label.

"Guess I don't show up as a heroine," sighed Piney.

"I don't know about that," Miss Lucy said quietly, "you've been big enough and courageous enough to crush your weaker desires, haven't you? You've taken a motto and decided to live up to it! That's heroic, it seems to me. And we white folks must remember what hard obstacles you black people must continually overcome, dear; for we come from long generations of people who love to work—it's in our very blood. For when we are little, even our play is imitation of grown-up work; our sports and games are work; our school is work. We like to do things to win. We expect it! But you, in your sleepy hot little plantation hamlet—oh how well I know that life is a lazy basking in the shade! So that you must first overcome the laziness, then the poverty, then the ignorance. It takes a heap of grit! Every girl in this school has to exert that grit; I'm so proud of you all. But Piney, this very year we were so crowded that dozens and dozens of girls had to be turned away from school; yet here you were, not appreciating the fact that you had this splendid opportunity, almost like a present in your hand. Better than any five-dollar bill in the land!"

"Yes ma'am, Miss Lucy!" said Piney, with new enthusiasm. And it was as if she saw herself suddenly for the first time; or rather, as if she had found herself for the first time! "Guess those Baptists up North that gave me this school wouldn't expect me to go skeedaddling off home, would they? Guess it wouldn't look well at the end of the school year if you had to report that Piney ran home, she did! Lazy little Piney. Well, you just watch me from now on, Miss Lucy! And please, I have a favor!"

"What is that?" Miss Lucy asked.

"Please, I'd like to have the label off your box—for keeps. I'll tuck it in my mirror, Miss Lucy!"

So from that day to this, whenever anything hard comes into Piney's life she hurries to her looking-glass, and while she sees her dear black face with one eye, the other eye is reading the motto which is shaping her whole life: "Black! This color is warranted not to run."

A Guardian Angel for Twenty-four Hours

UNDER the above suggestive title, our Woman's Foreign Mission Society has issued a free leaflet which ought to be in the hands of every Baptist woman during this month of April, for it gives, in dollars and cents, the operating budget of the society translated into "days and hours of human life." It is a lovely little document to put into the hands of our girls and young women, and only this week a World Wide Guild group—after reading it aloud in unison for five minutes—was moved to pledge over $149 in the next five minutes toward the Continuation Campaign! In order that all our women may know of this leaflet we give excerpts herewith. The cover is decorated with a yellow clock face, in the center of which stands a guardian angel with outspread hands blessing the little children of the world. One is reminded in looking at it of the saying: "God did not make heathen, but little children." Attractive pictures decorate the inner side of the folder also, and these are the guardianships which your gift enables you to share:

"Your gift of $2.20 may mean that you are the guardian angel of one of our missionaries in India, China, Congo or the Philippines for twenty-four hours, for that is the amount of her salary for one day.

"$2.47 means twenty-four hours of rest at home for one of our missionaries.

"$2.60 guards the salary of one of our missionaries in Japan for twenty-four hours.

"College girls in the Orient will be the leaders of their own women folk. $3.04 is our share in the maintenance for one day of four union colleges.

"$7.81—Think of it!—keeps open all our schools, Bible teaching, Sunday schools in dark Africa for twenty-four bright hours.

"Sinclair Orphanage, girls' schools and other work for women and children in Bengal-Orissa, may be supported for $10.25 a day.

"West China—where women and children have heard so little about Christ—needs only $13.04 for a day's support of our mission work there.

"In South China, $19.96 takes care of our Bible school, hospitals for women, girls' schools, etc., for one day.

"Girls in the Philippines can get an education in the government schools but they need our guidance to find Christ. $20.08 means one day's work there.

"Interest on the debt takes $27.39 a day.

"Schools of mothercraft—where wives learn to make Christian homes—and hospitals, schools, and all the evangelistic work that is combined with them, are carried on for twenty-four hours for $32.92, in East China.

"Assam requires $44.64 for all the work for women and girls for a day.

"Burma—the home of Judson College and of our fine girls' schools that have been called "one of the greatest forces for leavening and elevating the home and individual life of Burma"—needs $83.08 each day for carrying on our schools, Bible teaching, and other mission work.

"The opportunities for the evangelization of South India are greater than ever before. $99.95 is the South India mission allowance for one day.

"Many of the finest girls of Japan are begging for a Christian education. $129.80 a day helps thousands.

"$1,091.55 pays one day's share of the debt.

"All our mission work in ten foreign fields, including the missionaries' salaries, their ocean passage and the home expenses necessary to make their work possible—ALL the work of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission society is maintained for one day for $1,376.24."

The Young Reserves

Dear Young Reserves:

Our column has shrunk very small this week because next week it will probably be quite immense, provided your "Dollar Hill Contest Poems" reach me in time, for they will all be printed on the grown-ups' page! In case there are not enough received for the next issue, we will have to wait another week, but in any case you will surely not mind being squeezed into this small space today when we shall suddenly become so important soon. And, as a matter of fact, the story about "This Color Warranted Not to Run" really ought to interest you all, whatever your age; also I am certain that the Guardian Angel will appeal to you, because where is there a Baptist boy or girl who cannot earn $2.20, and thus turn into a Guardian Angel for twenty-four hours? You may have until the last week in April to earn money for our Continuation Campaign; here are some of the ways in which you can earn the money:

(1) Rake lawns and plant grass seed.
(2) Plant flower-beds for persons who do not care to do the stooping and kneeling themselves.
(3) Collect old newspapers, old magazines and old rubbers to sell to the rag-man who gives the best price for such things.
(4) Help a neighbor houseclean, by cleaning out the cellar, washing screens, carrying them down from attic, etc.
(5) Taking care of a neighbor's small children while she goes shopping.
(6) Offering to wash all dishes, dust, etc., etc., on Saturday. Then here is a letter along that very line:

Dear Miss Applegarth:

"I cannot write poems very well, so maybe you will not want to print this verse. But I love the little horses climbing up Dollar Hill and I am filling their banners with dimes. This is the way I earn the dimes: I clean the silver for Mrs. Sanders. She is our neighbor. She has little children, so on Saturdays I sew on buttons for her and do all the mending I can. I can't do difficult patches but her children are too little for big holes yet." [What perfect dears these little Sanders are, not to make BIG holes until they get old enough to mend them themselves!—M. T. A.]

Very lovingly yours,

ROBERTA MARY RAND.

New York.

If any of you have earned money won't you write to tell how you did it?—M. T. A.

Topic for April 22

TRAINED FOR LEADERSHIP
Ex. 3:7-12; 4:10-12

The scripture passages given above deal with the call of Moses to the leadership of the children of Israel. By reason of his training he was equipped for the task and yet his excuses sound thoroughly modern. We are not so concerned today about the way in which men were called to leadership several thousand years ago. We are tremendously interested in the call that comes to the men and women of today. Life is so varied and complex as over against the comparatively simple life of other days that there is constantly being demanded a thoroughly trained leadership in mind and spirit.

The conditions of the world as we know them now did not happen over night. They are the results of streams of influence setting in many years ago. We are indeed a "children of the far past" and we have inherited some of the maladjustments as well as some of the worth-while contributions of other days.

Naturally the eyes of the world are searching for that leadership which will lift us out of our situation into more helpful attitudes. That leadership must first of all be trained, not merely in biblical material but in the great humanities. Dogmatic preaching and the writing of exact formal doctrinal statements never meet the deepest needs of human hearts. Probably these are needed but there is something needed a great deal more, namely the understanding of the real issues of life—humanity's needs, desires, hopes and joys. After these are understood, then the leadership must search for materials, both in the Bible and outside to correct some tendencies and to nurture others, looking forward to the growing of the individual into the stature of a perfect man.

The destiny of a great body of humanity is intimately associated and often determined by the political, economic, social, industrial and religious conditions of our time. Leadership in modern times must understand that the message of Christ is to be projected into every relationship of life. The kingdom of God is first set up in the individual heart but cannot stop there. It must reach his neighbor and his neighbor's neighbor and so on until the whole world life has been touched by the redemptive influence of this kingdom. We are rapidly moving to the point where men and women are beginning to understand that religion is something more than an individual matter. The Christian is indeed intimately related to all the problems of human life and wherever there is need, whether in the factory, in the home town or among the black men in Africa, such a sense of the stewardship of life would so grip the individual as to impel him to reach out to meet that need.

Such a leader will often be misunderstood as he seeks to follow in the footsteps of his Master but this is the price trained leadership will have to pay.

How It Is Being Done

The following letter sent to Iowa young people by Miss Mate Goodell, educational vice-president, contains a number of suggestions for young people who are not so fortunate as to live in the Corn State.

Dear B. Y. P. U.'er:

In a recent issue of the Record, attention was called to the five points in the educational program for the Iowa young people. We hope all the societies are planning to push this work with great enthusiasm. Perhaps some suggestions as to how to reach this goal may be of service.

I. A daily devotions league in every society.

Such a group of young people is essential if your society is to be the power which it should be. As one of our great Christian leaders puts it, "To make a success of the Christian life, you must let God talk to you fifteen minutes a day through his Word; you must talk to God fifteen minutes a day in prayer; and you must talk about God to others fifteen minutes a day." Young people's service furnishes some well selected Bible readings. It would also be helpful to do some connected Bible study or follow some devotional book as "The Manhood of the Master" and "The Meaning of Prayer," both by Fosdick, or "Meeting the Master" by Ozora Davis. This would be the logical group to take the responsibility of a short prayer service, fifteen minutes before the Sunday evening devotional meeting.

II. A stewardship league in every society.

There is a wealth of stewardship literature from which to select. One of the most suggestive and helpful booklets is "Stewardship Programs for Young People." This gives four fine outlines of programs. Another method of presenting this subject is by dramatization. Two of the best plays prepared for this purpose are "Thanksgiving Ann" and "Starting Right." These may both be obtained from the state headquarters.

III. A study class in every society.

So varied are the types of study classes that something may be found to fill every need. These classes should be strongly stressed, and if followed faithfully, are bound to bring results in furnishing trained leaders among our young people. Many societies are weak because of untrained and inefficient leaders. The time is past when such a condition was considered excusable. Today—books, leaflets, study courses, and all possible helps are easily secured.

This course may be carried on in connection with the executive committee meetings. This committee should meet regularly every month. When the reports have been given and routine business has been transacted, let the group enter into a discussion of a chapter from such a book as the "Highway to Leadership" by Margaret Slattery, or "Baptist Young People at Work" by Detweiler.

Among the first secured should be the following:

Our B. Y. P. U., by James Asa White; Highway to Leadership, by Slattery; The Evangelism of Youth, by Gage; Baptist Young People at Work, by Detweiler; You and Your Church, by Kirtley; Enlisting for Christ and the Church, by Johnston; All-the-Year-Round Activities for Young People, by White; Social Plans for Young People, by Reisner; Ice-Breakers, by Geister; It Is to Laugh, by Geister; Dramatization of Bible Stories, by Russell; Dramatization of Missionary Stories, by Russell; Marks of a World Christian, by Fleming; The Meaning of Service, by Fosdick; God's Will and Our Life, by Cook; also current mission study books for young people such as "India on the March," by Clark, and "In the Vanguard of a Race," by Hammond.

If our B. Y. P. U. is to live and grow and fulfill its mission, we must strongly stress our educational program. We may no longer measure our success by the number present at the weekly meeting, but we must be increasingly busy along all lines.

An Unusual Opportunity

Baptist young people who are planning to attend the B. Y. P. U. Convention in Boston will be interested to learn that the annual convention of the World Wide Baraca Philathea Bible Class Union will be held in Providence, R. I., June 28-July 1. This provides an unusual opportunity to delegates to attend two conventions with but little extra expense. An attractive program of information, education and inspiration on all phases of organized Bible class work is being prepared with such outstanding speakers as Dr. Bernard Clausen, Dr. Chas. Ross, Dr. Chas. Brown, Marshall A. Hudson and others. Sectional conferences for the various class officers and committee workers will be a feature of the convention.

The Providence Baracas-Philatheas are planning an all-day ocean trip for June 30. This will be a day of combined pleasure and work, conferences on class work being held on the steamer.

Registrations may be secured from the Baraca Philathea Headquarters, 635 Allen St., Syracuse, New York.

Our Own Folks

A Chicago-Iowa Letter

By J. W. Weddell

Among the College Folk

I have just come in from calling at the homes of Doctor Hiscox, Professor Currier, whose widow still survives him, and Doctor Chase, old-time pillars of the Baptist church in this college town of Iowa City, and I feel refreshed and happy. No preparation for preaching like pastoral calling—I learned it of my own father in the ministry—and I am ready now to speak the message to the flock as God gives it. We acting pastors, along with the favored guild of permanent undershepherds, know the secrets of true success: it is to kneel with our people at the family altar.

Dr. E. T. Hiscox, who carries the honored name of his father, the author of the "Manuals," is resting here for a season in the scene of his former pastorate. His two brothers in the ministry, Charles and Henry, clung to the east, one going to his reward from Brooklyn, the other retired from the active work at Pelham. Doctor Chase has also retired from the full professorship but is active in the church. Doctor Currier, so long at the head of the liberal arts department, is memorialized by the large Currier Hall for ladies. Rev. Ray York has resigned the pastorate and is preparing to take his family soon to Ft. Worth, Tex., where he is to assist Doctor Scarborough. Hence my presence here for a little while till the right man is found for this important charge. What it is you may know from the picture of the Baptist Students' Center, Professor Hardy in charge, and the work that gathers about it, published in the Promotion Board pamphlet "On the March."

It is my pleasant home while here, and, with 6,000 students, aside from the regular church, there are some Baptists to look after. To one familiar with college surroundings from previous experience, it is a service that stimulates one's best endeavor.

Prof. F. A. Stromsten of the biological department, Prof. Roscoe Woods in mathematics, Prof. F. H. Potter in Latin, are among the teaching corps of the university connected with the Baptist church.

Iowa Baptists

They are an earnest forward-looking people here. Things have grown since those days when I ministered at Calvary Church, Davenport, now served by Pastor Cox, and there is no state that gives better promise denominationally. The pulpits are well filled hereabout. Rogers at Muscatine—he was here at the students' center this week to meet with the committee—is looking forward to the dedication of his newly enlarged edifice. Great work there. Davidson at Ames, Jacobson at Sioux City—my own former balliwick, ad interim—and Carman at Grinnell, are giving a good account of themselves.

It is a pleasure to find Prof. Franklin Johnson at the head of the sociological department in Grinnell. We "laid hands" on him at Cincinnati, and theology ought to be good preparation for such work. His accomplished wife is active in the women's missionary work of the state.

The names of J. A. Pettit at Charlton; V. N. Witter at Des Moines, state educational director; Howland Hanson, also of Des Moines, religious director for the university; A. W. Caul and Dean Stephenson call up memories. Rev. A. C. Droz has resigned at Pella. Pres. J. W. Million is keeping Des Moines University well to the fore. I recall the days when Chancellor Doctor J. Y. Aitchison, Sr., like his son, a mighty man of faith, was helping to keep the institution alive in the nineties. Arthur Fowler will remember it too; we were as sons in the home. W. I. Coulson is at Vinton. H. R. Best keeps things moving at Forest Avenue, Des Moines. O. L. Spurgeon has been back from Missouri to see his old Iowa friends. L. E. Viets is pushing Bible work at Boone. J. O. Staples is the alert pastor at Centerville. Earl D. Sims, "church invigorator"—our neighbor at Morgan Park—has put Clear Lake back on the map Baptistically and settled a pastor—E. L. Jordan. W. E. Stanley is at Jesup. Robert T. Craig, at the First, Des Moines, is doing the same kind of wide-awake work we used to see him doing in New Jersey. G. P. Mitchell is of course on the job at the Baptist headquarters. Trust the Iowa brethren to put things through, I wish I could speak of them all, faithful souls. We must not forget General Milton Remley, that veteran of the cause who, though shut in, is full of stirring reminiscences.

As I was leaving Chicago a fortnight ago, having a Sunday morning free, I went over to Englewood to sit beside my classmate, J. B. Thomas, in the pulpit of the First Church. I think the Kind Father led me. It was about "J. B.'s" last discourse, "The Lordship of Jesus," and we served communion together and recalled former days. He was ailing, but the same genial, friendly spirit. He went as he wished to, out of the midst of the task and he left a multitude of us that will miss his cheery voice. Ah, well, we shall see each other again—on the right hand side.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By Albert H. Finn

Sunday, Mar. 18, will always stand out as a day of days to the Baptists of Redford, a high-class suburb of Detroit. Away back in 1831 a few faithful souls gathered at Redford Center, afterward known as Bell Branch, and organized a religious society that became the First Baptist Church of Redford. This wilderness church held its own for over eighty years. Grand River Avenue was early ordained to be the great thoroughfare from Detroit to Lansing and westward. In 1893, a Sunday school was organized at Sand Hill, an unpretentious settlement in Redford Township, but located on Grand River Avenue. This latter village gradually assumed added strength and importance and in 1895 a chapel was built and the Immanuel Baptist Church of Redford was organized. It was largely made up of women, but with faith and courage and hard work the feeble interest grew until it took on a leadership in keeping with the growth of Sand Hill.

When Dr. Gleiss came as superintendent of the Detroit Baptist Union, Sand Hill had changed its name to Redford, and to his mind the amalgamation of the two churches was both advisable and desirable. This was brought about and Rev. H. H. Davis called as pastor. Even then it was only a bright prospect but Redford was now rapidly taking on new life and vigor as a residence suburb of the greater Detroit.

The intervening five years have been busy and fruitful. Prosperity has come to the church in numbers and influence and the members have readily come to visualize the future and are willing to sacrifice for the well being of the Redford-to-be. George E. Merrill, head of the department of church architecture of the Home Mission Society, was called into consultation and after careful study of the choice site already owned by the church, designed the beautiful and stately colonial type of edifice that was dedicated on Sunday, Mar. 18, and the ensuing week. The building has cost approximately $65,000 not counting the site. The colonial idea has been carried out in interior finish and equipment and presents a commodious auditorium, some sixteen rooms in the rear and the old chapel, which has been temporarily joined on for Sunday-school and social rooms. Later a church house and Sunday-school building with all modern equipment and facilities will be added in harmony with the present building. It is expected that this will be in readiness in 1931, when the centennial anniversary will be celebrated, but we doubt if its building can be deferred so long.

The Dedicatory Sermon

Dr. J. W. A. Stewart of Rochester Theological Seminary was the preacher of the dedicatory sermon. The new edifice was crowded to its limits and the people of Redford are justly proud of this handsome addition to its attractive buildings.

This is another example of what co-operation means in kingdom building in a great city. The Detroit Baptist Union is what its name signifies — a union of Detroit Baptist churches for mutual helpfulness and kingdom extension. The new Redford Baptist Church edifice would have been impossible without the inspiration, aid and support of the Detroit Union. We all rejoice with our faithful brethren in their preparedness for a great and glorious work in this splendid residential suburb.

The Immanuel Church, located on West Fort Street in the heart of the great west side industrial district, has called as pastor, Rev. H. P. Klyver, and he is already on the field. Dr. Klyver has for three years been a convention pastor under the Michigan Convention. We are delighted to count him among the Baptist leaders of dynamic Detroit. He has a great field and a great opportunity. This splendid church is sure to go on to new and larger victories under such leadership.

Our Detroit Baptist chuches, almost without exception, have been deeply concerned in evangelism during the months since the opening of the new year. I cannot give any detail of figures as yet save that the most cheering reports have come all along the line. I have already told about the aggressive leadership of the Detroit Council of Churches along these lines. The Baptists are doing their full share in this blessed work.

May 8 comes the annual meeting of the Detroit Baptist Union, to be held in the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church. Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, will be the guest of honor and will deliver the dinner address. This has been the greatest year in the history of the Detroit Baptist Union, counted in constructive achievements and financial totals. The annual report of Superintendent Gleiss and his faithful helpers will be an inspiring document.

The new Northwestern Baptist Church was dedicated on Easter. This is a continuation of the Hudson Avenue Baptist Church, renamed, as it occupies its beautiful, spacious, new edifice corner of Grand River and Clarendon Avenues. Rev. Robert White, pastor, promises a great event.

The growth of Detroit is exceeding the most sanguine predictions of its strongest boosters. Not alone is there a great migration of negroes from the Southland, and a constant stream of foreign speaking peoples, but Canada is sending an average of eighty families per day of its most virile and greatly desired citizens. This challenge to Detroit Baptists is not going unheeded.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

By Henry O. Millington

Our Baptist churches in the nation's capital have had an unusually busy season. So much so, that several of our pastors are giving palpable evidence of the effect of the heart strain upon them. Several have had to go away for brief breathing spells, and during the last two weeks Rev. F. W. Johnson of Grace Church has been recuperating at Ocean Grove, N. J. One of our ministers, Rev. G. W. McCullough, has gone to his reward, after a period of over fifty years of service among our churches.

A matter of interest to all our churches was the recent visit of Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo, who, following a conference in company with Dr. W. H. Main with the missionary committee of our association and the pastors of our churches, addressed a mass meeting at Calvary Church, and made a strong impression upon all our people.

A number of our churches recently held revival services, and in every instance the meetings have resulted in unusually large gatherings. There probably never was a time when our churches in their ordinary life were so vitally interested in best things and more thoroughly quickened spiritually than now. At Calvary Church, baptisms are frequent and the work goes along in great strength all the time. At First Church, without the aid of outside help, a quiet work of grace has been progressing throughout the winter. Conversions are a common occurrence and baptisms are frequent. A large number of candidates for baptism are in readiness, and among them, a prominent officer of the United States Navy and his wife. A fruitful revival campaign was carried on at Grace Church recently with Rev. H. S. Steward of Richmond, Va., as the preacher. A notable visitation to our city was that of Rev. A. C. Dixon of Baltimore, who conducted a week's service at the Temple Church of which Dr. J. J. Muir is pastor.

Notable gatherings of men took place recently at two of our churches—the Immanuel and the Metropolitan. The writer was present on both occasions and can bear testimony to the splendid character of these meetings. Churches that can collect such large companies of men of splendid quality can rightly be termed strong churches.

Doctor Abernethy is preaching a series of evening sermons on home life and the largest audiences that Calvary has known in a long time are attending these services.

Boston Letter

By Charles H. Watson

Professor Soares of Chicago

Doctor Soares has had a strenuous week in Boston. It will more than remind him of Chicago. Some unexpected "extras" suddenly thrown in between sufficiently exacting appointments, make things extra hazardous, especially in later March. It is to be hoped that he will escape the too frequent penalty of the over-draft.

In the highest sense he is an attractive man. The rich combination of head and heart is all too rare in authoritative teachers. He has it. Probably that explains his acceptability to the non-Baptists. He was the preacher at Harvard Mar. 25. There he shares with another Baptist—Fosdick—unusual attention and favor.

The following Monday morning he addressed the Ministers' Conference. Verily happily he took a theme that called out the stored away richness of faith and experience—"My Gospel": Paul's beatific sense of possession in the truth and the Lord. With boldness of love and gratitude he told us how and why he could make the phrase his own. It was done with luminous clarity, fine analogy and conclusiveness, and undoubted fervency of spirit. By the unexpected delay in the arrival of Dr. Frederick Shannon, the prominent Chicago divine who was to be the noon preacher in Keith's Theater, Doctor Soares had suddenly to take that service also. Likewise Doctor Shields of Toronto, who was to be the noon preacher at Tremont Temple, was also delayed, and Doctor Massee was pressed into service there.

Passion Week

The service at Keith's Theater has continued daily for two weeks with change of preachers each day. The ministers have been carefully chosen from the different religious bodies, to give their special emphasis upon Christian citizenship. There has been a surprising response in the growing audiences, and the full press notices of the sermons. Often the musical parts have been contributed by large choruses from the big department stores.

During Passion Week, Doctor Shannon of Chicago was the preacher each day. This was the culmination of the remarkable effort and opportunity. Continuity of theme and preacher during holy week was well designed, giving both preacher and hearer their full advantage.

With the daily preaching services at Tremont Temple, at Christ Church Cathedral on Tremont Street, and at King's Chapel, down town Boston was well ministered unto during the Lenten season.

A Leader and His Church

The Grace Baptist Church, Somerville, makes a marked impression upon the casual visitor. Pastor William H. Dyas has led the people away from what might be termed the conventional Baptist service. In every part he has sought worshipful participation, and has achieved it. Usually such departure from the common is expected where the minister tends either to the liturgical or the revolutionary. But Doctor Dyas tends nowhere except in devotion to his people and competency in serving them. He conceived his field, then chooses the best means of cultivating it. When you enter the beautiful sanctuary, and the robed choir-boys come up in singing procession through the auditory following the banners of the cross and country, it seems not strange but natural. Also when they mingle their choral responses with the worship, and strongly lead the people's praise. Then after the sermon they sing their recessional back again through the standing congregation. You have enjoyed the sweet-voiced boys, the reverent men, the good gowned minister, and his message, and promise yourself another visit to Grace Baptist church.

All this goes with a strong Bible school of 800, thoroughly organized for enlisting and training all the children, youth, and adults; parish effort systematic and efficient; quiet and gradual expansion of church growth and influence in the community; and a strong minister more than ten years deep in the confidence and affection of the people. It is a welcome demonstration of the sturdiness of the normal church.

Looking Ahead

Having gotten St. Patrick's Day successfully out of the way, we are looking toward the Fourth of July, when the great host of Baptist young people will come to Boston for their big convention. The last pile of obstinate Boston ice will be melted by that time, and the smile of green foliage and blooming flowers will be upon the Common and the Public Garden. Boston is such a Mecca for sight-seers that there will be a wide fringe of joy riders around the assembled body of Baptist youth.

Already the notes of preparation are sounded. Who can get ahead of Dr. F. F. Peterson, who is to round up 10,000 of our young people? Simultaneously from July 4 to 9 will come the International Y. P. S. C. Convention at Des Moines. With many it will be a choice between the possible broiling heats of Des Moines, and the inevitable cooling breezes of Boston from the tops of Bunker and Beacon Hill. With all the historical flowers thrown in, old ocean so near at hand, and pristine patriotism bristling from so many "points of interest," Boston will be a great winner. Baptist young people know a good thing and will want to see it.

Baptist Workers' Union

Speaking of Dr. Peterson reminds us of his unique work for the young people in our churches who have a mind to be trained in intelligent Christian efficiency. The monthly meetings have continued in Kingsley Hall since October with growing interest and power. The last meeting brought out 146 to the supper table, preparatory to the serious work of the evening. That is just what they are doing—serious work. It is not a social fest, nor a meeting for indulging in eloquence, but a union of workers for study in Christian teaching and leading. Already the program for next season is outlined. Prof. F. L. Anderson, and Dr. C. N. Arbuckle, will be the leaders—the latter in the Old Testament study, and the former in the new. There are two more meetings left—Apr. 16 and May 21. Besides these main lines of study there are in every meeting specifics, which are handled by some of our workers who have come by practice to be expert.

Judson Thomas, the Brother

By Augustus S. Carman

"The brother"—that is one of the simple, tender and strong appellations sometimes used in the New Testament and it seems somehow the most fitting of all the well-deserved terms of affection and honor which could be applied to Judson B. Thomas, pastor, denominational leader and the personal friend of a multitude of people. It falls to the lot of few to maintain themselves in a position of great denominational activity up to the very verge of three score years and ten. Dr. Thomas was the highly successful acting pastor of one of the largest of our Chicago churches, with other interests also in hand, when the swift message summoned him to the rest and reward which were awaiting him. It seems incredible that we shall not hear his cheery, humorous greeting at the Monday ministers' meeting, or at the larger denominational gatherings.

Devoted to his Master, his task and his friends—and pretty much everybody was his friend—with a gift of sparkling repartee which left no sting, with common sense joined to a fine optimism,—he was no "doubting Thomas," not he! His was the gentle art of getting next to people, for he had what might be called a gravitational personality that drew folks to him and held them in a cosmic swing of usefulness about him.

He built himself into the denominational life as one of its strong structural elements in all of the great region of the mid-west which has its center and metropolis in Chicago. He had long and fruitful pastorates in Dubuque and Topeka, but the major part of his life-work had its center in Chicago itself, where for the pivotal years covering the close of the nineteenth and the opening of the twentieth centuries he had, as district secretary of the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the chief responsibility for eliciting and sustaining missionary interest in the churches and for the discovery and development of denominational opportunity in his swiftly expanding field. And finally, called by one of our foremost Chicago churches, he had the longest and in some respects the most important period of his life's service. It is but three or four years since that church had a gracious and fruitful revival conducted by Dr. Thomas with no outside help. At the very end of his pastorate there grew up a daughter-church from his own, which is one of the most promising of our new Chicago fields. Its name, the Judson Church, will be a constant reminder not only of the father of American Foreign Missions but of the pastor of the mother church.

And the first name of Doctor Thomas calls attention to the fact that he was an example of ministerial heredity. His father, Rev. E. J. Thomas of Atlanta, Ill., died not long ago at the age of more than ninety years; and his gentle, saintly mother still lives, with excellent enjoyment of her mental and physical faculties, though past the age of ninety. The consecration of their son, shown in his naming, has its reward not only in his richly useful career but continues to the third generation, for one of Doctor Thomas's daughters is a highly useful pastor's wife, and the youngest is president of the Young Women's Christian Association at Denison University.

One marked example of his characteristic spirit of service was seen three years ago when Illinois needed a director for its gigantic task of raising seven millions in the campaign of the New World Movement. Man after man had refused or had otherwise been eliminated from consideration, when at last Judson Thomas was urged to take up the task. He knew the field, and the churches knew him from his long and successful secretarial service. He cherished no illusions as to his task, yet he finally gave his consent and his noble church released him for the months of the campaign. Though already at retiring age he grappled with the huge problem and achieved what under the circumstances was a remarkable success. In a similar way he had finally consented to assume chief management of a touring party to the Baptist World Congress at Stockholm in the coming summer, and was busily engaged in promoting the trip. At a meeting of the Woman's Mission Union of Chicago recently he spoke of the trip and, as he left the platform, he gave his characteristic wave of the hand and exclaimed with a smile, "Well, I'll see you all at the boat!"

Dear old friend and comrade! We shall not see you when the boat sets sail for its ocean voyage, but when our souls shall cast anchor in their ultimate port we somehow think we shall see you hastening down the embankment of heaven, with that friendly wave of the hand and that contagious smile of yours, eager to introduce us to a multitude of intimate friends you have already acquired among the angels. O, Judson,—our brother!

The Hebrew Mission Anniversary

The second year of the Buffalo Hebrew Mission is completed, and the anniversary dinner was given Monday evening, Apr. 2, with Dr. Chas. L. White as the principal speaker. The following Sunday many churches of Buffalo, with the approval of the Buffalo Council of Churches, will open their pulpits for a statement regarding the work by chosen laymen. The Buffalo Baptist Union owns the mission property (upon which there is a heavy mortgage) and assumes final responsibility for the administration of the work and for the budget, but all evangelical denominations participate in the support of the mission and in the oversight and direction of its activities. Three full-time workers are employed, including Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Machlin and Miss Grace Bredehoft.

The following items from the annual report of Mr. Machlin, superintendent, will indicate the progress of this new venture of faith.

"Jews have been born into the kingdom of God; prejudice on the part of the Jewish community has been broken down; hatred has been turned into affection. Every department has at least doubled in attendance during the past twelve months. Children's classes for Christian instruction are conducted twice each week, about twenty Jewish children attending with their parents' consent; a mothers' meeting of ten Jewish women meets weekly; the playground is filled with sixty or more children every day during the summer season; open air work in the Jewish section, conducted in cooperation with the Y. M. C. A., has been fruitful in actual conversions; medical relief is administered through the assistance of five physicians; visiting from door to door is carried on several days of each week assisted by several volunteers. The principal meeting of the week is held Friday evenings, assisted by groups of young people from various churches and always attended by a large number of Jews.

"The friends of the work have increased rapidly during recent months. Their response to the appeals of Mr. Machlin and his helpers is now sufficient to meet the necessities of the monthly budget, except for the salary of the superintendent, which so far has to be provided by the Baptist Union. It is hoped that churches outside of Buffalo also may make use of Hebrew Mission Day, Apr. 8, to assist in reducing the indebtedness accumulated in the earlier months when the friends who knew of the mission and believed in its method and spirit were few."

One of the fruits of the work has been the reconciliation of the relatives of Mr. Machlin to him as a Christian and their interest in the study of the New Testament and the person of Jesus. Within two months a Jewish home in which there are several children has been reunited through the conversion of the father, and now the mother is an inquirer. Several others are now believers, but cannot yet see the way to pay the price in persecution and ostracism of making public their profession of faith in the Messiah—Jesus.

It is hoped that readers will pray that this undertaking that has proven thus far to be the most economical and efficient piece of Hebrew mission work carried on anywhere in the country may become fully established and ever more fruitful, and that its success may result in the founding of similar missions in many other cities now without an "interpreter's house" among this neglected people, the mass of whom have plenty of prejudice but absolutely no faith and consequently are without moral restraint.

Green Lake Assembly

Already the program has been made out and the faculty selected for the Green Lake Baptist Assembly to be held Aug. 7-19 inclusive. In connection with this there will be held the second W. W. G. house party. The whole program of the house party, the young people's convention and the assembly are to be held as one gathering. The prospects are for a big attendance this year.

Dedication of South Church

The dedication services of the new South Church in Milwaukee were held Mar. 18. The speaker of the day was Pres. S. E. Price of Ottawa University, Ottawa, Kan. Despite the worst snowstorm of the year there was a large attendance, and the program was carried out as planned, though somewhat handicapped by the storm. The closing service in the old church were somewhat out of the ordinary. The pastor spoke on the life that had been builded into the work on this field during the past forty-eight years. At the close of the service he baptized four persons, making 100 persons received into the church during the three and a half years of the pastorate of Mr. Shaw. Of these about sixty have come by baptism. The church enters into a new field with large possibilities, and the many indications point to a prosperous work. At the old field a mission work is being undertaken in cooperation with the various missionary bodies.

Fires

During the last few weeks two Baptist churches have burned down in this state—the Baptist church at Raymond, and the Swedish Baptist church at Superior. Our churches should pay much attention to the question of fire protection, both as to insurance policies, and adequate provision for protection in the boiler and furnace rooms.

Some Notes

Owing to the fact that the Northern Baptist Convention will meet in May, it is planned to have the associations meet in June. This may prove a good plan as the machinery can be set up early after the meeting of the convention for carrying out the program.

The German Association of the state will meet at the Immanuel Baptist Church of Milwaukee, Apr. 3-5. Rev. A. P. Mihm and Rev. Emil Mueller are on the program of the young people's sessions.

Anthony Jacobs, who was laid aside for a time with sickness, has reentered the pastorate by accepting a call to the church at Stoughton. The Stoughton Church will go forward with his able leadership.

NEW YORK

The Woman's Foreign Mission Society will celebrate its golden jubilee at a luncheon in the Park Avenue Church, New York City, Friday, Apr. 13, at 12 o'clock. Among the speakers will be Mrs. Helen B. Montgomery, Mrs. Lucy Peabody and Mrs. James M. Baker of Ongole, India. A historical pageant will be presented.

The Parsells Avenue Church, under the leadership of Rev. Frederick G. Reynolds, took another forward step a week ago when it carried through to successful completion, under the direction of Dr. F. H. Divine, a campaign for $100,000 for a religious education and recreational building in connection with its present auditorium. This goal seemed impossible when it was proposed, but with faith and unity, the people took hold and the task was completed. The largest contribution was $2,000. This church has had a phenomenal growth in the past few years. More than 600 girls and boys are now using the present building during the week. The church has nearly 300 Boy Scouts enrolled and an average Sunday-school attendance of close to 600. The present membership of the church is 812. When this new educational building is completed Parsells Avenue will have one of the most modern and efficient church plants in Rochester.

Park Church, Utica, observed its eighty-fifth anniversary on Mar. 18-20. Rev. H. Clarke Colebrook, general director of the New York Convention, delivered the anniversary sermon on "The Church Empowered for Service". Director Colebrook brought the greetings for the state organization. In the evening, Dr. William M. Lawrence of Colgate University, known for his work in the pastorate, spoke on "1923". The speaker paid a glowing tribute to Dr. Edward Bright who was one of the early pastors of the church and for forty years editor of The Watchman, and to Dr. Daniel G. Corey who for forty-eight years was the constructive leader of the church. Two former pastors, Rev. G. W. Ball of Attica, N. Y., and Dr. Edward Babcock of Lowell, Mass., were present at the gathering Tuesday night. Three hundred sat down to the tables on this occasion. At the public service, greetings were brought from the city pastors and churches. The anniversary address was delivered by Dr. Clarence A. Barbour of Rochester Seminary. The present pastor was a member of Doctor Barbour's first graduating class. The church is enjoying the good-will of the people of Utica. The eighty-five years have been filled with splendid achievements and the church girds itself for aggressive service, seeking to be a servant church in the heart of Utica.

MASSACHUSETTS

The Blaney Memorial Church, Dorchester, has remodeled its house of worship at a cost of $40,000. A week of rededicatory special services has been held.

Rev. W. S. Hall has resigned at Barnstable. His plans for the future are not announced.

The Dorchester Temple has experienced a far-reaching revival. Beginning the first of the year, the pastor, Rev. O. W. Foye, conducted cottage meetings and the interest was such that helpers were secured for evangelistic services.

The North Adams Church, Daniel H. Clare, pastor, in union with the Methodist church, has concluded an interesting series of Sunday evening services. A large theater in the city was rented. The two pastors preached alternately, and the combined choirs, with the addition of a group of young people, occupied the platform as a chorus choir. The entire service lasted an hour. Advertising space was taken in the city papers, and copious abstracts of the sermons were furnished the press each Monday. The meetings grew steadily in popular interest. At the last service, the Baptist pastor preaching, the building was crowded beyond its capacity, and many were turned away. The themes were as follows: "The Acid Test"; "The Power of the Tongue"; "Playing the Fool"; "The War Within"; "The Great Refusal"; and "The Investment of Influence". All expenses were met by the offerings without special appeal. A union mid-week service was held. During the week preceding Easter union services were held each night at each of the churches in turn. The work of the Baptist church is full of promise. The pastor closes his fifth year with a loyal and united people.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Revival services in the church at Peterboro held recently appear to have been blessed. An encouraging number of persons came forward. The people of other churches voluntarily cooperated in these meetings. It has been a long time since this rural church has experienced anything of this kind. The church is ministered to by Mr. H. E. Danielson, student of the Gordon Bible College. The meetings were held under the direction of Evangelist W. G. Huber of North Attleboro, Mass.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES WILL be held at the Campton church under the direction of Brother Gordon Stanley Beckett, April 18-29. Mr. Beckett goes out under the auspices of the New England Evangelistic Association.

ROLL-CALL WAS HELD BY THE church at Claremont on Feb. 14. Rev. Paul E. Alden of Concord gave an inspiring address on this occasion. The record of the year showed seventeen additions to the church membership, fourteen by baptism and three by letter. Five of those baptized came from pedo-Baptist churches. The church responded generously to the call for Eastern relief. The community daily vacation school held in the church last year will probably be followed this year with a larger and better school.

Rural Church Conference

For some time Secretary Mower has been arranging a conference of those best qualified to discuss the rural situation in Maine. A large number of representative people met in the Getchell Street Church, March 20. On the program were Dr. T. J. Ramsdell, who discussed the changes that have come from the decreasing rural population, and D. W. Kimball, who spoke of the incoming of the foreign farmer. The gravity of the situation appears in the fact that 33 1-3 per cent of the members of the churches are non-resident, and there are 150 churches out of the 400 that have less than twenty members each.

The equipment of the churches was discussed by Missionary Fletcher. He mentioned the large number of meeting houses that are closed and discussed means of keeping them open with an adequate service for the community.

On the question, "Is the Religious Interest Increasing?" Rev. C. E. Young, for twenty-five years a missionary of the convention, brought a message that stirred all hearers by its tenderness and faith.

Missionary Davis gave an account of the Pearson plan of bringing in scholars to the Sunday school. Doctor Pearson, a very earnest Christian layman of Morrill, used to send out two automobiles and a buckboard to gather in the children, sometimes eight miles away. When Mrs. Pearson died she left in her will a bequest to carry the same work forward.

President Roberts and Principal Harthorn spoke of the great importance of the rural churches in the educational life of the state. Pastor Bocquel, of the French mission at Waterville, told of his work in making loyal American citizens. Rev. H. F. Huse discussed the problem of present day trends. The problem of leadership was taken up by Pastors Bishop, Kingsley, and Emery, and the work of the laymen by Leroy Breneman, a young business man who has put new life into a dead church. Federated churches were discussed by Mr. Thurlow, who is the pastor of a very successful church of this kind. Rev. T. E. Ham brought the final message on the power of God unto salvation in rural Maine.

The conference was one of deep interest and profit, and its "findings," which will be presented by Rev. Irad B. Hardy, and committee, will be used as the basis for an extension program during the summer.

DR. AITCHISON MADE a brief visit on Mar. 21 and was given a hearty welcome. He met the convention board at Waterville, had a conference in the First Church, the pastor of which, Rev. Walter Quarrington, voiced the loyalty of the churches to the work in which Dr. Aitchison is engaged. There was a conference, a railroad trip to Portland, a banquet at the Central Square Church, an evening address before the church leaders of western Maine, and then a ride to New Hampshire, where he was to meet the New Hampshire board the next day.

Beaver Association

Sharpsville, Rev. W. L. Anderson, pastor. On Friday evenings the pastor meets the boys and girls in an educational and inspirational service. A main feature is a lecture based on stereopticon views furnished by the state educational department at Harrisburg. Mr. Lewis of East Side, Sharon, has a similar Friday evening "glad hour."

First, Sharon, Rev. P. F. DeLancey, pastor. As the time for the annual meeting approached, it was found that $1,000 was needed. At the meeting, however, all but $27 was gathered, and the next day a member contributed this amount.

Beaver Falls, Rev. T. D. Rees, pastor, Forty-five members of the high school were present at a recent service. Pastor Rees is religious adviser for the high school "Y."

REV. W. A. WISSINGER closed his work at Olive Branch Mar. 1, after three years' service. Mr. Wissinger is available for supply work for an indefinite period and may be addressed at Greensburg.

REV. ROBERT T. KETCHEM, pastor of the Butler Church, has resigned to accept a call to the First Church, Niles, Ohio. Mr. Ketcham has been pastor of the church at Butler for four and a half years. During his pastorate 247 persons have been added to the membership and the offerings for missions have been increased 700 per cent.

REV. W. H. CUTLER completed the first year of his pastorate with the Ambridge Church, Mar. 18. A review of the year shows a large increase in attendance at all services, all current bills paid, the Bible school with a 100 per cent increase in enrolment and fifty additions to the church during the year. The church is now paying off the mortgage at a certain rate each month. The morale has undergone a complete change and the attitude of the community to the church has likewise changed for the better.

ILLINOIS

MAR. 25 WAS NEW WORLD Movement Sunday in the First Church, Waukegan. The pastor, Rev. W. C. Rutherford, made an appeal for full support of the program. On Apr. 3, Rev. George R. Stair and Mr. Floyd B. Johnson began a series of special meetings to continue until Apr. 15 and longer if interest warrants.

REV. PAUL SCHENCK, North Platte, Neb., has accepted the unanimous call of the church at Canton.

OHIO

THE CHURCH AT GENEVA recently closed a fifteen-day evangelistic campaign in which Evangelist Franklin W. Swift assisted the pastor, Theodore G. Erler. There were sixty-nine conversions and the church membership was revived.

SPECIAL SERVICES WERE conducted by the First Church of Canton, Mar. 13-25, with Rev. Edwin S. Stucker, Ottawa, Kan., as the evangelist. The meetings were well supported by the people of the church, and the preaching of Doctor Stucker was effective. While it is not possible to tabulate accurately the results, there will be over fifty additions to the church as a result of the meetings. A definite and comprehensive program has been outlined for the year, culminating in the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the church in Apr., 1924. Rev. Wm. E. Bridge is pastor.

ON MAR. 6, Rev. and Mrs. Paul Montgomery of South Carolina began special meetings with the First Church, Athens. Services continued for twelve days. Twenty-five professed faith in Christ. Twenty-eight united with the church, twelve by baptism. Fifteen students from Ohio University took a definite stand for Christ, seven of whom were baptized Easter.

MICHIGAN

REV. SANFORD J. SLOUGH has resigned as pastor of the Cement City and Clark Lake churches because of ill health. During his pastorate of two and a half years, eighty-seven persons were added

GANSON STREET CHURCH, Jackson, has just closed a revival service of two weeks' duration under the leadership of Rev. T. J. Hopkins, pastor of the First Church of Adrian. A number in the Sunday school declared their desire to serve Christ. A class in religious instruction has been formed to teach the converts the elements of Baptist faith. The Ganson Street Church now has a printing press and publishes weekly its own bulletin. Mr. Hurd, the Sunday-school superintendent, has the school organized into primary, junior and adult departments with separate rooms and superintendents.

SUNDAY, MARCH 4, MARKED THE CLOSE of the revival services conducted in the church at Belding for two weeks, under the direction of Rev. A. W. Littrell and Mr. D. L. Moody of Columbus, Ohio. On Sunday afternoon a baptismal service was held, when sixteen young men and women followed Christ's example. Twenty-five have been received into the church. Twenty-two young people have agreed to join a class for the study of the life of Christ. The coming of Littrell and Moody to Belding brought a rich blessing, and there were sixty-five professed conversions.

THE CHURCH AT MARSHALL is promoting evangelistic work. Marshall has been divided into seven districts with a captain and prayer meeting leader for each district. Prayer-meetings are held in the seven districts simultaneously. The first meetings had a total attendance of seventy-four, and the second week, ninety-eight. Some of the captains report as many as twenty calls made by one worker. From Mar. 11-18, evangelistic meetings were held every evening in charge of the pastor, Rev. J. Burt Bouwman. Professor Whitehouse, of Albion, gave a series of five addresses. The work was characterized by willingness on the part of many of the church members to work hard for the success of this effort.

THERE WILL BE A MEETING OF THE FREE Will Baptist State Association in the College Church, Hillsdale, on May 16, for the transaction of business. A sum of money has come to the association through a will in the Probate Court of Hillsdale County.

IOWA

THE DANISH BAPTIST CHURCH of Cedar Falls at a business meeting decided to change its name to the Calvary Baptist Church. Rev. J. D. Vinding is pastor.

REV. EDWARD M. JEFFERS and family are located again in Webster City after a two years' sojourn in Florida. While in the south Mr. Jeffers was pastor of the Blake Memorial Church of Lake Helen, just six miles from DeLand and John B. Stetson University. The Lake Helen church building is a memorial to E. Nelson Blake, Jr., a promising young man and only son, who died suddenly at the age of eighteen. The memorial was erected and equipped by the E. Nelson Blake family, Arlington, Mass. Mr. Jeffers will be glad to act as stated supply for any church while the people are deciding on a pastor, or for a single Sunday. He also desires to assist in revival meetings, especially in towns where there is a chance to do aggressive work among shop and factory men.

WISCONSIN

THE NORTHWESTERN DISTRICT OF THE Woman's Home and Foreign Societies will hold its annual meeting in Madison, Apr. 25-27. Mrs. Montgomery and Mrs. Moor will deliver addresses. Missionaries from both home and foreign fields will speak about their work.

Baptist Students at the University of Wisconsin

Through the Francis Wayland Foundation of Wisconsin and with funds provided by the New World Movement, a house was purchased in Feb., 1922, to be used as a home for the university pastor and as a Baptist students' headquarters. The house is situated adjacent to the university campus. Joseph B. Gleason will soon close his fifth year of service as university pastor.

During the first year that our Baptist student headquarters house has been open, Feb. 28, 1922-Feb. 28, 1923, more than 208 groups have used the house for their various meetings. In these groups have been more than 2,300 young people. Note the list of groups and the number of times they have met in the house: Miscellaneous committees, forty; student volunteers, twenty; life service groups, four; prayer groups, eighty-two; personal workers' groups, three; hike groups, six; young peoples' cabinet, nine; Christian Endeavor council, six; Sunday-school classes, seven; social groups, six; candy sales, three; special groups entertained, twelve; miscellaneous groups, ten. Hundreds of individual students have used the house freely as a home. A large number of personal conferences were held with the university pastor. During the year about twenty students of the university have been baptized into the membership of the First Church of Madison.

Pre-Convention Fundamentalist Conference

To the Baptists of the Northern Baptist Convention:

We herewith present the program for the fourth annual pre-convention conference on fundamentals of the Baptist faith to be held Tuesday, May 22, 1923, in the convention hall on the Pier at Atlantic City, N. J.

It will be observed that the program this year has some features not heretofore embodied in our programs. A number of prominent laymen will speak. One of our loyal women is included also in the list of speakers. The themes to be discussed are for the most part practical rather than doctrinal. A former president of the Northern Baptist Convention, and a former president of the Home Mission Society as well as a vice-president of the Foreign Mission Society will bring us their counsel in this conference.

The fundamentalists of the Northern Baptist Convention believe that great good has been accomplished by the previous conferences. Churches, associations, state conventions, and many conferences have given attention to the discussion of matters of doctrine and polity that can only result in good.

Some of our schools that have been drifting away from sound doctrine have corrected that tendency. At least two heretical teachers have been dismissed, one each from two of our prominent schools. Others must go under the pressure of an aroused conscience and an intelligent interest on the part of Baptists.

Fundamentalists have not a divisive purpose. They do not intend to withdraw from the Northern Baptist Convention. We are effecting no counter organization. We do ask our brethren of the convention to give heed to the voices of earnest men, long held in honor and in the affection of the members of the convention, as they restate, reaffirm and reemphasize the historic faith of Baptists. We believe now, as we have always believed, that in a large way the salvation of the world depends upon the Baptist message. It is our imperative duty as Baptists to keep that message pure and to pursue such a policy as will enable us to deliver that message in its purity to the largest number of people.

To that end we cordially invite all Baptists of all opinions to attend this pre-convention conference.

J. C. Massee, Chairman
Floyd H. Adams
Curtis Lee Laws

The Baptist Bible Union of America

First Conference in Kansas City, Mo., May 11 to 15, 1923

The first annual conference of the Baptist Bible Union is called for Kansas City, Mo., May 11-15. The call is not alone at the behest of the executive committee of that new organization, but at the request of a large number of ministers and laymen, north and south.

The union has issued a confession of faith over the name of Dr. T. T. Shields, pastor of the Jarvis Street Church, Toronto, Canada; Dr. A. C. Dixon, pastor of the University Church, Baltimore, and of Dr. W. B. Riley, pastor of the First Church, Minneapolis. The foreword of the confession makes the clear statement that the union recognizes no Mason-Dixon or national lines so far as the North American continent is concerned. It is the hope to bring the orthodox brethren of all sections into this conference. There are those who have objected to such a conference, on the part of the orthodox, as looking to division in the denominational body, but surely destructive critics could hardly sanction this criticism since the Baptist Council existed for some years solely for the purpose of propagating liberalism.

Their history probably has something to do with the occasion of this conference.

The tares of rationalism have been sown in both our schools and churches, and they have not only taken root but are now developing to such proportions as to demand attention. It should be remembered that in the parable, the field is the world, and at the present time the worldly schools are broadcasting these seeds increasingly, and many of them fall on church soil and spring up. There is nothing in the parable to indicate that such tares are to be left to grow in the church until the harvest, or that such sowers are to be encouraged in evangelical bodies. Conservatives are increasingly alive both to the menace of this matter and to the necessity of meeting this menace with more and better Bible teaching.

The location of the conference at Kansas City, Mo., is due to the following considerations. It was originally decided to hold this meeting at Evansville, Ind., and Dr. Rake of that city, cooper-

Popularization of Pipe Organ

Making America musical is a task that has been carried on with energy in the last decade, and largely through mechanical means. The player piano and the phonograph have done their part in this. The organ, known as the king of musical instruments to musicians and laymen alike for centuries, has played a less demonstrative role, but there is at present a strong movement to purchase pipe organs as memorials to those who fell in France.

Among the cities which have recently purchased large organs for schools are Cincinnati, Jersey City, Milwaukee and Spokane. These are only a few mentioned at random. In Pittsburgh a great movement in which the leading musicians of the city are taking part is under way for the acquisition of a splendid organ for the large Schenley high school. In New York City a number of schools have organs and public recitals at regular times.

Besides the public use of the organ, there is a distinct educational benefit which has been realized for years by the leading universities. Many of these have large instruments. Cornell has two of the largest organs in the country. Yale University has a monster organ, famous throughout the world. Leland Stanford, Harvard, the University of Illinois and many others have notable instruments and regular recitals for the students. The University of Virginia has just installed a remarkable outdoor organ, placed in its Greek theater.

The school organ is at the same time a municipal organ in the cities of ordinary size and thus serves its double purpose at small expense. Larger cities have gone in for immense municipal organs and concerts by distinguished artists. St. Paul and Cleveland are the latest to be added to this list. In the former city the immense organ is being installed and Cleveland has ordered an organ which will be one of the most notable in the world. Portland, Me., has a splendid one which is to be played next year by Edwin H. Lemare, the famous English organist. Pittsburgh, in its Carnegie Hall, has one of the finest examples of the possibility of organ music with Charles Heinroth at the keyboard. San Diego, Cal., has the famous instrument built for the exposition there. Atlanta, Ga., was one of the earliest cities to purchase a fine city organ. Evansville, Ind., acquired one two years ago. Portland, Ore., Denver and Pueblo, Colo., are others which have up-to-date instruments that delight the public ear and are the pride of the citizens. Salt Lake City for years has been famous for its Mormon Tabernacle organ and people come from all parts of the United States to hear it played by John J. McClellan.

To the average man the pipe organ is a mystery. The wonderful advance in organ construction which amounts to a revolution has never been advertised extensively. The reason is that, unlike the automobile or even the phonograph, the organ never has been commercialized. There are in the United States only about thirty prominent manufacturers of these instruments. They and their workmen are artists, and they make no more ado over their work than does the artis who paints a wonderful picture. But i the last fifteen years the pipe organ ha actually become an entirely different in strument from what it was. Before tha day it was confined largely to churc use and was a means of worship. It i that just as much as it ever was, but i is also more of a complete orchestra i itself. It was that always, but the limi tations of ten fingers and two feet an the ponderous work of playing a larg organ were such as to keep the instru ment and its music within its own fiel Electricity and mechanical ingenuit have combined to change all that. On modern electric action organ the per former makes perhaps three times a much use of the facilities at his disposa and does it much more quickly. Thus th orchestra is imitated in practically all it possibilities on a well-equipped organ By the touch of a finger the man at th keyboard puts on or off one instrumen after another, or any number of instru ments at once, in any one of the thou sand combinations, having tone colors i profusion at his finger tips. From th whisper that can hardly be heard to th majestic full organ that shakes the entir building is only a touch. French horn in organs are made nowadays that can not be told from the genuine, even by French horn player. Tubular chime operated electrically make the listene feel that he is in an European cathedral

Advocates of the school organ poin out that one of its greatest advantage is that the pupils' minds are directed t the full depth, richness, color and variet of the world of sound, which no othe instruments can produce as well. I many listeners the desire can be kindle to explore for themselves its fascinatin possibilities. And organ practice is mor likely to appeal to the growing boy o girl and is more likely to hold their in terest than either the piano or violin.

Prophecy and Fulfillment.....Hadley

Somewhat belated in review, but non the less of great interest and importanc is this excellent cantata by one of th few front-rank native composers, Henry Hadley. Designed primarily as Christmas cantata, it will be acceptabl for any festival occasion of the churc year. As might be expected from th fame of the composer the music i sketched with a free hand, dealing in bi effects and speaking in accents of power The solos for soprano, alto and teno voices, are all vocal, interesting and char acteristic. But it is the choruses i which the grasp of the composer is mad most manifest. The opening chorus an fugue should be most imposing whe done by a competent choir, and the clos ing joyous chant should fairly lift th roof. The music is not hard, and it i music which will "sound." The experi enced choirmaster will appreciate wha I mean by that expression! Much musi which looks well on paper fails to "com off" when sung. But there need be n fears on that score with this work; i is a fine work in every way.

Ginling College has just issued a six-year review of its work. We note that thirty-two people have taught one or more years in the college; of these twenty have been Americans and twelve Chinese, the average term for the Americans being 3.6 years and for the Chinese 1.8 years. The cash entries of 1920 and 1921 are 50 per cent more than those for 1918 and 1919. Between 1918 and 1920 the boarding department was self-supporting on $50 per capita. Last year, however, increased cost of living created a deficit born by the college. Ginling hopes to have 200 students when the new buildings are finished.

Throughout the United States on Mar. 11 Presbyterian churches conducted their every-member canvass to secure pledges for the benevolences of the denomination for the coming year. The total benevolent budget officially authorized for missionary, educational and affiliated causes is $15,000,000. This is for the national and international work of the Presbyterian church, exclusive of the many millions raised by individual churches for their own running expenses and their own causes. Of the $15,000,000 benevolent budget, more than $3,500,000 will be spent for foreign missions, with an additional $1,300,000 assigned to the Woman's Foreign Mission Board. The board of home missions is allotted nearly $1,800,000; more than $2,260,000 is apportioned for home mission interests of the self-supporting synods; and the woman's board of home missions is set down for $1,120,000. The board of missions for freedmen, working among the Negroes of the south, is allotted $268,000, while the woman's department for freedmen gets an additional $225,000. There is assigned to the Presbyterian general board of education, working among the fifty-seven Presbyterian colleges in the United States, a total of over $1,600,000. The allotment to the pension work of the church, administered by the board of ministerial relief and sustentation, is $1,077,000. Other causes in the budget are: Work in Europe, $123,000; chaplains, $6,100; publication and Sabbath-school work, $677,000; church erection, $597,000; board of temperance and moral welfare, $73,800; evangelism, $84,900; men's work, $59,000; Sabbath observance, $25,800; American Bible Society, $92,000; Federal Council of Churches, $24,000.

Baptist Bible Union

iting with the commercial interests of Evansville, was most cordial in the invitation, but to hold it there meant that hundreds, if not thousands of men, living to the south and west of Kansas City and being within the bounds of the Southern Baptist Convention would need to travel past the place of the latter assembly to Evansville and return, going to a corresponding expense in the matter of time and money without profit. Again, it is known that the great majority of Southern Baptists are in perfect accord with the confession of faith, and also with the aims of the Baptist Bible Union, and we felt it due them to so locate the conference that they could attend it with the least sacrifice to themselves. Still further, previous to the Northern Baptist Convention, for three consecutive years, the Baptist fundamentalists of the North have held at least one day of conference. The tone of that meeting has been admirable; the spiritual atmosphere created in it has been greatly enjoyed and the contention for the faith characterizing it has been helpful to the northern situation. Southern Baptists attending upon this fundamentals conference have borne generous testimony to both their pleasure and profit in the same.

A large tent seating 5,000 people has been secured and will be equipped admirably in every way, and most centrally located. The program will bring before the attendants some of the most notable Bible speakers from Canada and the states.

The objectives of meeting, while being carefully thought through by the executive committee will not be published until after they have been submitted to and passed upon by the assembly itself. Any action taken that advises any member of the Baptist Bible Union concerning any matter of denominational or spiritual interest, will first be duly presented to the assembly itself for popular discussion and majority decision. The 4 o'clock hour in the afternoon is set apart for business each day and the hour preceding it will be given over to free discussion of the issues to be presented to it.

Unquestionably this conference is going to do for Baptists some things which are ardently desired for that body. It is going to bring to them great, outstanding speakers and privilege them the inspiration of epoch-making addresses, but abundant opportunity will be afforded for the popular discussion of great doctrinal and ecclesiastical issues, a need that has long been felt in all the conventions but is being less and less provided by assemblies of limited time and weighted with enormous financial problems.

It is everywhere conceded that the matter of sound doctrine is now of such moment that to further delay its discussion and propagation would be not only perilous but deadly.

When the northern fundamentalists had their first conference in Buffalo, it was predicted 200 would attend. The selection of a church accommodating 1,500 was shortly found to be a mistake as the auditorium was altogether too small to seat the crowds which came, and we predict the tent with 5,000 capacity in Kansas City will be many times packed during these five days.

What have you done for your church

FROM the dawn of history—down through the ages—no events stand forth in greater significance than the sufferings and tribulations of the early Christian Martyrs. Deeply engraved in the memory of man, their lives live after them.

Great events of the present day record the sacrifices of many men and women who have consecrated their lives to the moral and spiritual structure of the world, through the development and extension of the Christian faith.

Contributing to the greatness of their memory, and that their sacrifices may not have been in vain, many public spirited men and women, in fulfilling their debt of devotion, have been instrumental in placing in their churches a set of Deagan Tower Chimes, whose golden voices will live throughout the years to come, a fitting and enduring tribute of melody and sweet remembrance.

Ways and means by which the installation of Deagan Tower Chimes may be effected will be furnished interested, responsible inquirers upon request.

Already over 100 new members have been received by the church, three young men have pledged themselves to the work of the ministry and twenty-four young women indicated their purpose to give themselves to some form of definite Christian service.

The league of nations non-partisan association of which former Justice John H. Clarke of the United States Supreme Court and former Attorney General George W. # An Unfulfilled Promise

In Cuba, there is a school known as "Colegios Internacionales," but more familiarly known to Baptists as Cristo College, maintained by The American Baptist Home Mission Society, that is every year extending its influence and increasing its service in promoting the Kingdom throughout the Island. Its present enrollment is 230. Long ago the promise was made that this great institution should have a Lecture Hall.

This promise has not yet been fulfilled. The dormitories are overcrowded, the first floors of the dormitories have to be used for recitation purposes. In order that their children may attend school, many families are obliged to make their homes in Cristo.

WHY CANNOT THIS AND OTHER IMPERATIVE NEEDS BE MET?

Here is one reason:—

Although the Society's budget for the present year is only 75% of the budget of the previous year, the receipts for the first ten months of the year have not been sufficient to meet the expenses of the Society even on the reduced basis.

To meet the balance of the budget for the current year, $245,653.23 is still needed from the denomination. On February 28 the accumulated deficit of the Society amounted to $385,308.00.

Bad—Might Be Worse

The bulletin of the Metropolitan Board of Promotion is authority for this startling news item: "More copies of the Bible are stolen from the main library of Columbia University than any other book." This is bad but it might be worse. If it were money it might bring more complete destruction or if it were automobiles the thieves might be wrecked, but note it is Bibles which are stolen. Suppose they are read. Suppose the thief should become acquainted with Christ as did another thief on a cross. It is bad but it might be worse.

Killam's Kollum

A Hard Question

The editor's secretary sometimes asks questions which it is hard to answer. Here is the latest question: "Mr. Killam, why do the pastors who have the help of evangelists always give them such unreasonable boosts. Is it a part of the agreement?" We can vouch for the fact but we are unable to answer the question. An analysis of many such "news" items will show 90 per cent publicity, 5 per cent "news" and the balance "chinking." That is why some of you do not recognize your own contributions.

Baptismal Font For Sale

THE BAPTIST is proving a good advertising medium. We have received some pretty good orders for space during the present year, based upon results secured from smaller copy the past year. There are some lines, however, which it does not pay to advertise in THE BAPTIST. For instance: "For Sale—Baptismal font, galv. iron, thirty-four inches diameter, forty-eight high." Our reply: "Such an advertisement would cost you 6 cents per word. Common business honesty, requires us to say that a Baptist newspaper is a poor medium in which to advertise a baptismal font. We might be arrested for taking money under false pretenses."

Does Not Always Agree With Wife

DR. C. H. BARLOW, who has been set aside by the Foreign Society for special research work, is busy at his task in Shaohsing, Chekiang, China. In a personal letter to the editor he tells us of the arrival of a daughter. "She promises to grow up into a great woman and I hope she keeps her promise," writes the father. The doctor's work is of a very confining nature and his "microscope" eye has been on a strike and this has made the work more difficult. He has, however, been able to read THE BAPTIST. We almost blush to quote what he has to say about the paper. "I am better and better pleased with THE BAPTIST each week. I like its clean-cut views and its steady adherence to its purpose and its generous liberality. I like its Christian outlook and its orthodoxy, which is only another name for straight teaching. I do not always agree with it, but neither do I always agree with my wife. It would be a poor sort of a paper that had to be printed so that every man might always agree with it. I surmise that the editor himself does not always agree with it, but it is a good paper for all that and it is the first denominational paper that I have ever felt that I had time to really read. God bless it."

Dr. James L. Barton, secretary of the American board of commissioners for foreign missions and chairman of the Near East Relief, has been meeting various groups in New York and other cities and giving most graphic and significant pictures of his several weeks' stay at the famous conference. One interesting thing about Doctor Barton's visit was that he seemed to get closer to the Turkish delegates than any one else present, official or unofficial delegates. One thing has been made very apparent and that is that Turkey has come back, and henceforth the nations will have to meet Turkey as an equal. Says Doctor Barton: "That Turkey has come back may be unpalatable to many of us but it is a solid fact. Our institutions have got to plan to turn their attention to taking care of an unprecedented number of Turkish students, but they will go on under the new conditions and they will ultimately, I hope, revolutionize the life of Turkey." Regarding American institutions in Turkey, which was the branch of the discussion in which Doctor Barton was particularly employed, he declared that in spite of many disappointments the conference had demonstrated that the Turks were anxious to retain the American institutions in their country. He said that he was entirely convinced that promises given for their protection were sincere and would be lived up to, if Ismet Pasha and other Lausanne delegates continued in power. Doctor Barton also emphasized the fact that the American delegation had stuck to four main points and had won three of them; the open straits issue, the retension of the Greek patriarchate at Constantinople and the indemnification of the Armenians who had left their property behind in Turkey. The fourth point—the Armenian's national home—he declared was temporarily lost.

The Rope in the Belfry

OLD Christmas Evans, the fiery, one-eyed Welsh Baptist preacher who used to sway his countrymen by the magic of his eloquence, once said, "Prayer is the rope in the belfry; we pull it and a bell rings in heaven!"

This statement does not set forth a merely magical theory of prayer; it simply states what is fundamentally true not only of prayer but of all religion which is spiritual and which recognizes the supernatural. It does not, of course, apply at all to a religion of man's own making, whose communings are only self-communings like those of the Pharisee "who prayed with himself," whose prayer is only a spiritual gymnastic for exercising the sinews of the soul, prayer which does not reach—and is not expected to reach—heaven or God; a religion in which sinful man must be his own savior, or indeed is not considered sinful but merely unfortunate or ignorant or immature; a religion in which Jesus Christ is not a divine Saviour to lift us to our feet and then to walk with us life's difficult way, but is only a friendly adviser and a shining example. No, such a religion rings no bell in heaven, does not reach into the dwelling place of God; cannot bring to the soul struggling with its sin the divine help needed for a new start, a transformed life, a veritable rebirth. But a spiritual religion is a veritable cord reaching up into the belfry of heaven; a bell peals out there in the presence-chamber of the King; our weakest signal is received in his holy habitation.

Our denomination has always stood for a spiritual religion as against not only rationalism but ritualism and especially as against the delusive crutch of state support or a compulsory religion. Before the Protestant Reformation it sealed with its blood its protest against the idea of sacramental grace, whereby at the tinkling of a little bell the priest was presumed to work the miracle of transforming bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ. And when Protestantism itself in Germany, in Switzerland, in France, in England, and even in New England, dared not consistently cut loose from a supporting state and trust God's truth to its own inherent power it was the Baptists scattered and persecuted throughout Europe and then in a commonwealth of their own in America, who dared risk not merely asking for themselves but granting to all others absolute liberty in matters of religious faith, and absolute freedom for religion itself from governmental support.

And now the handful of corn in the mountain-top has increased until it waves like Lebanon. Eight millions of members call themselves by the Baptist name in America. They are about one-third of all evangelical members in our land, with a constituency, according to the usual reckoning, of more than twenty millions. The president himself and the highest appointive officer of our government, the one who with such notable efficiency represents this government in its relations with the nations of earth, bear our denominational name. What blessing God has given to the principle of spiritual religion, and to the faith which dared in the smallest and most friendless commonwealth to cut loose from all state support or compulsion of conscience and has seen this vast nation and others throughout the world adopt its position in their fundamental law.

But Baptists dare not go out of business. Our witness is still needed even in this land. We stand most strongly for the spiritual ideal, and for the freest church government, and the least of formalism in worship. We maintain the soul's right of direct approach to God in Christ. No ordinance, nor promise of parent, nor act of priest, nor mere assent to a creed, nor sacramental rite, nor committal of fate to a church—nothing may come between us and God or do the work of faith for us. We are consistent in our witness to the necessity of a new birth before church membership. Our baptism on profession of faith and our maintenance of the significant emblematic mode of the New Testament holds this ever before a forgetful world.

An unspiritual Baptist church is almost a contradiction in terms. We have no reason for being if we lose our spiritual character. God help us if through any pride of prosperity or intellectuality we let it slip from us. Nothing in this world or any other can compensate us for the loss of that connecting cord which reaches up into the belfry of heaven, but with it no task is too gigantic, no sacrifice too great for us to meet.

The Need for Speed

ONE day last week we were on a journey along a well traveled city street which leads into the growing suburbs of a thriving metropolis. Half of the street was occupied by the raised right-of-way of a trolley line, the other half was allotted to vehicle traffic.

Travel in both directions was very heavy so that it was well nigh impossible for an automobile to pass any other vehicle going in the same direction. Consequently the pace was set by the slowest vehicle on the road ahead of you.

For some miles we moved along fairly well, then suddenly we were slowed down by the machine in front of us and soon a mile or more of vehicles just crawled along the road.

Then all of a sudden the automobile ahead of us began to gather headway and we at once did likewise. Soon we passed a side street and drawn into it just enough to let us pass was an old-fashioned one-horse lumber wagon with the driver perched on its seat. As we shot by it our chauffeur leaned out, waved his hand and cried, "Thanks!" And the man on the wagon waved back and smiled upon us.

In its day the lumber wagon was a most useful vehicle, but its day has largely gone. This is the automobile age. Now, the advent of the auto does not change any law of God; it uses the same laws of motion that its predecessor did, but it makes a fresh application of those laws of motion to its method of propulsion.

We have no quarrel with any slow-moving, old-fashioned brothers or sisters driving a church lumber wagon unless they persist in slowing down the rest of us who want to travel faster. We remember that in their real day perhaps they moved as fast as anybody.

We wish, however, that all such people in our local churches would have the grace and good sense not to keep the road occupied so as to slow down all the other members while they continue to crawl along. It is well nigh impossible to pass the slow vehicle of the slow-moving brothers and sisters unless they lovingly move aside to allow us to speed on.

Keep on the road, slow-moving people, we do not want you to leave it. We love you, and will greet you kindly and smile upon you if you will just let the rest of us get by you and travel on fast enough to keep up the speed necessary to make real progress along the Christian road of today. Drive an old-fashioned church finance wagon if you must, but let the rest of the church membership ride in a modern vehicle.

We are sure the time has come when the out-of-date slow mover must no longer be allowed to set the pace for all the rest of the church. Yes, it is possible to travel too fast, but the average church suffers more from slowness than from speed.

We must travel fast enough in stewardship, in missionary enterprise, in church finance or in religious education to make real progress and keep our place in the line of march. That means automobile speed and not the pace of a lumber wagon. Out of the way, if you please, Mr. Lumber Wagon Driver, and let the rest of us speed on in the automobile of Christian progress.

Safety First

THE pleasure of accumulation has a strong fascination for most men. They have a peculiar joy in seeing a carefully laid plan reaching out into many years yielding its expected results. The story of such lives, successful in winning wealth, reveals a succession of conquests over difficulties. What were stumbling blocks to others were stepping stones to them.

But after the period of accumulation—what then? Such a time brings the moment when a man seriously sits down to make a will. First of all, he naturally thinks of his own family and such other relatives as are in need of his gifts, but many persons in making their wills have arranged that annuities should be paid to their relatives, friends and servants through the missionary societies. There are manifest advantages in arranging for such annuities.

We Move a Trial for Heresy

IT is now proposed, according to the secular press, that the imprecatory psalms be deleted from the book of common prayer. It seems to be assumed that perhaps those ancient writers credited the Almighty with some of their own feelings and passions. At any rate these sections of the scripture are not especially needed in a day when the world is torn asunder by national, racial and social hatreds. Are not the bishops who make these recommendations open to the charges of heresy? They appear anxious to substitute something about a God who causes his sun to rise upon the bad and good alike, and sends rain upon the righteous and unrighteous. They want men to be sons of their Father in heaven. You will note that they do not suggest that the imprecatory portions in question are not a part, and properly so, of the scriptures. All they want is to leave them in the Bible so that it will not be necessary to use them in the course of public worship. In other words these bishops are the same kind of heretics that most of us are. We open the Bible and take from it what pleases us best, or what seems to be most helpful in our present stage of Christian development.

Cannot Estop Decision

ONE thing an editor never lacks. He may be without money; he usually is. He may be without judgment and sense. He may suffer from the want of other things—but he is never without advice.

It is a most hopeful sign that scores of people week by week take the time to write pages of advice. They tell us what we ought to say and ought not to say. They give minute directions as to what we should do and what we should refrain from doing.

At a first glance it would seem this interest upon the part of our friends should greatly simplify an editor's life. What man filled with the perplexities of life would not welcome dependable guidance? Aye, there's the rub—dependable. We find ourselves under the necessity of choosing between conflicting advice. It is a question which is the harder, to choose one's course from facts in his own possession or to choose between divergent courses pointed out by equally sincere editorial guides.

A Page of Opinion

Uniting by Dividing

A WEEK ago we called attention to the first annual meeting of the Baptist Bible Union of America in Kansas City just before the meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention. The Religious Herald of Richmond comments at length upon the movement and expresses the fear that the articles of faith which are intended to be, in the words of the authors, "at once a rallying center for the faithful among us, and a unifying force among all them who truly believe," will "unite by dividing."

The Herald's fears seem to center in the article which reads, "We believe in the literal, personal, bodily and imminent return of our Lord." The Herald continues: "In this realm of doctrine we can afford to have a wide fellowship and large liberty of thought and belief. Certainly those who believe that Jesus will come again as he said he would, need not be required to furnish as a part of their creed a detailed program of that august event which lies in the lap of God. Nevertheless, so dogmatic are these brethren, who are leading spokesmen for this so-called Baptist Bible Union of America, on this issue along with others, that they make the following declaration: 'We propose, henceforth, to lend assistance only to such churches, educational institutions and missionary organizations and stations as stand with us for these clear Bible and historic Baptist teachings.'" "That of course," says the Herald, "cuts out all Southern Baptist enterprises."

Having dismissed the doctrinal matter the editor turns to practical matters as stated in the foreword of the Bible Union statement: "The Baptist people of the earth are at the present in sad confusion and their fellowship is torn by increasing controversy. Practically every convention, state and local association, and almost every mission station and local church is the subject and scene of strife." The Herald's comment is: "What an amazing misrepresentation this is of the condition of affairs in the Baptist denomination." The editor then cites conditions in state and local associations which belie the charge.

"Assuming, however, that the authors of this astounding statement are sincere and have facts which others do not have the Herald doubts the efficiency of the methods proposed to bring unity. As a remedy 'they send out a creed which when it comes to dealing with the second coming of our Lord sets down as essential to this new fellowship and as fundamental in Christian doctrine what is commonly known as premillennialism.'" The editorial concludes: "Let us say once more that it gives us real pain to set these things down, but we surely cannot be mistaken in thinking that the time has come when these good brethren ought to be asked to reconsider their method of procedure, and to warn them that if they do not, instead of promoting the unity and solidarity of our people, they will contribute as far as their influence goes to the spirit of disintegration and confusion."

"Abhor That Which Is Evil"

DR. R. B. PEERY in the Lutheran says some searching things about the Christian's attitude toward evil. We bring you the gist of his message.

"Every Christian must come in contact with wrong and vice, as he journeys through this world. What shall he do in regard to it? What attitude shall he assume toward it?

"Now, there are just three possible attitudes toward evil—indulgence, indifference and abhorrence.

"Indulgence is the attitude of the sinner, the libertine, the thief. That way lies suffering, remorse, jails, penitentiaries, the madhouse. It is an impossible way for the Christian, since he is to 'depart from evil and do good;' 'to touch not the unclean thing;' 'to come out from among them and be perfect.'

"Indifference is the attitude of the moral and physical weakling, who sees glaring wrongs flourishing about him, and complacently shrugs his shoulders, saying, 'Such things are bad, but it is no concern of mine; why should I make myself unpopular, and perhaps injure my business, by speaking out against them?' According to the law of the land, a man who knows of murder, arson, or other serious crime, and who keeps quiet about it, is punished as an accessory after the fact; and many Christians become partners in the sins of evildoers because they aid in their concealment by silent acquiescence.

"Abhorrence is the only right attitude for a Christian to take towards wrong doing. The command comes ringing down through the ages. 'Abhor that which is evil;' make no compromise with sin, but cast it out root and branch!"

The Victory of Defeat

ON another page we call attention to the results of an election in Detroit. In this account we quote from the paid publicity of those who opposed Judge Pliny W. Marsh and his colleagues. We congratulate these friends of law and order upon their defeat. We should have been glad of their reelection, but a defeat at the hands of their opponents is a high testimony to the character and fearlessness of the defeated candidates. To be retired because one has been outspoken in favor of civic decency and faithful in discharge of duty as a public servant is more of a victory than an election at the hands of those who set themselves against such conduct.

HYPYP

THE above is not found in the list of radio broadcasting stations. The signature, however, is of more than passing interest to all Baptists. As a denomination we are under a strain, for more than $5,000,000 must be received before the close of this month or our work will be curtailed and our debts will not be decreased. The results are all bound in the answer which we give to HYPYP within the month. Yes, will mean victory. It will mean progress. All that it means eternity alone can tell. Have You Paid Your Pledge?

Is Compulsory Baptism Decreasing?

By L. C. Barnes

RELATIVELY it is decreasing greatly. Positively it is decreasing noticeably. It is no longer performed at wholesale. It is no longer except by sacramentarians regarded as essential to eternal welfare. Many of those who still practice it do so with decreasing emphasis and with changing interpretation as to what it means. It looks pallid as compared with the days of its vigor.

The Grand Prince of Russia, Vladimir, having decided to make his empire Christian, in the year 988 drove his subjects at the point of the bayonet into the River Dnieper to be "baptized." Uncounted thousands thus were christened. It is inconceivable that they were thereby Christianized. This wholesale immersion was not a religious act. It could not be religious because it was compulsory, and an indispensable element in religion is that it be voluntary. Any act to be rightly called religious must have volition as its most essential factor.

None Qualified to Be Censorious

We none of us are qualified to be censorious of others. It is chastening to us all to remember that even the noblest of bodies may harbor atrophied or left-over organs—one vermiform appendix or another. In 1922, 175,813 infants were "baptized" in the United States by three denominations closely akin to ourselves, many of whose members are better Christians than many of us. Scores of other pedo-Baptist bodies, including the Roman Catholic, christened other hundreds of thousands. The tenth century Russians could have refused to be "baptized," though perhaps at the cost of their lives. But the twentieth century infants were helpless. Their so-called "baptism" was in the fullest sense of the word compulsory; was in fact without a possibility of choice or refusal. It is well known that the practice originated in the idea that a ceremony of itself can convey some divine grace, as it were by magic. Is this particular vestige of outgrown ideas increasing or diminishing?

Not long ago an official of one of the pedo-Baptist denominations (Congregationalist) showed me by the tables in a year book of his body that infant "baptisms" were comparatively few among the old line American churches, and persisted in considerable numbers only in the churches of recent European extraction. Apparently the democratic atmosphere of our country was eliminating the compulsory act in the name of religion and leaving it for personal choice.

A loyal member of a compulsory baptism church has looked up facts from another point of view. Two of the large denominations which are comparable with Baptists in size, and which are also very near and dear to us in spirit, are, in fact, our intimate fellow-workers, leading us in many forms of devotions to the kingdom of God and greatly surpassing us in not a few respects, show the following facts: In 1922, the Methodists (M. E. North only) reported 111,117 infant baptisms. That was twenty-six to every thousand members. The earliest year for which data could be obtained was only sixty-five years earlier when the infant baptisms were thirty-two per thousand members. It is noticeable when every church, or group of churches of one thousand members has six fewer compulsory baptisms in a year now than an equal "circuit" had in 1857.

Turning to the Presbyterian (North), figures are given a generation earlier than for the Methodists. On that account or some other they show a much greater diminution in the ratio of compulsory baptisms. In 1922 they report 42,311 infant baptisms. That is fifty-one fewer per thousand members now than in 1827.

It is doubtful whether an elaborate study of all the compulsory baptism denominations would yield substantially different results. The other two very large compulsory baptism sects, the Roman Catholic and the Lutheran, would in all likelihood show less rather than larger changes in the practice.

Voluntary Principle Destined to Win

A distinguished minister of a denomination which practices compulsory baptism has recently printed statistics which are significant on another aspect of the question. He is one of the experts of the country in figures. Some of his classifications have been adopted by the government in the 1920 census. Dr. Walter Laidlaw, with his minute skill, compared the last government takings of a religious census, those of 1906 and 1916. He finds that in this ten-year period the population of the United States increased 17.1 per cent; the Roman Catholic 10.6 per cent; the Protestants 23.4 per cent, and the bodies practicing believers or voluntary baptism 28.2 per cent. Here is unmistakable evidence of what is going on in the free atmosphere of America. The body which clings most tenaciously to the idea that a ceremony, apart from volition, can convey religious values fell in growth far behind the general growth of population, although in that ten years it was replenished by enormous accessions from Europe. The bodies having less faith in sacramentarian religion grew decidedly faster than the population. But the bodies which utterly repudiate sacramentarianism and will have nothing to do with its survival in compulsory baptism, grew very much faster still and nearly three times faster than the Roman Catholics. The voluntary principle in religion is destined finally to win. The people who began four centuries ago to lay down their lives by the hundreds of thousands in protest against compulsory baptism and obtained a name thereby, have turned that nick-

AND why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?

Every one that cometh unto me, and heareth my words, and doeth them, I will shew you to whom he is like:

He is like a man building a house, who digged and went deep and laid a foundation upon a rock: and when a flood arose, the stream brake against that house, and could not shake it: because it had been well builded.

But he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that built a house upon the earth without a foundation; against which the stream brake, and straightway it fell in; and the ruin of that house was great.
—Jesus.

name into a name of high honor. Multitudes of people, however, suppose that the name Baptist means the opposite of what it does mean. It stands historically, and quite as much actually today as ever, for voluntary instead of compulsory baptism—not for magnifying baptism, but for making it utterly subordinate to personal character, in fact nothing and considerably worse than nothing without the antecedent spiritual character. As the only value of baptism is as an expression of will, it has no validity of any kind where there is no will expressed. To ask Baptist churches to receive members without baptism is to ask them to do what none of the other churches, except the Friends, are willing to do. It is infant baptism which is keeping Christendom d i v i d e d, more deeply divided, than any other one thing.

What ought to be done about the vestige of an outworn conception of religion—compulsory baptism? The Roman Catholic doctor of divinity and great preacher, Balthazar Hubmeir, in the early part of the sixteenth century took the only scientific course, utterly repudiating infant or compulsory baptism. In that pre-scientific age he paid the penalty of his rational advance by being burned at the stake. In both Germany and England multitudes went with him. The best thing to do with compulsory baptism is to quit it at whatever cost. There is a sound suggestion by analogy in the recent published statement of the eminent physician, Dr. W. W. Keen, speaking of another matter purely scientific: "The best known example of a vestigial organ is the appendix, which, in some of the lower animals, is well developed and functions actively. Its frequent inflammation is also a good example of the fact that such imperfect vestigial organs are very prone to become diseased and often require the surgeon's skill to avert disaster. The only really safe place for the appendix is in the surgeon's collection of trophies."

There are at least thirty-six denominations of Christians in the United States which have cut out compulsory baptism. They number over ten million living members, every one of whom has chosen for himself to confess Christ in an emblem of resurrection to a voluntary new life. 95 per cent of them are known as Baptists and Disciples. Would it not be a good thing for all of these voluntary baptism bodies, which are growing in numbers so much more rapidly in proportion to population than the compulsory baptism bodies, to hold at least one great national convention to make unmistakable to a misapprehending world the central factor in their testimony?

At any rate the great Baptist body which has never for an instant recognized baptism by compulsion, either physical or metaphysical, as having any validity whatever, cannot begin to recognize it as valid at this late hour when the practice is waning in the light of day. A terrific crisis is now on in human thought. Is the universe at heart mechanistic or is it personal? The people who have long existed for the cutting out of the mechanistic and the supremacy of the vital are called upon as never before to give their testimony unequivocally. We must put incessant vigor into our age-long testimony for only "believers baptism" that is, voluntary instead of compulsory baptism.

The glad response of human personality to the divine Personality is all that is real in religion. That is the whole of it in the home, in the church, in the factory, in the store, on the farm, in the state, in mankind. What a positive, transforming, magnificent, yes, infinite reality!

A Message from the Finance Committee

To the churches of the Northern Baptist Convention

Your committee desires to call attention to the necessity of replenishing the treasuries of our missionary societies and boards and of our schools and colleges.

We need $10,000,000 for the year ending April 30. More than this amount has been pledged. So far about half this sum has been received.

The gifts of the living, supplemented by the income from invested funds, provide only for the bare necessities of our work.

The command of our Lord, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," was never more urgent than it is today.

The challenge of the world's need was never more insistent.

Less than a month remains before the close of the fourth fiscal year of our cooperative program.

Let every member examine himself and see whether he is doing his part.

We must not stand still. Let us all go forward together—in his name—confident of victory.

Fraternally yours,

D. C. Shull, Chairman

Woods A. Caperton, Indianapolis
George W. Coleman, Boston
Joseph C. Hazen, Orange
Orrin R. Judd, New York
Frank H. Lindsay, Milwaukee
Corwin S. Shank, Seattle
Walter A. Staub, New York
Ambrose Swasey, Cleveland

Finance Committee of the Northern Baptist Convention

New York, April 2, 1923

(We ask that this message be read at both the morning and the evening service in every church not later than April 15 and that it be published in the weekly church calendar.)

Immanuel Church Proposition

A communication from Dr. W. C. Bitting, corresponding secretary, will be of interest to our readers. The letter follows:

"Since large publicity has been given to the proposition of the Immanuel Baptist Church to transfer its property to the Baptist denomination, it is thought wise by the executive committee to make a statement concerning the outcome of the conference held in the city of New York, Tuesday, Mar. 6, and Wednesday, Mar. 7, at which there were representatives from the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, from the law committee of the Northern Baptist Convention, from the American Baptist Home Mission Society, from the Immanuel Baptist Church, and also Mr. A. M. Harris, who had been chairman of the special committee to consider the Immanuel Church proposition at its meeting held Feb. 1. With the members of the Immanuel Church not voting upon the question the conference adopted the following:

'Resolved, After full and free discussion of the proposition of the Immanuel Baptist Church of Chicago relating to the transfer of its property, this conference declares its appreciation of the generous motives of said church, but on account of the many serious legal and practical questions which we consider are involved in this matter, we recommend to the Immanuel Baptist Church that they take up this matter with the Baptist Executive Council of Chicago, looking to the transfer of its property to that body under such terms and agreements as may be made between the two organizations.'

"It is impossible without undue trespass upon the space of your columns to give in full a statement of the reasons which led the conference to adopt this resolution.

"Copies of the report of the conference have been transmitted to the organizations represented therein."

Radio Helps Win the Goal

By a Church Treasurer

I assure you that Friday of last week I was very much discouraged in regard to securing the amount of our goal for this year; for we were then $225 short and we did not know where it was coming from, but we got busy and sent out radiograms to all the people in arrears on their pledges, and on Sunday morning I stated the situation to the members and by the time the church service was over, I had the amount needed in sight. All this in spite of the fact that we have lost members during the year who were paying about $50 per quarter and we have no new ones to replace them.

What Would You Do?

BY HELEN M. HUDSON

THE business-like way to run a business, a home or a profession is to make the outgo meet the income. In other words, the saying, "cut your garment to fit your cloth" is a most laudable attitude. When the gifts to missionary work showed a natural shrinkage coincident with the after-war financial depression, many people took this philosophical attitude. This was natural, considering the general ignorance of the complexities of missionary finance.

It is difficult for a person to realize the difficulties—nay, almost impossibilities—of reducing the expenses upon the mission field. A year ago a 25 per cent reduction was made. In some places this had the wholesome effect of stimulating native support. Associations and churches took over responsibility of certain blocks of work—fees were raised in school, et cetera. This beneficent effect, however, was felt only in the places where Christianity had a strong foothold as a result of years of investment of both money and effort. In the frontier places, the reduction meant deferring still longer the promises of hope and harvest; it meant the stopping of new projects. Moreover, it meant in many places that an under-manned station remained under-manned and the missionary continued to carry along the already too heavy burden.

May we take you into our confidence and show you the difficulties of reducing a missionary budget? It may be compared to a mother who sees her children facing starvation. What is she to do? Let some of them starve that the others may live? If so, how can she choose which ones may live? It is a harsh comparison, but not exaggerated. Many mothers since 1914 have faced that alternative. The Woman's Foreign Mission Society in the first ten months of this year has received less than one-half of the money needed to carry on the year's work.

Shall some of her children weaken and perhaps die because there is not food enough for all? If you were in her place which ones would you have her neglect?

The smallest, the weakest, the ones needing the most tender care and loving devotion? The missionaries have cared for and loved those little isolated village schools—the only evidence of Christian enlightenment in a heathen community. It will break the heart of the missionary to close the door and tell the faithful teacher that her services can be used no longer, but what else can she do if there is not enough money for all?

The gay, rollicking boys and girls who will make the Christian leaders of tomorrow? A letter from one missionary illustrates her dilemma: "I have found relatives of some of the orphans from whom I am extorting a little, but for the most part we have got to continue supporting these sixty-six orphans until we can find suitable husbands for them or start them in life in other ways. In other words, we will have to wait for them to grow up." Can we close this school?

A BAPTISMAL SCENE IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

As the sun in its passage brings the glory of the morning, there is the sound of little red chairs being pushed across the floor or the scurry of bare feet on the sand as each kindergartner finds his place in the circle. Through the babel of many languages, rises the tune, "Jesus loves me, this I know." As the sun shines on one circle after another, the dreamy little maidens in gay fluttering kimonos, the roly-poly youngsters in quilted trousers and coats, the big-eyed, brown-skinned children in calico frocks, and woolly-headed mischief makers clad in not much of anything—to which circles would you ask the teacher to say this morning, "You need not come tomorrow for the kindergarten must be closed?"

The strong, mature children who are able to help others? Over the rugged hills, through the jungles, and among the villages, travels the Bible woman, walking the path of helpfulness and carrying the message of hope. Shall she be dismissed because there are no funds with which to pay her, and because she has children of her own, must she find remuneration elsewhere?

Through the big gate passes the morning procession for the dispensary. The trees cast fanciful shadows over the white walls of the hospital. The gentle voice of the Bible woman, reading to the waiting group on the piazza, comes through the still air, "The Son of Man came to save that which was lost." Within, quick footsteps pass to and fro; skillful hands minister to suffering. Love, hope, peace and happiness permeates all. The missionary doctor studies the ledger with heavy heart.

In spite of careful planning, the accounts show a deficit—insufficient funds for the future. What can she do—close the hospital for three months? That seems the only solution.

Out in the open air, around the stone baptistry, several hundred people were gathered to witness the solemn rite of baptism. Blossoms yielded forth their fragrance from the surface of the water. Within the pool were reflected the serious faces of the thirty-two young men and women who were confessing before the world their determination to follow Christ as Master and Lord. The voices of the group rose in solemn beauty as they sang the beautiful Christian hymn, "He leadeth me." As we consider these two pictures, there comes to us the query, "Which shall we cut off—the hospitals with their promise of Christian harvest, or the higher schools with their promise of Christian leaders?" There would be no question if the lives of your own children were endangered. You would strain every nerve, exert every effort, to provide sufficient food for them all.

There is but one thing we can do now in the face of the present situation! That is: Make it unnecessary for any life to suffer, for any work to be curtailed, by paying the balance of your pledge to the New World Movement in the remaining month before the close of the fiscal year, Apr. 30.

It is not a hopeless task; it is a joyful task—If you do as much as you would do if the lives of your own children were endangered.

Some Impressions of the Spiritual State of El Salvador and Nicaragua

By Samuel Graham Neil

IT WAS with joyful anticipation that I started in company with Rev. C. S. Detweiler of New York City, who is superintendent of Latin-American work for the Home Mission Society, on a tour of inspection of our Baptist mission work in the Central-American republics of El Salvador and Nicaragua. The memory of my two previous visits to Porto Rico is evergreen; and the unfortunate happenings to the work in El Salvador in recent months made me all the more eager to meet our beloved missionaries, native pastors and brethren, and assure them of the prayerful sympathy of their brethren in the land from which I came. Now that my visit is over, I have to confess that my hopes were fully realized.

The Home Mission Society, the Women's Home Mission Society and Publication Society are at work in the above republics. From the beginning of the work there have been numerous evidences that the Lord is working wonders in the midst of his people. No less than sixty-five churches and out-stations are manned by our missionaries, colporters and native pastors in El Salvador, while twenty-five churches and out-stations are manned in Nicaragua.

Rapid Development

It was thrilling to see and hear of the rapid development of recent years in the face of endless difficulties, opposition and indifference; and to learn of the way in which the gospel is remaking lands and peoples once blind to the truth.

Our visit to the cities of San Salvador, Santa Ana, and San Miguel in El Salvador, and to the cities of Managua and Leon in Nicaragua, meant all sorts of meetings, conferences, and interviews—morning, noon, and night—endless committees, that were crowded into the late hours, and the generous and unstinted hospitality of the general missionaries, Rev. P. T. Chapman and Rev. D. A. Wilson, and their wives, taxed to their utmost capacity.

It was indeed "a vision of the kingdom" that dawned upon all who attended the institute in San Salvador City and Managua. No one who has never visited El Salvador and Nicaragua can form the faintest conception of the pressure of body, brain and soul which characterized the devoted missionaries and native pastors who gathered to pray and plan greater things for the spiritual conquest of Central America.

The "Temple Bautista," in which the meetings were held in San Salvador City, is a thoroughly modern and up-to-date building, and is a powerful witness to our Baptist faith and practice. An imperative need at Managua is a modern church building. The present rented building is altogether too small to accommodate the congregations. The evening services in connection with the institute were densely crowded, many people being compelled to sit on the floor and around the pulpit platform, or stand wherever standing space was available. Here in Managua is an unusually good opportunity for some good Baptist to erect a memorial church building to the memory of some departed loved one. It would be one of the finest investments of missionary money and kingdom extension of which I know. A fine corner lot about 100 by 150 feet has already been secured and paid for. It is finely located and is just about two blocks from the heart of the city.

Our Baptist colleges in Managua and Santa Ana, El Salvador, have outgrown their buildings. The teaching faculty of our Women's Home Mission Society has made these colleges great educational centers for Nicaragua and El Salvador.

"Not Strength to Bring Forth!"

By Horace W. Cole

IS it possible that the condition that Hezekiah felt is being repeated in these days of tremendous anxiety? Is it possible, while from many lands thousands are pleading for Christian leaders and teachers, that the church has not sufficient spiritual strength to provide that which is necessary for their spiritual birth? Shall the church of Jesus Christ dissipate its strength in such a pregnant hour as this? Shall it, under the very awe of the new birth, find itself unequal in the hour of travail?

To fail to bring forth in this hour will mean the death of the church. If these are the fruits of the Spirit of God then this is the hour when, under His mighty presence, it must "travail in pain." We must be willing to enter the valley of death if our hearts are to rejoice, or we ourselves be saved.

"As soon as Zion travailed she brought forth her children." These must be days of travail for the churches of Jesus Christ. Let us deny ourselves, gird ourselves, seclude ourselves, but labor together that immortal souls may be born into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord.

The colleges are real centers of life—evangelical and educational—while the teachers are spiritual, keen, earnest, and intensely devoted to the interests of the people whom they serve.

The two words which seem to sum up our campaigns are "prayer" and "Calvary," for there has been a deep spirit of prayer upon our people, and an intense desire to know more of the meaning of Calvary, which our missionaries and native pastors feel is the place of power in the spiritual life.

The prayer needs for El Salvador and Nicaragua are many and urgent, but, broadly speaking, they may be classified under two heads:

1. The need of school buildings for school purposes, with accommodations for the training of native pastors and missionaries. We realize the need of greater and more efficient witness to the old, permanent and ever-effective truths of the gospel. Such training and school buildings would be of inestimable value to our work in the coming years.

2. A deepened spirit of brotherly love, producing a Christ-like attitude towards other religious organizations working in Central America. Present-day circumstances are not generally conducive to a keen and living witness for the Lord Jesus, consequently, prayer that in all things our missionaries and native pastors may adorn the gospel of the Lord Jesus, will be of great help.

Although there have been, and still are, difficulties, we feel that prayer is winning through, and we would appeal to all who read this: "Brethren, pray for the work in Central America."

It was a great joy to have the missionaries and native pastors of the Central-American mission meet with us, and cordially cooperate in the institute at Managua. Brother Karl Hummel gave a number of addresses on timely topics.

Our Task and Methods

Our problem in Central America is not one of polemics. With a people, the larger percentage of which is illiterate and the remainder of whom are largely untrained in analytical thinking, and of a bellicose temperament, few indeed can follow a logical argument and reach accurate conclusions. The only argument that appeals to the masses is the argumentum ad hominem, the spicier the better; and that gives the victory to the quickest in offensive repartée, and usually to the most skilful blackguard. But that is not Christianity's forte.

Nor is it our task to correct differential theology, as many missionaries formerly supposed. That almost involves controversy, and even when it does not it is a long and doubtful task. The supreme need of the masses in Catholic countries is not so much correction of image worship, confession, purgatory, transubstantiation, infallibility, etc., as it is light about those fundamental things they are supposed to hold in common with all Christendom—such as God, the Incarnate Christ, the Holy Spirit, sin, regeneration, companionship with God. When these are corrected, differential theology takes care of itself. We are not saved by theological terms; it is the conveyed concept that counts, and it is our duty to convey the concepts that Christ left for the inheritance of mankind. God the Father, as Christ revealed him, gives us the mental picture of an infinite, loving, sympathetic personality—a Father, in the tenderest sense of the term, who "walks with us and talks with us and tells us we are his own." But the Latin-American God, like that of the African animist, is an ascetic being who finds satisfaction in the suffering of his most faithful devotees, in hair-shirt torture, flaggellation, or even worse mortal agony—an absentee divinity approachable only through the church and the priest on earth, and through the virgin Mary and the saints in heaven. They have made the mistake of losing the Father that Christ taught, and substituting therefor an institution, "a soulless corporation" —while everywhere the human soul is hungering for the companionship of that Infinite Personality. This, not the differential theology, is why the Baptist witness is so sorely needed in the Central American republics.

The Roman Catholic ideal of worship is very different from that of Baptist believers. Its functionary is a priest who offers sacrifice, and performs the ceremonials of an elaborate ritual. Its appeal is chiefly to the senses and the sensibilities. Baptists on the other hand, hold that the minister is not a priest, but a teacher; his function is not the performance of ceremonies, but the inculcation of truth. Baptists rely upon ideas rather than upon ceremonies, because they know that only by the intelligent apprehension of truth can the spiritual life be really nourished and developed. In a Romish church the central thing is the altar. In a Baptist church the central thing is the pulpit. In fact, Roman Catholic churches were not built for preaching. They are expressions in stone of religious aspirations; they are "frozen music;" they are places for processions, and incense, and altars, and pictures, and vestments and chants, but they were never intended for preaching. No man could make himself heard throughout some of them. The furnishings in many of the churches in Central America are of the most tawdry character, mere make-believes.

In the cathedral in San Salvador City I saw the most unusual job lot of pews that I ever set eyes upon within the four walls of a church building. It was such a collection of chairs, benches, pews, and stools of every description, as you would expect to find at a rummage sale in America, and even then, much of the space was unoccupied. When we reject the Roman Catholic system, the danger is, that we all too easily lapse into the mistake of rejecting also its poor victims. Let us not be guilty of hating the victims instead of hating the system. It is not our job to persecute Catholics. If we do that, we may find that they are twice as well prepared for that kind of warfare as we are. Let us love them into the truth. By approaching them in the right way, it is really surprising how hungrily they devour the New Testament truth concerning Christ and the church, and then themselves from within correct their own erroneous theology. In Central America "the fields are white unto the harvest." The great need is for more missionaries, more churches, more teachers and more schools.

Baptist Work Where Thinking Is a Vice

By W. H. Morse

"THINKING is a vice. The Baptists make people think."

How is that for an opinion?—the expression of public opinion in Spain. It is said in all sincerity. By the Spanish people the "vice of thinking" is reckoned with the other "deadly sins." Thinking is discouraged. Teaching is superficial and one-sided. Modern criticism is excluded, and history and the natural sciences are admitted in none other than that which is aptly called in England a "bowdlerized" form. In the Roman Catholic church, the schools, everywhere, any kind of teaching that tends to stimulate curiosity and lead to the asking of questions is not encouraged. The alertness and quick wit of our American children would be a shock to the teachers in the Spanish elementary schools, that is, if these teachers, who are mainly Jesuits, and give out a thin quality of instruction, are liable to shock.

And "Baptists make people think!" Serious indictment. Baptists foster vice! Ergo, Baptists are not wanted in Spain. Not but what there are other vices in Spain beside thinking. Espana, a popular Spanish weekly, recently discussed vice. It said: "In Spain there are three admirably organized institutions: The bull-fights, which are the great national vice, the great intoxicant in which collective energy is drowned, our paralyzing opiate; Catholicism, whose end is to excite in the minds of men an aversion from all interest in this life, and to project attention upon another imaginary life, in order that in the shadow of this trickery there may live an enormous ecclesiastical bureaucracy; and gambling, which substitutes trust in a moment of luck for hope in every-day effort." Verily, thinking as a vice is in doubtful company, and no wonder that a strong anti-religious, anti-clerical movement exists in Spain; no wonder that the Roman church in Spain is still animated by the spirit of Torquemada, and agrees with the spirit of the nation in arraying intolerance against thinking.

The curious thing about it is that although there are said to be about ten thousand Protestants in Spain, it is only the Baptists that are vicious.

The Protestant agencies that are at work in Spain are the Baptist church in eleven centers, the Wesleyan Methodist working in Barcelona and the Balaerics, the Spanish Evangelicals (a federation of Congregationalists, Presbyterians, and Lutherans) having about thirty churches, the Brethren with twenty-six congregations, the Reformed Spanish church in ten centers, and the Figueras, du Haut Aragon, and several other independent missions.

The Baptists are not altogether exclusive and confined to their centers. At Valencia they work hand in hand with the Evangelicals. At Bilbao the Brethren were declared in partnership with the Baptists in organizing a tertulia—a species of club. At the conference of the Spanish Evangelicals at Madrid the Baptists attend. Here and there, the kingdom over, they in their centers are charged with encouraging vice—the vice of thinking.

At Stockholm in the coming summer, there will be told particularly about that which is being done by the denomination in Spain. Able missionaries and Spanish preachers will be heard. Testimony will be given to show the spirit of persecution, and to make evident that the romance of Protestant work in Spain is disappearing in proportion as old Spain is being changed into a modern country. That which is the Lord's doing and marvelous in our eyes will be stressed. We shall doubtless hear of the work at Sabadell, brought forth by the astute Marin and his sister, Miss Matilde Marin; and of the Anglada work at Barcelona; and of Ariban, and other centers. We are bound to listen.

Meanwhile, there is another consideration that is timely, and has to do with the vice of thinking. We have Spanish people in this country—hundreds, thousands. Never mind the exact figures. If these are wanted, the census reports of 1920 are available, and more or less eloquent. Now the Spanish immigrants who have come to this country are of the same sort as those in the homeland—anti-clerical, anti-religious, indifferent; out of tune with Romanism, but receptive of the truth as revealed in Jesus Christ. They come here to improve their fortunes, "for the money that there is in it for them." They "make" the money, and then they return to Spain, comparatively few remaining in the United States.

A good deal of mission work is done among them, both in the large manufacturing towns and the cities. Like the Italians they are readily reached, and brought to a knowledge of their Saviour. A Spanish made-in-America Protestant is a zealous, heartful Christian, eager to learn, eager to tell out that which he has learned. It is interesting to hear him tell that which he has learned, as if he alone knew all about it. "Senor, I am the man for whom Christ died!" with the pronoun emphasized, is really a gospel message, good news told out. Witness this in our Baptist missions. And when he goes back to Spain, he is more than eager to tell of his experience to his friends. He speaks of big wages, and of big faith in Christ; of business chances.

He Is a Missionary

In fact, he is a missionary. I honestly believe that God brought him over here that by us he might be trained to go out as a missionary to the old home. He is doing it; and doing it, he encourages that vice of thinking. Moreover, he, as likely as not, has been to night school here. Our Spanish boys and young men are among those who take hold upon this advantage. And that is to his benefit when he gets home again. He thinks; and every returning Baptist convert is an accession to Baptist ranks in Spain, a missionary indeed, a thinker.

This being the case, is it not a matter of duty for Baptists in the United States to do missionary work among the Spanish immigrants? Give them the open Word in their own language. Educate them. Convert them. And they will assuredly encourage that terrible vice! God will use just as many as we can bring to him, and it is up to us to equip them with the Word when they leave our shores.

There is another consideration. Many of the Spanish immigrants go from here to South America, there to further add to their fortunes. Wherever there are Spanish people in the nether continent, religion has evaporated. By God's grace these American-made Protestants are calculated to do a vast amount of good wherever they go. Keep this in mind. Make the converts think. Trust them to make others think the thoughts of salvation. Pray for Baptist work in Spain, and do the best to commission workers. Encourage that vice!

America's International Obligations

A declaration prepared by the Commission on International Justice and Good-Will and approved by the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

THE hope that after the war the world would move rapidly towards permanent peace and a well-ordered international life has been shattered. Growing unrest, political intrigues, physical distress and suffering, a disordered economic life, increasing distrust, suspicions and hatreds, all point to great disaster. If the drift be allowed to continue in the present direction new wars will cripple still further our civilization and may even carry it into eclipse for centuries.

The failure of diplomatic and financial efforts to bring about a satisfactory settlement constitutes a direct challenge to the Christian church. Righteousness, justice, and good-will are the foundations of lasting peace. The problem is essentially a spiritual one and comes distinctly within the scope of the church's duty.

Voicing Judgment of Majority

The administrative committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America believes that it is voicing the moral judgment of the overwhelming majority of thoughtful Christian people in making the following declaration:

First: We believe that the United States should accept its full share of responsibility for bringing about an effective settlement of international problems. There are those who think the government has a mandate from the people to pursue a policy of aloofness. We do not thus understand the situation. The churches have declared, and must declare again, their convictions that generous cooperation among the nations is absolutely necessary to cope with the present hunger, strife, uncertainty and despair of the world. The participation of the United States is indispensable to successful cooperative action. An attitude of aloofness exposes our foreign policy to the charge of timidity and ineffectiveness. The present crisis in Europe summons us not to pass judgment on other peoples but in a spirit of humility and self-examination to review our own attitude as a nation and to ask ourselves how we may, by cooperation with other nations, help to meet the overwhelming responsibility which rests upon the entire world.

Second: We believe that the United States should take the initiative in calling an international conference to consider the whole economic and political situation in Europe, including reparations, debts, and armaments, in the endeavor to accomplish in Europe a result comparable to that which was achieved by the four-power pact in the Far East. We welcome the suggestion of President Harding in his message to congress on Dec. 8, when, in referring to that agreement, he said: "It might be made a model for like assurances wherever in the world any common interests are concerned. . . . We believe in the value of conferences and consultation, in the effectiveness of leaders of nations looking each other in the face."

In calling such a conference we believe that the United States should make it known, as it did at the opening session of the conference on the limitation of armament, that we are ready to make, in common with other nations, whatever concessions, financial or otherwise, may be necessary to bring about an ordered international life. We are convinced that a sacrificial spirit on our part would evoke a willingness in other nations also to make the adjustments that may be needed. Our plans for reconstruction should include not only our allies but our former enemies. Bankers, economists, and business men are telling us that only the reestablishment of normal economic conditions in Europe can bring prosperity to American agriculture and industry. What they declare necessary on the basis of enlightened self-interest, we declare necessary also from the standpoint of the Christian ideal of brotherhood. The well-being of our country is inseparably bound up with an unselfish consideration of the well-being of the other nations of the world.

Third: We believe that our government will not be true to its ideals unless it records a definite protest against any settlement of the Near Eastern question on a basis of expediency or commercial advantage, and without some amends for tragic wrongs which have resulted in the persecution and practical destruction of the Armenian people, and the confiscation of their property. For the good of all nations wrong must be righted, or a Nemesis is sure to follow. We would urge that in any further conference on Near East problems our government should give full power to its delegates in all matters in which the rights of humanity are at stake and share with the allied powers the responsibility for reaching conclusions based upon righteousness and justice. If the Lausanne conference is not renewed, we believe that our government should cooperate and, if necessary, take the initiative in the appointment of an international commission which would deal with the whole subject of the refugee and orphan problem in the Near East, and that it should offer to bear its share in providing whatever may be necessary financially to establish these people in some place of safety and opportunity.

We call upon the membership of the churches throughout the country to make a united appeal in behalf of this program of international cooperation, to make known their attitude to the president and their representatives in congress, and to assure the administration of their aid in developing a strong public opinion in its support. We especially urge Christian people everywhere to approach these momentous issues on their merits, irrespective of all partisan considerations. We make this plea on the highest moral and religious ground, believing that beneath all these problems lies the need of a great spiritual awakening and a deeper conviction that Christian principles are as binding upon national as upon personal conduct.

The committee on international justice and good-will of the Northern Baptist Convention is: Rev. M. P. Boynton; Mrs. George W. Coleman; Rev. John Marvin Dean; Raymond B. Fosdick; E. Hilton Jackson; J. C. Moore; Mrs. Henry W. Peabody; Rev. V. S. Phillips; Rev. John M. Moore, chairman.

On the March

By George O. Webster

OUR Saviour, Christ, now bids us go
To tell the gospel story,
He wants the whole wide world to know
And share its light and glory;
Our ears have heard the joyful sound,
He bids us spread the tidings 'round,—
And so today
To our Lord we say:
We are on the march.

Chorus:
We're on the march, the gospel message bearing;
We're on the march, our Saviour's love declaring;
He bids us go that the world may know and forth our feet are faring;
The command is heard and at Christ's own word
We are on the march.

Upon the cross his life he gave,
Oh, story full of gladness;
To bear it over land and wave
Will lighten all earth's sadness;
Into our hearts its blessed light
Has shined to banish sin and night—
And so today
To our Lord we say:
We are on the march.

In pitying love the Saviour stands,
His wounded heart is bleeding;
For darkened souls in all the lands
Today we hear him pleading;
His life for us he freely gave,
And he alone the world can save,—
And so today
To our Lord we say:
We are on the march.

In the "Michigan Christian Advocate" we find this bit of interesting news: "In a published interview with Henry Ford, Dr. William L. Stidger quotes the motor car magnate as saying that he is planning to build a church in memory of his father and mother. The father was warden of the Episcopal church at Dearborn, and one of the founders of another at Redford. We quote: 'The graves of my mother and father are here in this township. They are cutting the cemetery up into lots. I want to preserve the burial plat of my parents by building a stone church. At first it was only to be a small chapel. But the idea kept growing in my mind and now it's going to be a fair-sized edifice. It will be a community church, but I am going to turn it over to my friends, the Methodists, out here. It will be a seven-day-a-week church; built of stone; beautiful but useful and practical. It will have rooms for social activities and a place for the young people to go and feel at home in. My father and mother would like that.'"

Another Record of Recent Denominational Progress

One Christian School among 2,000,000 People

The great Mabie Memorial Boys' School is largely an outgrowth of the New World Movement. In the entire Yokohoma Province with its population of nearly two millions, there is no other Christian school for boys. The buildings are ideally located, overlooking the city of Yokohoma and its harbor. This enterprise, according to one of the missionaries, "represents our first worthy attempt to train boys so that our churches may some day have a body of substantial educated laymen and our ministry may be recruited from a school where the atmosphere is truly Christian." The faculty of Japanese and Americans is second to none in Japan. During its short existence the school has won the confidence of the people and gives every promise of a wonderful future. A teacher writes: "But our building isn't finished. We have no room for all who apply for admission and we must meet the government requirements in accommodations. Will American Baptists come to the rescue, pull their mission society out of debt and then give more and more until cuts in budgets stop and increases can be granted? Gifts by American Baptists for Christian education in the Orient are marvelous investments in kingdom building."

Nine Years in Two Mud Huts

A permanent house has just been completed for a missionary in the Belgian Congo who has been living for nine years in two mud huts, using one when the other threatened to fall down. A hospital, needed for years, has been practically completed at Vanga. Both these buildings have been urgently needed but it was not until the arrival of Mr. H. R. Leslie as mission builder, in 1921, that they were made possible.

For Christian Leaders in the Philippines

Iloilo is a school center with government high schools. In an effort to help provide protection and Christian home influence for the girls who come up from the villages to attend these high schools, a home and dormitory has been built near the public school. Here also a Bible and kindergarten training school have been established. A site was secured near the government school and equipment will be provided. The public school system of the islands is so admirable that all that is needed is to supplement it with the Christian influence and provide the training for Christian workers.

Home for Deep Sea Fishermen

About $8,000 of the funds received by the Foreign Mission Society during the last three years of the New World Movement have been used in cooperation with the Baptists of Norway in establishing a mission among the deep sea fishermen on the extreme north coast of that country. There are now twelve organized Baptist churches within the Arctic Circle, the members of which are doubtless the most "Northern" Baptists on earth. Almost under the shadow of the North Pole this mission for deep sea fishermen has been established and a home with lunch room, library, dormitory accommodations and a chapel provided, thus meeting the physical, social and spiritual needs of these travelers on the high seas.

At Waseda University in Japan

Baptists have an unusual opportunity at the great Waseda University of Tokyo with its 10,000 students, where Dr. H. B. Benninghoff has been rendering such efficient Christian service among these future leaders of Japan. During the period of the New World Movement both Scott Hall and the Alvah Hovey Memorial Dormitory have been erected. Scott Hall, in architectural beauty, equipment and adaptation for service, is said to be the best at Waseda University and one of the finest in Tokyo. It is a center for social and religious work, reaching hundreds of students through Bible classes, social meetings and athletics. At Waseda University Baptists now have what has been called, "One of the most complete and satisfactory plants for student work to be found in Japan."

What Is Expected of a Church Member

1. Be faithful to Christ. Study the Bible. Pray often. Shun evil companions. Do nothing that you are convinced, after praying about it, Jesus would not approve. Keep yourself pure in thought, speech and deed.

2. Be faithful to the church. Attend its meetings regularly. Take an active interest in its affairs. Give a definite proportion of your income to help support the church, and to spread the gospel throughout the world. (Many Christians follow the Bible plan of giving one-tenth of their income to the Lord's work.) Learn what Jesus meant when he said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

3. Be faithful to others. Strive earnestly and persistently to lead others to take Jesus Christ as their Lord and Saviour, as you have done. Do this, first of all, by living a joyous, victorious Christian life yourself. Make the Christian life the subject of conversation whenever it can be done naturally. Pray for those whom you are trying to bring to Christ.—Calendar, Euclid Ave. Church, Cleveland.

A Ship Mast Becomes a Church Pillar

One of the new church buildings erected on the foreign mission field during the past three years is the Hakes Memorial Church located at Shigei, a small island town of Japan. This was made possible by a special contribution from an interested friend and is the first church building in the Inland Sea. For more than seventeen years, the late Captain I. W. Bickel sailed the Gospel Ship, known as the "Fukuin Maru," through this picturesque sea of Japan, bringing the gospel to thousands of people, who otherwise would have been unreached. The old ship was later replaced by a new modern vessel and one of the masts of the former "Fukuin Maru" is today the central pillar in the new church building. It bears a bronze tablet in memory of Captain Bickel as a memorial to his life work.

Progress in India

A missionary writes: "We are in special need of help in the 464 villages in the Narsaravupet field. Since we returned from furlough in 1919 we have had over one thousand baptisms, but what are they among so many still without Christ? And these young Christians, weak in faith, need teaching!" Progress is being made on these old fields in South India. A building for the girls' school at Ongole has been provided. The woman's hospital at Mahbubnagar is now being erected. A Christian center for the Telugu women has been established at Madras. The missionary and students of the woman's Bible training school in Nellore have never had a building of their own. For more than a year they have prayed earnestly for one. The answer came in the gift of the Gurley Memorial Building, in memory of a devoted mother.

Gasolene Evangelism

During recent years gasolene has been coming into prominence as an evangelistic agency on the foreign field. It has been found that one missionary with an automobile is equal to three missionaries without such equipment and furthermore automobiles are cheaper than missionaries. In many of the foreign fields, particularly British India, thousands of miles of fine roads have been constructed. With an automobile a missionary can make, during a period of a few days, an evangelistic tour or a visit of inspection on his field, which before the advent of an automobile and owing to the slowly moving ox-cart would have required several weeks of hard strenuous travel. During the period of the New World Movement, twenty-nine missionary automobiles have been supplied to missionaries on the various fields.

Another Evangelistic Ingathering

A remarkable evangelistic ingathering is taking place in China, across the border of northern Burma. Up to December 31, more than 3,600 had been baptized, of whom 2,813 had been baptized during the year 1922. Perhaps the largest number baptized in a single day was on January 15, when 252 converts were accepted. When Mr. and Mrs. Young returned to Burma from furlough in 1919, they went to begin a pioneer work among these people. A mission station has been opened in Bana village, twenty-five miles from the border of Burma on a mountain with an elevation of 4,000 feet. Mr. Young and his sons have been their own carpenters. A strong central school has been established and many village schools are being opened. Rev. Walter E. Wiatt, field secretary of the Burma Mission, who visited the field early in 1922, wrote: "If we make the most of the present opportunity we shall have in a few years a Christian constituency as large as the Karen constituency in lower Burma which now numbers more than 55,000 church members. The only limit at present is the limit of men and money. Mr. Young and his sons with true missionary spirit are giving their all to these people but they are laboring under tremendous handicaps." Throughout the entire field there is an eagerness to hear the gospel that gives evidence of a ripening harvest. Mr. Young says, "We have felt that we have only touched the fringe of the field and that far larger harvests are in store in the near future. We fully expect the coming year to be much more fruitful than this."

Fifty Years of Missionary Service

Five foreign missionaries have the unusual distinction of completing half a century of missionary service this year. What wonderful memories they must have as they look back to the period when they began their work and compare the extent of the missionary work of the denomination at that time with what it is now. These missionaries are, Dr. and Mrs. David Downie, who were appointed by the Foreign Mission Society in 1872 and arrived in India in the spring of 1873; Rev. and Mrs. B. P. Cross, who likewise began service in 1873 in Burma, and Miss Harriet Eastman, also connected with the Burma mission for fifty years. Thus the New World Movement is supporting not only the work of the new missionaries, who have been sent out during the past three years, but also the work of these veterans who have rendered such distinguished service during the last half century.

Science at Shanghai

Missionaries on the faculty of Shanghai Baptist College are enthusiastic about the new science building recently completed, the construction and equipment of which were made possible by the gift of an interested friend. It is a spacious building containing forty-five rooms. The first three floors are devoted respectively to physics, biology and chemistry, while the fourth floor is used for special laboratories, storage battery and stockrooms. Missionary F. C. Mabee, writing about the building says: "A dream that we have dreamed ever since the first day we landed in China has at last come true. The much needed building is a reality and so we hope to send out men better equipped for service along scientific lines. Our prayer is, that these men may also be better able to render efficient Christian service."

In the Native State of Manipur

In Assam the Foreign Mission Society has entered the important native state of Manipur in a larger and more effective way by transferring the center of work from Ukhrul to Kangpokpi. There two missionaries are now working among 575 villages. Very definite and far-reaching results have already been accomplished. On one tour of the missionary, 145 Kukis were baptized. There are now fourteen churches on the Kangpokpi field with a membership of nearly 2,000, of whom 599 were added by baptism last year.

The Great Gift of Life

Many test the progress of mission work by the number of new missionaries sent to the field. Since the beginning of the New World Movement eighty-three young men missionaries have been appointed and sent to the field by the Woman's Foreign Mission Society. This represents a net increase of sixty-one in the number of women missionaries, as the other twenty-two took the places of those who died or retired.

Dormitories to House Students

The buildings of the Kaying Academy in South China have for years been crowded, inadequate and even unsanitary. Missionaries have been pleading for facilities to care properly for the boys who are eager to obtain a Christian education. The choicest of Kaying's large student body, many of them sons of prominent men and officials, have applied for admission to the academy in spite of the poor housing conditions. The missionaries found themselves facing an almost unprecedented opportunity for service but the lack of equipment made it impossible for them to seize the opportunity. Now two dormitories are under process of construction at Kaying where these bright alert boys will be under Christian influence.

537 People Baptized at One Service

The great evangelistic revival at Sonta Bata in the Belgian Congo mission of the Foreign Mission Society has had an uninterrupted progress covering a period of more than sixteen months. During this time the church membership has increased from 1,500 to more than 7,000, and the number of schools has grown from sixty-six to 177. There have been forty-four baptismal services. On one occasion 537 people were baptized at one service. All the expense for the enlarged work has been carried by the natives, their contributions amounting to over 14,000 francs. Missionary Thomas Moody and his wife, who are widely known to our people at home, began their thirty-third year of service on this important field. In one of his letters, Mr. Moody reports, "I am glad that God brought me here to see this revival. It is a glorious privilege to have had a part in it."

The Children of Reuben and Gad

BY CHARLES HATCH SEARS

"NOW the children of Reuben and the children of Gad had a very great multitude of cattle; and when they saw the land of Jazer . . . behold the place was a place for cattle. The children of Gad and the children of Reuben came and spake unto Moses . . . 'The land . . . is a land for cattle and thy servants have cattle . . . bring us not over the Jordan.' And Moses said: 'Shall your brethren go to the war, and shall ye sit here? And wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel.'"

Good land for cattle was better than the Promised Land for children. Forty years of expectation and the sense of destiny which had impelled them was forfeited for good pastures and smug prosperity. Moses did not so much mind leaving them behind as the discouragement which their attitude created. True, they were in the minority and might perhaps be spared. The most significant thing was that they were discouraging the people.

For four years our denomination has been on the march. This has been a period of world disorder, of inflated prices, unstable values, a period of disillusionment, mental depression and widespread loss of idealism—conditions which have cut the nerve of effort in every realm of life. Yet the records show that our denomination has actually gone forward. We have been on the march.

This record is reflected in the appointment to foreign fields of 125 missionary families; schools, hospitals and churches have been built in distant lands; new approaches have been made to New Americans and to backward peoples here in America; twenty-two Christian centers in large cities and industrial centers have been opened; there has been a marked extension in missionary and educational work of our several cities; a quickened sense of responsibility for our great cities, a keener sense of the cities' task as a whole and enlarged resources have marked an advance in city work; schools and colleges have received from denominational resources more than ever before in their history, resulting in closer relationship to the denomination and in greater responsiveness to its aims. These and a thousand other results have been made possible by increased gifts.

And yet there are churches that have not gone forward with the main denominational body. They have gone forward perhaps by themselves. Their own pastures have been good but they have failed to send out their due quota of men to distant battle fields where their brethren fought. That they have fought on other battle fields only intensifies the discouragement, for the Baptist sector has suffered loss and the forces have been discouraged. Like Moses we recognize that each group of Baptists is more than an aggregation of individuals. Each is part of the whole. The whole suffers if the part does not bear its proper relationship and in the long run the part is the greater sufferer.

We hear Moses declare: "Shall thy brethren go to war and shall ye sit here and wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel." In chagrin the leaders of the children of Reuben and Gad say: "We will build sheepfolds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones: but we ourselves will be ready armed to go."

The march is still on. The goal is far ahead! Say not, "Jazer is a land for cattle and thy servants have cattle," or, "our own fields of opportunity are extraordinary." Join every possible man to the forces that the people be not discouraged and that the victory be won.

Peter's Loan

"He entered into one of the boats, which was Simon's, and asked him to put a little from the land."

"LEND Me thy boat," the Master kindly said
To Simon wearied with unfruitful toil.
He lent it gladly, asking but the smile
Of Him who had not where to lay His head.
But Jesus knows our needs of daily bread,
And will be no man's debtor. If awhile
He uses Simon's boat, in kingly style
He will repay—a hundred-fold instead.
And Peter's Lord, as yesterday the same
Walking, though now unseen, among His own,
Still condescends to ask from each a loan.
O, humble toiler, when He calls thy name,
Lend Him thy all. The Master ne'er forgets
Discouraged fisherman or empty nets.

KINNEY SLIPPED A COG

I notice an article in your issue of Mar. 24, page 239, written by Bruce Kinney, "A Missing Cog." I believe it will only be necessary to call attention to the objectionable part of that article to Mr. Kinney, and in future THE BAPTIST will blue-pencil such objectionable remarks when offered for publication.

I refer to that part "long-haired deacon." I have frequently noticed similar unkind designations which can only have one effect namely: To belittle the sacred office of deacon. It also creates disrespect for those who are elected to fill that position.

The writer has been in the Baptist church for nearly forty-six years, has held the office of deacon in different churches and knows some of the experiences a deacon has. The membership come to him with private and church difficulties, which he must take and act upon to the best of his judgment for the general welfare. He must regard sacred the information he has; he cannot come out and publicly declare the justice of his position.

I believe Mr. Kinney has the interest of the whole denomination at heart, and would suggest that his prolific pen would now write something that would place the deacon in the same light the word of God does.

I am not now a deacon, therefore can write freely in defense of that office.

A TIP TO MISSIONARIES

We often hear missionaries say they wished they knew what we wanted to hear about their work, so I will give my point of view.

I have heard recently three missionaries—a Presbyterian and two Baptists. They were all gifted speakers. They gave in a most interesting way an account of the schools, the educational work, the customs of the countries in which they were located and a few words to the effect that the people were responsive to the gospel and great possibilities lay before them. I went away from the meetings heavy-hearted. I thought, "Oh, what wasted opportunities!" In one instance the missionary had an audience of over 200, a number of young people among them and such a grand opportunity to enthuse those young people with a missionary spirit such as they had never known before. The fault was not in what was said, but what was left unsaid.

In order to make my point clear, I will tell you of a missionary from Africa whom I heard a number of years ago. He spent but little time on manners and customs, just enough to give a setting to what followed. Then he told of the African people, how they were converted, the growth of their spiritual life, their child-like faith; he gave short sketches of the development of individual Christians into the likeness of the Master; in fact he painted a word picture of the souls of his people, showing the power of the gospel to transform.

It made a most profound impression and many speak of it to this day. What we want is just enough of manners and customs and geography to make a setting for what follows. Then let most of the time be given to the painting of souls, the growth in grace of the converts, their outstanding spiritual conceptions, in fact, the power of the gospel to transform the life. I have always longed to hear a missionary tell us the gospel story just as he would to those who had never heard it.

It seems to me that the missionaries are not giving the inspiration they might give if they realized that people are hungry for simple gospel truth and the spiritual side of their work rather than the material. We want inspiration instead of entertainment and not too long speeches.

Perhaps the foregoing seems too critical but I have written this because they said they wanted to know.

The Strait Gate

BY ARTHUR T. FOWLER

STRAIT is the gate that leads to life of every kind. In home, school, shop, factory, and church, every department of human endeavor demands devotion and effort. According to the value of any kingdom of knowledge and attainment is the straitness of the gate which opens upon it. The making of a Christian character is the finest of arts, and demands the greatest discipline and prolonged effort. The soul that tries to do right meets wrong so constantly! What makes becoming a Christian apparently so difficult? For one thing, it requires searching to find it. It seems far away when it is near at hand. Then, too, the simplicity of God bewilders us. We expect something complex, great, or profound, in the initial steps to Christian experience. It is also hard to realize that the unseen and spiritual are the real things of life. We often think that the seen is the eternal reality. Are we to infer that the Christian life is hard and narrow? Not at all! Christ portrays the difficulties, not to discourage but to stimulate us. His motive is not restraint, but enlargement of soul. His kingdom is not narrowness, but wideness. His emphasis is not on the hardness of the way, but the entering gate. If the Christian life were too easy, it would not be worth winning. It is eminently worth while. It is so glorious—glorious to attain right and perfection through struggle, to go from the lower to the higher life, to see how God has bound our perfection to his own, and has given us all there is in himself to bring about in us its attainment. It is union with himself, the source of life. Therefore, sacrifice that which hinders, amputate that which impedes entrance and progress. Jesus says, "I am the way." Enter through him! We share not only in his struggle, but in his triumph. Who cannot dare all things, and bear all things, when he knows all and will help all?

WANTS REFERENDUM

I see by a recent number of THE BAPTIST that there is a committee at work on a program to be in effect after the New World Movement is over.

If I am permitted a suggestion, I would like to suggest that when the goals for a new movement are started they be approved by the convention this summer, and then given to the churches as a referendum, so that each church may accept the goals before they become effective.

A number of reasons could be given for this:

1. The churches would have a chance to know just what the goals were before they were adopted.

2. The churches could not then speak of the movement as their movement, but as our movement.

Other reasons may be given but these are sufficient for the present. What do the wise heads think of this?

A HINT TO GUM CHEWERS

A have just read the article in THE BAPTIST of March 17 entitled, "The Gum Business vs. the Lord's Business." Are there any gum chewers amongst the Baptists? If Mr. Wrigley expends $4,000,000 for advertising his gum, someone must buy gum. At 1 cent per chew it would take 400,000,000 chews just to pay the advertising bill. If every Baptist who buys gum should contribute an equal amount to the Lord's business, would it not more than equal the $10,000,000 required to keep his business going outside of the local church?

St. Libory, Neb. W. E. BALIMAN.

Young People's Work

Topic for April 29

"A STUDY IN BLACK AND WHITE"
(CONQUEST MEETING)
Acts. 10:3-5.

Material

The program is based on "The Trend of the Races" by Hayne; price, cloth 75 cents, paper 50 cents. Order from American Baptist Publication Society or the General Board of Promotion. Copies of negro "Spirituals" may be secured from the General Board of Promotion for 5 cents a copy.

Sixty Years of Progress

1. In economic matters. The negro is a worker. We are accustomed to think of negróes as engaged in the lowest-paid forms of work. The census of 1910 shows that 71 per cent of all negroes over ten years of age were gainfully employed. In the South the percentage was even higher. Married women were helping to earn bread for their families. Three times as many negro women as white women were so employed. While the majority of negro workers are still engaged in the unskilled, lower-paid, industrial occupations, in domestic and personal service, or in agriculture, there has been a steady increase in the past twenty years in the number employed in industrial and mechanical pursuits.

There is a steady increase in the number of negro farm owners and a rising standard of living.

2. Business enterprise. Business enterprises owned and operated by negroes in the United States are estimated at more than 55,000. Many of these are small, but a few of them are corporations owning and controlling millions of dollars' worth of property. Life-insurance companies, mainly industrial, and savings-banks have been the outstanding large business developments. Negroes are also actively interested in building and loan associations, grocery stores, clothing stores, drug-stores, shoe stores, steam-laundries, hotels, barber shops, tailor shops, pleasure parks, moving-picture theaters, and many other lines of small business. More than 250 newspapers and other periodicals are owned and edited by negroes.

3. Health and morals. Many negro children lack home care because the mother must needs labor outside the home in order to provide daily bread. These circumstances inevitably react upon health and morals. Statistics, however, show that there is a gradual decrease in the death-rate.

4. Education. Generally speaking, the public provision for the education of negro children has been far below the standard for white children. Poorer buildings, poorer teachers and shorter school terms have been the rule. Recently in several states, the attitude of county and state officers controlling the distribution of state funds has been changing toward a larger and more equitable distribution of public funds. The provisions for secondary and higher educational institutions are probably increasing more slowly than those for elementary schools. This throws largely upon private institutions the training of the ministers, doctors, teachers, lawyers, writers, editors and artists that are to be developed from among the ten million negroes with college degrees.

5. Music, poetry, art. "When music welled up in their souls they opened their mouths and sang. In the cotton fields of the slave plantation they could hear the tunes of Gabriel's harp, and they responded with vibrant, tuneful voices. In the forests about these fields they could detect the 'brush of angels' wings. They burst forth in notes commanding the heavenly chariots to 'swing low' and carry them home from a humdrum life of harsh toil and harsher treatment." Opportunity for training has developed both the musical and poetic strain that so clearly marked many of the old negro "spirituals." Samuel Coleridge-Taylor, Harry T. Burleigh, and other composers have made notable contributions to musical literature. Several negro singers possess voices that would be sought in grand opera were it not for the hindrance of their race.—Adapted from Service.

Will You Wear a Poppy on Memorial Day?

"As a definite mark of honor to the memory of their fallen comrades all American Legion members will wear the scarlet poppy on Memorial Day. Hallowed by its war associations the poppy has become the symbol of the faith of those who died in Flanders fields.

"The American Legion believes that the members of your organization and the public in general have an equal desire to wear the poppy on Memorial Day as a tribute to our fallen heroes. Will you assist us by bringing this idea to the attention of your organization in your next communication to local units and at any future gatherings. We would most highly appreciate an expression of sympathy with the purposes of the movement and the cooperation of your local bodies everywhere."

Here and There

CHICAGO JUNIORS are to hold a city-wide rally at the Second Church of Chicago, Saturday, May 5. Miss Effie Hansen is junior superintendent for the city.

THE NORTHERN CALIFORNIA YOUNG PEOPLE of San Francisco Bay, San Jose, and Pacific associations held a district institute the latter part of February. The principal speaker was Dr. E. A. Handley, on the subject "Forward With Christ in Service." Conferences were held on "Daily Devotions," "Juniors," "Young People's Evangelism," "Missions," "Stewardship," and "Americanization." Dr. J. S. West gave the closing address on "Forward With Christ and the Church."

OHIO BAPTIST ASSEMBLY will be held at Granville, Ohio, Aug. 3-12. Director Holmes reports a larger number of reservations for rooms than ever before.

MICHIGAN SUMMER ASSEMBLY will be held July 27-Aug. 15 in Kalamazoo College buildings. Rev. Mark F. Sanborn,

Religious Education

Religious Education and Play

By Roy L. Van Deman

"Can the native necessity of play be made to contribute to religious education, Diligens? Patricius spoke to me for many minutes yesterday about what seemed to be much on his heart. He told me of having passed near the factory on his way home to supper and meeting the girls coming from work, many in their nice flowered coveralls and joking with the young men as they came. He told me that some of them had been doing one small part of making a garment, over and over since morning. It was Friday night. They had been doing this same one thing since Monday morning. Sunday was still one day distant. They had in fact been doing the same one little thing since the factory reopened in August."

"I am troubled, Diligens," he went on, "about what Patricius told me, for we both know how little there is for these fine girls to do after supper. They cannot sit at home and sew. They have been sewing since August. They need free muscular expression, the open, God's out-of-doors. And they need more than any other one human thing at this time in their lives a wholesome chance for natural human society—girl friends and boy friends and things to do together that will help construct life when the life construction is weak, whether it is weak for vocational reasons or because of educational lack. Can't we think out the constructive activities these girls need?"

"Proctor, you challenge us with your girl problems," Diligens replied, "but it seems to me the girl problem and the boy problem are one problem, not two; and it seems to me too that this one problem is our problem. You are a Presbyterian elder and I am a Baptist deacon. I acknowledge our debt to these young people. They are making garments to clothe our civilization. Our civilization owes them something more than wages. If we owed them nothing we owe it to the community of the future to give them a chance at all that the play spirit can do for them."

"Do you mean then, Diligens, that you see a neglected chance for the churches to think out how to put play into their educational program for the benefit both of the play and the education? Is that what you mean?"

"Yes, it isn't merely a question, so it seems to me, of what utility play and social activities can supply toward holding young people to the churches though I think I see a very, very great utility at that point. It appears to me that religious education owes play more than play owes religious education. I mean that play is a part of human life from about age four months to maturity and beyond, and that religious education has business with every native instinct as containing possibilities both for this life and for the life to come. There are two new books at Liber's book shop—here's my car. I'll tell you about those books tomorrow. Let's get Patricius."

International Sunday School Lesson for April 29

RUTH, THE FAITHFUL DAUGHTER

Lesson: The Book of Ruth. Golden Text: Ruth 1:16.

Introductory

The Book of Ruth, which takes its name from its chief character, is contemporary with the Book of Judges, and in the earliest editions of the Hebrew writings was a part of it. Joshua carried on the work of Moses and led the children of Israel into Canaan where they scattered in tribal groups. Following the death of Joshua, there came a time of strife and unsettled conditions under the rule of a number of leaders called the Judges. Ruth was an ancestress of Christ. Moab is east of the Jordan Valley—a tableland 3,000 feet above sea level, bounded on the north by the Arnon river; by the desert on the east; Edom, on the south; and the Dead Sea and Jordan Valley on the west. To arrive at Bethlehem it was necessary to descend into the Jordan Valley, which, at the head of the Dead Sea, lies 1,300 feet below the sea level, making a descent for the traveler of 4,300 feet. Then followed the ascent to Bethlehem which lies on a hillside six miles south of Jerusalem. It was a warm and tedious journey for Ruth and Naomi.

The Lesson

Because of a famine Elimlech, with his wife Naomi and two sons, had fled from Bethlehem to the fertile, prosperous Moab. Here their sons married Moabite maidens—Ruth and Orpah. Upon the death of her husband and sons, Naomi decided to return to Bethlehem. Ruth and Orpah accompanied her a short distance on the way. Our lesson verses open at the departing of Orpah, who kissed Naomi and then turned to go back to her own people. But Ruth clave unto her mother-in-law and refused to be sent back. "Entreat me not to leave thee, and to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." Naomi's return caused great commotion in the little town of Bethlehem. The women gathered around her, asking, "Is this Naomi?" Naomi means "winsome," and now after her many sorrows she repudiated the name and said, "Call me Mara, for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me." It was the beginning of the barley harvest when they arrived at Bethlehem, and Ruth went into the field to glean so that she might provide for her mother-in-law and herself. It was in the field of Boaz, a relative of her father-in-law, that she gleaned. He fulfilled the ancient law and married this widow of his young kinsman.

Purse-onality

MRS. Christian was a Pillar
In the Baptist Church.
She was noted far and wide for her Capability:
Wherever there was a practical
Job
She was right there to Do it.
And do it well.
But——
(Alas, that there ever has to be a Christian "but"!)
She had one overwhelming dread:
"I must spare my pocketbook!" she said.

The Reading Contest

Interested her—
She thought it a perfect
Shame
That any Baptist women's society
The size of theirs
Should not be winning national Honor points:
"The titles sound so Interesting!"
She cried as she picked up
"Lighted to Lighten."
"Rock-Breakers."
"Race Grit," etc.
"I'll see that these mission books get read!"
("But spare my pocketbook!" she said.)

Home Extension Work

Appealed to her,
Because she realized how Many women Were Shut in because of Home duties,
Small children,
Illness,
Scheduled work,
Yet surely they ought to Know
What other Baptist women
Were doing in the world—
"I'll see that Extension Literature gets spread!"
("But spare my pocketbook!" she said.)

White Cross Work

Was done every Thursday at 2 p. m.
At the church, and
Mrs. Christian was the Busiest of all, making:
Nighties for orphans,
Jackets for child widows,
Bandages,
Splints,
Surgical Dressings,
Pillows, and such—
"I love to sew sheets for a hospital bed."
("But spare my pocketbook!" she said.)

A Prayer League

Was formed in the Early winter to

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Pray,
For the success of the Continuation Campaign.
"How beautiful a Preparation, this!"
She nodded, promising—
"Daily I'll kneel and bow my head."
("But spare my pocketbook!" she said.)

A Cooked Food Sale

Was held soon afterwards
To swell the Missionary treasury,
And she, being a born
Cook
Was solicited among the first:
"I'll gladly bake layer cakes and pies and bread."
("But spare my pocketbook!" she said.)

An Apron Sale

Was also held
To bring in money.
You should have seen the novel Pockets
Frills
Furbelows
Rosettes
Over-heads
Tie-abouts!
"I'll make you six with needle and thread."
("But spare my pocketbook!" she said.)

Chicken Dinners

Are inevitable
Church money-getters, of course,
For you know yourself
How they appeal to Business men
Office girls
Boarding-house dwellers
Kitchenette cooks
But they mean endless Work
To the Committee-In-Charge!
Yet Mrs. Christian,
With bustling glee:
"I'll work till this hungry horde is fed."
("But spare my pocketbook!" she said.)

Pledge Cards

Came next, as you probably have guessed,
And Mrs. Christian was very much
Vexed:
"I've given work, time and strength, instead,
So spare my pocketbook!" she said.

And He who spared not His own Son,
But sent Him to sit over against The Treasury
Long ago
Knows what is in the human heart,
Knows personality's counterpart.
With searching glance and grave low tone
Surely He speaks to her from the throne:

"These social things you liked to do,
Busy-ness is second nature to you!
But money is also your Other Self:
Personality's Voice, yet you make it—pelf.
This trust (not a selfish medium)
Is loaned you to help God's Kingdom Come."

Note

The Continuation campaign of the Woman's Baptist Home, and Foreign Mission societies is now being pushed in all our Baptist churches. The spread of God's kingdom on earth next year depends on your purse-onality! The campaign closes the thirtieth of April.

PAY—PRAY.

A Creed for God's Bankers

I believe

I. My money is mine only in trust. It belongs to God, just as I do.

II. This money is not filthy lucre. It is not the devil's coin. It is stored-up human energy. It is so much of myself which I can set at work in China or India or New York or Colorado.

III. God is counting upon this money for his work. It is to build his churches and preach his gospel, train his workers and send them out, teach and heal and save his children, and help bring in a new kingdom of righteousness and brotherhood and peace.

IV. To spend my income rightly is one of my first tasks as a Christian. Until I settle this, my prayers and confessions will be like saying "Lord, Lord" and not doing the will of my Father.

V. I should set aside a definite proportion of my income for the church and the service of others. I do this in acknowledgment of God's sovereignty over all of my possessions. I do this to guard against my own selfishness. I do this because it is businesslike. Giving by impulse and without system does not accord with the importance of this work.

VI. The proportion to be set aside for these purposes should not be less than one-tenth of my income. The Old Testament enjoined the tithe in ancient Israel, and surely I am receiving far more from God than did the men of any former generation. Nevertheless one-tenth is not to be the limit of my giving. I should not begin with less than one-tenth. I ought to give more if I am able. I should pray with my giving.

HARRIS FRANKLIN RALL.

The Young Reserves

Our Old Name the Best

Dear Young Reserves:

The committee which has been looking over the new names suggested for our page has decided that, after all, our old name really describes us the best of all. As one of the committee said:

1. Baptist boys and girls are young.
2. They are "in reserve," ready to step into grown-up shoes when the time comes.
3. Therefore, it seems to me it would be best to keep the older name until something far better is suggested.

The rest of us agreed that it did seem wise; so we shall continue to be "Young Reserves." I love the second point in the three above — ready to step into grown-up shoes when the time comes. Surely none of us feels ready yet; but do let us begin to get ready right away. One of the best plans during April will be to push the Dollar Hill campaign—have you given a dollar yet? Or earned one? The poems for our contest are coming in very slowly, so it will be in next week's issue that you will read the verses. They are all very good, it seems to me. The judges are going to have to sit up all night!

Here are some of the last of the new names suggested for our page:

Path Finders.
Light Bearers.
Pearl Gatherers
Little Volunteers.
Lovers of Truth.
Little Pilgrims.
Young Reapers.
Early Seekers.
Happy Workers.
Bright Little Sunbeams.
Youth's Treasure Page.
Uplook Nook.
Life Truths for Lively Youths.
Treasure Gatherers.
Valuable Volunteers.

We have had a second letter from Adrienne M. Brower, of Chicago:

Dear Miss Applegarth and Young Reserves:

Is it dreadful to write again so soon? I have two more little India stories that I forgot to put in the last letter, so here they are now.

You know they have awfully dangerous snakes in India? Well, one day a missionary woke up in the morning and saw one on her pillow beside her. I guess she was scared to death, but quick as a flash she grabbed it and started to fling it with all her strength away from her pillow, when jerk! jerk! she found she couldn't, because it was just her own braid of hair lying along the pillow looking too snaky for anything. This is a true story, for we once heard a missionary tell it on herself. She must have been very much relieved.

The other story I read in Everyland this month, but I knew it long before I saw it there. My brother and I remember hearing our uncle tell us. It is about the Hindu belief that when people die they are reborn as animals, especially women who are not at all popular with the Hindu gods. Well, a Hindu mother lost her little girl, and she was so sad about it that the next morning she went to the funeral pyre, for in India they burn the dead, you know. Out of the embers came a little snake squirming toward her, and the mother was sure it was her dear little daughter reborn as a snake. When I think of that story I want to give all the money I can so that the heathen may know about Jesus, don't you?

Yours lovingly,

A. M. B.

The Exploits of Little Miss Missionary

By "Bud" (Malcolm MacQueen)

CHAPTER IV.

Boom! Boom! Boom! The priests were beating the temple drums, calling the people to worship. Little Miss Missionary woke with a start, wondering where she was. Suddenly she remembered. She was in India where she had wanted to go ever since she was a little girl.

When she was dressed and had gone outside she watched the people that went in a steady stream toward the temple carrying their large or small sacrifices to the gods. Bent-over old grannies hobbling as best they could, carrying little dishes of rice, proud and haughty Brahmins disdaining to look at any one, and the middle-class people with their simple offerings.

She wondered why it was that these people kept worshipping the idols when they had to make such sacrifices as they did. She also wondered how many people in America would give up half their breakfast so that they could make a sacrifice to their God.

Little Miss Missionary planned to have a school for child widows, where she could take and teach these little girls and keep them from enduring the suffering that most go through the rest of their lives.

And now we will leave little Miss Missionary, who is toiling over in India, to win people to Christ.

THOUGH parents think their children rude,
Especially about their food,

And call their table manners low,
I really have not found them so.

I never yet have known a boy,
From Skaneateles to Troy,

From Sacramento to New York,
Who took his porridge with a fork;

Nor any girl beneath the moon
Who managed mince pie with a spoon;

Nor any child in all my life,
That ate its ice cream with a knife.

—Arthur Guiterman in "The Mirthful Lyre."

Boston Proverbs

EVERYBODY in the United States seems to have a fine story about the remarkably good and careful English spoken by the people who live in Boston. Surely you have heard about the Boston owls who use such correct grammar that they hoot "to-whom;" "to-whom!" instead of "to-who!" "to-who!" like ordinary owls.

The other day somebody sent me five well-known proverbs supposed to have been said by a Bostonian who certainly must have learned the dictionary by heart! If you read these proverbs to your family you will have lots of fun seeing if anybody can guess which proverb you are trying to quote:

1. Desiccated herbage submit to perturbation,
   The while the radiant orb of day affords illumination.
   (Make hay while the sun shines.)
2. A futile superfluity of culinary aid
   Destroys nutritious liquids from osseous tissues made.
   (Too many cooks spoil the broth.)
3. Your immediate environment submit to circumspection
   Ere you traverse some feet of space by muscular projection.
   (Look before you leap.)
4. Inhabitants of domiciles of vitreous formation with lapidary fragments should ne'er perform jactation.
   (People who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones.)
5. Who counts ere fractured are the shells his bipeds gallinaceous, is apt to find his calculations utterly fallacious.
   (Don't count your chickens before they are hatched.)

Georgia, Central Eastern Regional B. Y. P. U. Convention was held at Sandersville with a registration of 505.

Brooklyn Young People are observing "life service" period during the months of April and May. The executive committee has worked out a definite program of visitation in each of the nine districts. Brooklyn and vicinity expect to be at Boston 500 strong.

Tennessee Baptist Young People are securing a large number of subscriptions as well as enlisting a large number of Baptist young people for the Baptist colleges. Mr. Willett D. Anderson of Knoxville is state president. The State B. Y. P. U. convention will meet in Memphis, June 12-16. Bristol young people are planning to run a special train to accommodate delegates to the convention.

Our Own Folks

The Dedication of the Church House of First Church, Evanston, Illinois

At its sixteenth anniversary of the church in 1917 First Church of Evanston, Ill., turned its eyes forward to the future needs of religion in Evanston and saw that it lay with the youth. The church therefore planned to enlarge its work for the social life and religious education of the youth of the city. Such expanded work involved enlarged quarters, and this building, spacious and beautiful, is the gift of the church of this generation to the youth of the generation following. Dedicatory services were held Apr. 8-13. The dedicatory address was delivered by Dr. Nathaniel Butler at the Sunday morning service, Apr. 8. A picture of the building is shown on the cover page.

The exterior, with its square tower, windows of graceful tracery and leaded glass, melts in with the pointed Gothic of the older church with amazing harmony. The architects, Tallmadge and Watson, are to be congratulated on their success in this as indeed all other effects in the building. The half timber work on various recesses gives lightness to the solid Bedford stone walls.

The outstanding feature of the interior is the hall named for Lieut. Kenneth MacLeish, a young man of rare parts and shining character, who was shot down in Belgium while serving his country as an aviator. This room is designed to serve as a gymnasium, for dramatics, assembly room and banquet hall. Every detail of line and color is a delight to the eye.

In the northwest corner of the building is the commodious and perfectly equipped kitchen. On the left of the hall reaching east in the north wing are two connecting class rooms and a missionary room, equipped with library, maps, and so forth, for the student of missions. Occupying the east front is the women's parlor, a room of great beauty of finish and proportion. This room has been furnished by Mrs. Robert L. Scott in memory of her mother, Mrs. C. F. Grey, one of the founders of the women's work in this church.

On the south of the hall is the men's forum, in which his family propose to place a handsome memorial to Senator Francis W. Parker, the founder of the forum.

The front of the east wing on the second story is given to the kindergarten. The inviting fireplace at the north end speaks of home and the glorious stone traceried window at the south hints at all the accumulated religious history of our race. Every detail in this and the adjoining primary room will repay careful study. Across the hall is the junior department and two more adult class rooms. In the corner is the comfortable apartment for the janitor and his family. Over MacLeish Hall is the intermediate department, equipped with sliding doors that make it available as an auditorium or for twelve cosy class rooms. Adjoining this are offices for the administration of the work of religious education. In the basement are quarters for boy and girl scouts, locker rooms, and shower baths and general storage rooms.

The ornamentation of the building throughout is a splendid example of devout symbolism. The aim was to employ such symbols as would convey the ideals of service and education.

Prominently over the entrance and carried all through the interior decoration is the shield—"the shield of Faith" and valorous Christianity. Beside this shield is the beehive for industry and the book for learning. Woven around these is the vine, "I am this vine." Oak leaves give a touch of our native trees and the strength of the oak. In the carved leafage in the arches of the entrance loggia are gem forms cut in stone. "Bright gems for his crown."

On the corbels near the cornice line of the east wing are the historic symbols of the four evangelists: Matthew, the angel; Mark, the lion; Luke, the bull, and John, the eagle.

Various historic crosses are found, particularly in the tracery of the window between the loggia and MacLeish Hall, where St. Andrews, the Latin and Greek crosses appear.

In the same loggia, supporting the ground vault, are four carved heads representing the primary, the early and later adolescent and the senior ages of the school.

Over the smaller entrance by the woman's room is a head carved in wood, of Queen Esther. On the mantel of the woman's room are carved the lily for purity, the fleur-de-lis for Mary and elsewhere the rose for divine love.

The greatest symbol of all is the building itself, placed in the center of the city, designed to purify the hearts of men, for out of the heart are the issues of life.

A Plea from the Hungarian Baptist Union

By Stephen Orosz

The Northern Baptists will meet soon to discuss their great problems. We, as the union of the Magyar-speaking churches, are looking forward with a great deal of interest to this gathering. The results of the next meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention mean very much to us.

We have also problems which cause us anxiety. We have large fields closed and we have been unable to reopen them. A large mission field in Dayton, Ohio, with many thousands of Magyars is one field; and in Martins Ferry, Ohio, we have a good building, a few members, and a large opportunity. There are other places where the work is stopped. We admit mistakes were made in the past, but if every church would be closed where mistakes have been made, I wonder how many churches we would have today.

We are handicapped in opening new fields. As to the secretary of the Hungarian Baptist Union I make recommendations to the Home Mission Society, and often I must hear that there is no money to open new work. With our plain minds we do not understand that our country has money to lend to the countries in Europe and we have money for luxuries of life which the whole world envies, but we are not able to support adequately our mission work.

While our leaders are in hot discussion of different opinions and holding back their churches from shouldering the responsibilities of our denomination, the small dependent churches and missionary activities are suffering defeat. Sometimes we of the smaller rank of detachment of the noble Baptist body are surprised at the attitude of our Baptist brethren toward the Baptist missionary enterprises. Every war, political or ecclesiastic, causes sufferings.

Five of the students of the Hungarian department of the International Baptist Seminary will graduate at the end of the school year. Shall we send them back to the factories because there is no money in the treasuries of our mission societies to support them? Then what is the use to talk about education and the need of leaders?

We pray for peace and prosperity and we hope the leaders of the churches and the denomination will bring to realization the message of Christmas which was echoed everywhere in our country.

Miss Sarah R. Slater

By Edith G. Estey

Up a zigzag railway from Mandalay, one reaches the rest station called "Maymyo," in Burma. In a little bird's nest of a house, there lived our missionary, Miss Sarah R. Slater, and it was my privilege to spend a Sunday with her, on a visit to Burma some years ago. The personality of my hostess impressed me, and the acquaintance was continued until her recent death, Jan. 29, in Philadelphia.

Miss Slater was a missionary of the Woman's Foreign Society for thirty-two years. She taught at a girls' school in Mandalay for some time, but when ill health made it necessary for her to live in a high altitude or leave Burma altogether, she went to the hill station of Maymyo. Though frail in body, she opened and carried on a varied work there, a school, a church, three Sunday schools, and sent native workers out into surrounding villages, where they preached and taught under her supervision.

She came to America a year or more ago on a furlough, and had hoped to return but she was suddenly called to a higher service. Through the gift of Miss Mary Colgate, a building for her school will be erected and will stand as a lasting memorial of her. With a consecrated life, a loving heart, a keen brain, and a refreshing sense of humor, Miss Slater possessed many of the qualities of a good missionary. She was enthusiastic over her work, loving her pupils and loved by them, and her long and faithful service deserves a tribute from those who knew and honored her.

Dr. and Mrs. David Downie

This year will witness the completion of half a century of work on the Telugu Mission field for Dr. and Mrs. David Downie.

Doctor Downie received his first missionary inspiration from Alexander Duff, the great pioneer Christian educator of India. Coming to America from Scotland, a lad of fourteen, he was educated at Phillips Academy, Brown University and Rochester Theological Seminary, graduating from the latter institution in 1872. A year later he sailed for Nellore to assume the burden of responsibility relinquished by Dr. Lyman Jewett in the Lone Star Mission. He assumed also the duties of mission treasurer, which position he held until 1914.

Marvelous indeed have been the achievements on the Telugu field since Doctor Downie began his work. Then there was but one mission station, manned by three workers. Today there are 29 stations and 122 workers. One hundred and eighty-two churches, enrolling more than 75,000 members and 27,000 boys and girls in nearly a thousand schools, tell of the remarkable work that has been done.

A vast amount of literary work has come from Doctor Downie's hand, most notable perhaps being his "History of the Telugu Mission," a book of great value. On Nov. 21, 1922, Dr. and Mrs. Downie observed the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding, an event happily celebrated by their friends and coworkers on the Telugu field. The board of managers of the Foreign Mission Society extends heartiest congratulations to these notable veterans upon the completion of a half century of service. We glory in the achievements of the past and bow in grateful acknowledgment before God for the kind favor which has given us such noble workers and for such an extended period of time. No missionary has ever occupied a more honorable place than Doctor Downie and none has endeared himself more to his brethren. We humbly pray that they may be spared for many years to continue their labor of love.

Dedication at Indianapolis

An inspiring week of dedicatory services in connection with the completion of the new building for religious education of the Thirty-first Street Church of Indianapolis was observed early in March.

Dedication day was March 11; the special services began with a parade of the Bible school to enter the new building, nearly 450 people being in the line of march. This was followed at the morning hour of worship by a communion and consecration service led by the pastor, Rev. J. J. Patterson. The dedication sermon was preached at 3 o'clock by Dr. Wm. G. Everson of Muncie, Ind. Dr. C. M. Dinsmore, state secretary, brought greetings and a stimulating message, Dr. H. P. Waldo offered the dedication prayer. Rev. J. R. Quick, Rev. W. H. Harris, Rev. A. B. Whitney and Architect C. E. Bacon took part in the service. The young people's meeting was one of great inspiration and was led by the pastor's oldest daughter, Miss Jean Patterson. At the evening service Rev. T. J. Parsons, editor of the Indiana Baptist Observer, brought a great evangelistic message.

Monday night was fellowship night. Rev. F. L. Hovis, of the St. Paul's Methodist Church, spoke in behalf of the other denominations in the community; Dr. F. E. Webb, president of Baptist Ministers' Association, brought the greetings of the churches of the association; and Judge Frank J. Lahr, of the Juvenile Court, gave an address that stirred his audience. Tuesday night was young people's night. A crowd of young people gathered first in the auditorium for a brief program, during which there were talks by Rev. L. C. Trent of the Woodruff Place Church and Rev. P. J. Morris of the Emerson Ave. Church, and then repaired to the gymnasium for a social time. Wednesday was Bible school night, when Dr. O. R. McKay, state secretary for religious education, brought the address of the evening. Thursday was church family night, beginning with a supper served by the ladies' social circle and followed by stimulating and optimistic reports of the past year's work and an address by Dr. Dinsmore. Friday evening all available space was occupied to see four great games of basket ball in the gymnasium, part of the Baptist tournament for the district.

The Thirty-first Street Church is one of the younger churches in the city and is located in the northern district of Indianapolis. The building just completed is the first unit in a complete structure planned for. It consists of a two-story building, 38x95 feet, for religious education, and a gymnasium adjoining, 47 by 74 feet. It is of tapestry brick with Bedford stone trimmings, the interior finish being in Circassian walnut color. It contains separate rooms for cradle roll class, beginners, primary and junior departments, and separate class rooms for all other classes. There is a young people's assembly room, a ladies' parlor, and kitchen. The steam-heating plant and shower rooms are under the gymnasium. Many of wide experience in the work of religious education have pronounced it a model of completeness.

The pastor was the chairman of the building committee and led in the enterprise which had been considered by some an impossible task for this church. In his former pastorate with the Emmanuel Church of Buffalo, N. Y., a building for religious education was erected. Following his ten year pastorate there Mr. Patterson was superintendent of city missions for Buffalo for nearly seven years. The Indianapolis church is looking forward with renewed hope and expectation to a larger service under the new conditions and equipment.

Nebraska Letter

By R. R. Coon

Our State Workers

As a rule theirs is a life of change. One, two, four years seem to mark their term of service seemingly setting a pace that the pastors too closely follow. We recommend permanency in selecting pastors but practice rather the peripatetic in selecting the pastor of all the churches, the state secretary. A notable exception among state workers is Colporter Judkins who is beginning his third decade of continuous work in the state. We wouldn't say he doesn't know enough to resign; rather he knows enough to "stay by the stuff" when all is going well. Four months after Doctor Fowle closed his work as state secretary—during that time the work being ably looked after by Rev. J. W. Benjamin—at an extra called meeting at Lincoln, Rev. F. W. Ainslie, pastor of the Temple Church, Lincoln, was chosen state secretary. He has already entered upon his duties.

Work Among the Churches

Chaplain E. W. White has been laboring among some of the weaker churches; recently at Alexandria where about a score were converted and the church made ready to call a pastor. He is at this time with the Immanuel Church, Omaha, Rev. J. L. Barton, pastor, and will go next to Union. Doctor Mills has done good work at Albion. He will remain in the state until May 1. Nebraska churches are fortunate in having such worker evangelists. At Central City, Rev. Claude Neal, Polk, held meetings for two weeks, strengthening the church. Rev. F. M. Sturtevant, Bridgeport, one of our best staying pastors, conducted a good revival service in his church. At Kearney, seat of our largest state normal, Rev. C. I. Coon seems to be laying foundations for a long, solid pastorate. We surely look for the doing of a substantial, permanent work there. Rev. Herbert Richmond held an evangelistic campaign in the church of Antelope Center. As a result fifteen have been received as members and the cause is revived. Rev. S. E. Bishop, Surprise, has gone to help the pastor of Middlebranch, Rev. E. E. Brock, in revival work. Rev. R. Richards, a Nebraska evangelist, though loaned to South Dakota for a year, is holding a very successful series of meetings in that state. Some very difficult fields have been the scenes of real revival times. He has just closed work at Oldham where a good number were converted and great blessing brought to the church, The little church of Tobias was organized thirty-nine years ago with nine members. It has never been large but its members organized a church in Utah and have gone to twenty-two states and foreign lands. Four have gone into the gospel ministry, Revs. Warren J. Smith, C. B. Miller, W. C. Miller and Harry Miller; the last two sons of Rev. W. L. Miller who helped to organize the church years ago. So the church lives and labors elsewhere. Rev. Geo. Van Winkle, Omaha, has led a two weeks' meeting at Chambers, with excellent results to the church.

The State Annual

Though smaller than some former editions, it is an attractive and informing pamphlet of 118 pages. One summary gives: Churches, 183; pastors, 102; general missionary workers, 11; other ministers, 47; baptisms this year, 1,495; members, 21,748; missionary contributions, $108,376. Good as it is, a possible improvement might be made; printing the three or four constitutions only every third year and sifting the eighty resolutions down to a dozen; thus giving more room for the minutes proper, now brief in the extreme, and restoring the important item, "digest of letters." Pastors might well make the annual the subject of some public service, the chief publication for information for Nebraska Baptists.

Promotion Committee's Efforts

National, state and local officials have been holding frequent gatherings and there is much "hurrying to and fro" to round out the year with as little deficit as possible. It was hoped that the new order of things would overcome the habit, so common, of paying religious pledges the last day. But a "crisis" seems to be necessary in many instances to unclasp our pocketbooks.

A writer in a southern paper is bold enough to question the propriety, or right, of their missionary society in sending a delegate to the Stockholm meeting, a costly trip. The question is in other minds than his and is worthy of consideration. But we notice, in the case of officials and pastors, that the high-salaried person is the one likely to have expenses paid to our large conventions. This is customary if not democratic.

Detroit Baptist Doings

By Albert H. Finn

"And they crucified him." Detroit was the scene of another great city-wide observance of the crucifixion hours of our Lord and Christ, on Good Friday, so called. Under the direction of the Council of Churches, the period of Lent was given over to intensive evangelistic appeal in all the Protestant churches. Every noon, at one of the down-town theaters, was held an hour service with an outstanding speaker. This year Doctor Bustard, of Cleveland, was the first speaker with union evening services in some large church, Doctor Bustard speaking in the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church. The culmination came on Good Friday when by proclamation of the mayor and by common consent, business was largely suspended and it was estimated that 100,000 people assembled in seven great theaters and at least 100 churches, and listened to addresses by chosen speakers whose themes centered about the cross. In addition the newspaper broadcasting stations sent out their reports, each one featuring some one of the services. This was preparatory to a worshipful and gladsome Easter when all the churches were overflowing with eager listeners.

Easter was a glad day for all our Baptist churches. The weather was far from the usual Easter sort; in fact, it was about as cold as January but clear and bright. As far as I have been able to learn, every church was crowded with eager worshipers. Easter is generally looked upon as the culmination of the special evangelistic efforts and most gracious results are reported. Doctor Hoag reports 225 received since October at Woodward Avenue. Rev. Mark F. Sanborn, the newly installed pastor at the First Church, reports eighty-six new members since he came. Rev. Arthur V. Allen celebrated his first year at Jefferson Avenue on Mar. 4 and reports 150 new members since October, of which number seventy-five were baptized on Easter Day. Rev. Llewellyn Brown reports sixty accessions since October at Temple. Rev. Herman Lang, the new pastor at Beulah, rejoices in seventy new members since he came a few months ago. I give these few reports as indicative of the spirit that has pervaded our churches. The probabilities are that the reports of the associational year will show the largest ingatherings in the history of the churches.

Dedication of Northwestern Church

Easter was an outstanding day for the Northwestern Church because the old Hudson Avenue Church was born anew as the Northwestern Church in the beautiful new stone, brick and steel house of worship that was opened to the public for the first time on Easter morning, at the corner of Grand River and Clarendon avenues. Notwithstanding the greatly increased seating capacity over the old frame building on Hudson Ave., the new meeting house was filled to overflowing. The preacher of the day was Rev. Geo. W. Taft, president of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, of Chicago. His themes were: "The Resurrection Corner Stone," and "Our Opportunity and Our Message." Dr. H. C. Gleiss, superintendent of the Detroit Baptist Union, who, with his family, is a member of this church, presented the financial needs. Rev. Robert White, pastor, was happy beyond adequate expression, and justly so. The new location is in the very center of a rapidly developing residential section of the better class. The building is a Gothic adaptation, rather severe because of its location, but developed in a most satisfactory manner, affording an 800 seat auditorium with possibilities of increase by adding galleries. The Gothic lines are carried out in the interior even to the lighting fixtures, while the acoustics are perfect. This is the first unit, representing a value of from $125,000 to $150,000. A second unit, a Sunday-school and social building, must follow soon, judging from the crowded conditions of Easter and the large number of accessions that will surely come from this exceptional field and the faithful ministry of Pastor White, his associate, Magnus Burgess, and the splendid corps of officers and workers.

The week was given over to an inviting program: Monday, Bible school night; Tuesday, community night; Wednesday, church night; Thursday, B. Y. P. U. night; and Friday, denominational night, when President Power of the Detroit Baptist Union presided, and pastors from the Baptist churches and others offered their felicitations. Rev. John E. Smith, director general of the Michigan Convention, was the honored guest of the evening. This is an illustration of foresight and cooperation. The Detroit Union purchased the site some five years ago realizing its future strategic value. The Hudson Avenue Church already realized that a change must come for it but not until later did it vote to accept the responsibility involved. The growth in value of the site has been almost beyond belief. It has called for sacrifice and faith, but the pastors and the church officers have pressed bravely on and inside of five years, Northwestern will be one of our strongest churches. It surely will be when its additional unit is built. That will cost $100,000 more. The Detroit Union, which is what its name implies, a union of all the Detroit Baptist churches, has given of its resources of money and capable men to the accomplishment of this splendid achievement.

The First Church is having plans prepared for a $100,000 addition to its handsome house of worship that will afford enlarged and up-to-date Bible-school and social features. Pastor Sanborn is leading this grand old church into new life and activity.

We are all looking forward to the annual meeting of the Detroit Union, which will be held at the Woodward Avenue Church, May 8. The business session is to be held in the afternoon, followed by a reception to the guest of honor, Rev. F. E. Taylor, of Indianapolis, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, who will be the chief speaker at the dinner that follows. This is a great social event for Detroit Baptists. It marks also the close of the greatest constructive year in the history of the Detroit Union. Dr. H. C. Gleiss, general superintendent, will tell the story of the year in his annual report, also to be given after the dinner.

Mrs. B. T. Leonard, widely loved wife of the director of religious education of the Detroit Union, underwent a dangerous operation to remove cancer recently. For a time her life was despaired of, but her vigorous constitution, sustained by widespread prayer, brought her through and she is now at her home in fair way of recovery.

Attention, Baptists!

Those of you who have so generously given to the building fund campaign of the Women's Union Christian Colleges in the Orient are most anxious I know that your church and denomination should receive credit for your gifts.

The state boards of promotion agents are writing in asking for lists of such gifts and may I say at this time that I am now preparing a list of all gifts designated as coming from Baptists, and where they have given their church designation. I am including that and will forward same on or before April 30, to Miss Alice Hudson, national treasurer, W. A. B. F. M. S., that she may report same to the General Board of Promotion and that all churches may receive full credit.

It is impossible to notify each individual church at this time, but they will receive their credit through headquarters in New York. I will, therefore, refer all who are interested to Miss Alice Hudson to whom I will send my report.

Hilda L. Olson, Asst. Treas.
Joint Committee Women's Union Christian Colleges in the Orient.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

MASSACHUSETTS

EASTER EXPERIENCES WERE SO GENERAL and so similar in nearly all the churches, that it is hardly news to mention any specifically. All had capacity congregations, unusual music, and often pageantry, and as a rule, large companies of believers were baptized. This seemed to be the tale all through the state. To make special mention of each church would become as monotonous and cover as much space as the pages of the newspaper that announce the musical programs of the churches "the day before."

THE BOSTON MINISTERS' CONFERENCE gave a long and bristling session on Apr. 1, to the questions that were propounded to the ministers with reference to the future denominational program. The general conviction that the questions were really difficult, and that nobody was attempting to "put anything over," seemed to promote a spirit of reasonableness and of earnest inquiry that kept any impulse merely to differ far removed from the discussion. We were not so sure that we had gotten somewhere, as we were that we had avoided getting somewhere else. It looks as if we would have patience, also confidence in our brethren. That is not a small matter.

THE APRIL MEETING OF THE SOCIAL UNION was the "annual." That is always a limber and happy occasion. Official pleasantries accompany the departing and arriving presidents. President Wilcox passed out of the high seat with unusual good nature, and seemed proud of the badge of the "has been" that former President Bailey pinned upon him. The "has beens" have become an impressive company. Now and then they are mustered around platform tables where they can all be seen, and can prink up their presidential aspect. The new president is Mr. John F. Rood, of the First Church, Malden. This is a fitting choice, for Mr. Rood is thoroughly competent, and is armed with an earnest interest in practical Christian effort that ought to develop a real chief. The speaker of the evening was cyclonic, and he had a theme full of varied explosives: "The World Sweep of Democracy." It was Prof. D. D. Vaughan of the Boston University Divinity School. Almost everybody forgot that he was hearing a professor of theology. He is a stormer and no mistake. So masterful, so juicy, so convincing. He showed how democracy was making havoc of some played-out theologies—kicking them around as if they were old junk. And he found justification for it all in the words of Jesus. The speaker gripped us for ninety minutes, and kept us thinking.

IN THE DISCUSSION OF THE MINISTERS ON MONDAY, Dr. Frank W. Padelford, the head of our education board, was easily the man of authority on matters pertaining to our schools. He had no program that was not the program of the Baptists, and with clarity and power of statement, gave us the point of view both of Baptists and of their schools. It was probably news to some, that certain big schools which had been made bones of contention in the budget, strongly desired to take themselves out of contention, and be free. Anyhow things baptistic are now ticklish and uncertain—that is evident.—C. H. WATSON.

RHODE ISLAND

AT THE FIRST CHURCH, WESTERLY, ten persons were baptized, Mar. 25, by Pastor Hatfield. The church calendar carries a statement of the mission of the church: "We seek to help people live the life that is worth while, and give you a chance to help. The First Baptist Church is a church of the people and for the people. It witnesses to the things of the spirit and summons all like-minded people to its work and worship. We believe in a Bible that is a light in a dark world; in a Christ that is able to save to the uttermost; in a gospel that is inspiring to busy men and women. Our government is democratic, our social life characterized by true friendships, and our worship by simplicity. Service is the measure of greatness, therefore we are here to serve in the spirit of Him who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. If everybody will do something to help, the church will be stronger, all will be happier and more people will find the blessing in the fellowship of service."

NEW YORK

AT THE FIRST CHURCH, Kingston, Rev. Arthur S. Cole, pastor, on Easter Sunday, eight were baptized and thirteen members received the hand of fellowship. An unusual feature was the celebration of the eightieth anniversary of the baptism of one of its members, Mrs. Elisha M. Brigham. She was baptized in April, 1843, by Rev. Daniel Robinson, then pastor. At the service on Easter, Mrs. Brigham was presented with a large basket of Easter lilies. Among those baptized was her granddaughter. Four generations of the family are now members of the church.

REV. WILBOUR E. SAUNDERS, who has been assistant pastor at the Marcy Avenue Church, Brooklyn, for three years, and has served as director of religious education, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Church, Rahway, N. J. He began his work there on Easter. The Marcy Avenue people accepted his resignation with sincere regret. Their good wishes follow him to his new field.

DOCTOR AND MRS. FOWLER of Hanson Place Church, Brooklyn, will sail for Europe June 26 on the "Berengaria." On July 8 Doctor Fowler will preach anniversary sermons in one of the large churches in Manchester, and then proceed with Mrs. Fowler to Stockholm. At the request of the Swedish and British committees on program, Doctor Fowler will preach in the First Baptist Church of Stockholm, Convention Sunday, July 22. At the close of the meetings, Doctor and Mrs. Fowler will go with the British delegation to the fjords of Norway, after which they will return to London, where Doctor Fowler will preach for the remainder of the vacation period.

DELAWARE

DOVER.—DR. CHARLES A. WALKER gave the hand of fellowship to twelve new members at the Easter service. Of the number baptized, one was a man who had been for several years a member of the board of trustees, and another was the secretary of the church school.

Activities of Charleston Baptists

Special pre-Easter services at the Temple conducted by Pastor Clarence W. Kemper and Ralph C. Ostergren, resulted in forty-one conversions. There were baptisms nearly every Sunday evening, and it was expected that at least 100 new members would unite with the church Easter. Definite report as to the number of Easter accessions has not yet been received.

THEY DO MORE THAN RETURN A MAXIMUM INCOME FOR LIFE

1. Because the life of the annuitant is enriched with the contentment which comes from the assurance of a regular income.

2. Because a second life may be enriched by the extension of the income after the first life has ended.

3. Because the life of the nation will be enriched by the ultimate expenditure of the principal in missionary work or in the creation of a trust or memorial fund, in which the interest for all time will go toward Christianizing the people of this and other lands.

ANNUITIES—ONE OR TWO LIVES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

The rate always depends upon the age of the person when the gift is made. When the rate is once fixed, it never varies, but remains the same.

A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives. When you cease to enjoy its benefits the same income is continued throughout the lifetime of the relative or friend whose name follows yours in the agreement.

At Emmanuel, the pastor and his people conducted their own services with marked results. The pastor, Rev. James Frame, is a fine leader and the church reports sixty new members within recent weeks.

Calvary Church, under the leadership of the new pastor, Rev. C. M. Smock, assisted by an evangelist, held special meetings with good results.

The small but enterprising South Charleston Church is accomplishing heroic things under the pastor, Mr. Grose. As a result of recent meetings, 100 new members were received.

Emmanuel is prospering in its new building and Temple is overflowing and getting ready to begin its wonderful equipment. South Charleston is much in need of a new building. The kingdom program is advancing in the capital city of West Virginia. The Temple is setting up a program inclusive of Northern Baptist Convention objectives, and this month has been designated as denominational month.

INDIANA

THE CAMPAIGN OF PERSONAL EVANGELISM of the Emerson Avenue Church, Indianapolis, closed Easter with a total of ninety-one people received into the membership of the church from Sept. 1. Of these, fifty-six were received by baptism and thirty-five by letter. One hundred members of the crusader's league of personal workers worked under the assignment of the pastor, Paul Judson Morris, each endeavoring to lead at least one soul to Christ by Easter. At the close of the campaign, the church was fortunate enough to secure the assistance of Rev. Wm. Graham Everson, pastor of the First Church, Muncie, in special pre-Easter services Mar. 19-30. During his stay fifty-six people presented themselves for membership, the major portion as candidates for baptism. Mr. Everson is the only minister of America who holds the military title of Brigadier General. He was the commanding officer in entire charge of all our American forces on the Italian sector during the war. Mr. Everson was the speaker at two of the pre-Easter noon meetings held in Keith's Theater under the auspices of the Indianapolis federation of churches.

MANY PASTORAL CHANGES are to be noted in the state. The church at Petersburg has called Rev. F. R. Barnaby of Brazil. He has accepted and begins his new pastorate at once. Brownstown has called Rev. Ross E. Dillon of Louisville. He began his service Apr. 1. Rev. Rollo C. Speer has closed his work at Bloomington and began at Milwaukee, Wis. The Dunkirk Church has called Rev. C. M. Sherman of Pennsylvania. He is already on the field. Rev. Stanley A. Gillett of Milan has resigned and will return to Iowa where he has accepted the call of the Winterset Church.

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Ministers' Aid Society for the election of officers and the transaction of other necessary business, will be held at the Ministers' Home, Fenton, Wednesday, May 2, at 9 a. m. The annual meeting of the trustees will follow. Churches contributing to the work of the society are entitled to send delegates to the annual meeting.

AS A RESULT OF A WEEK of special meetings in the church at Marshall, seventeen decisions and several reconsecrations were made. Easter morning seven were baptized and another group will be ready for baptism in the near future. A World Wide guild has been organized and a training course on the meaning of church membership to be held every Thursday evening the latter part of prayer meeting hour, will be instituted this month. Courses by Doctor Gilkey and Doctor Aitchison will be used.

REV. W. B. HARTZOG is preaching a series of sermons which is attracting attention of the members and citizens of Mason.

IT IS REPORTED THAT 100 new members were received into the Jefferson Avenue Church, Detroit, during the Easter season. Rev. A. V. Allen is finding this section of the city a fruitful field for his ministry.

Defeat of Detroit Reform Forces

The city elections Apr. 2 in Detroit resulted in a defeat for the church and reform forces. The hottest fight was over the effort to return four incumbents, a majority of the court, who had combined in defense of good government. With six to be elected, these four (Judges Cotter, Heston, Keidan and Marsh) were given the endorsement of the Citizens' League, the Anti-Saloon League, and the Council of Churches.

Judge Pliny Marsh, a prominent Baptist layman, a deacon in Woodward Avenue Church, and teacher of the large Baraca Class there, was singled out for attack by the underworld gang and the liquor crowd. On the Sunday before the election a Detroit paper carried an advertisement published by the Association Opposed to Prohibition, containing the following appeal "To all liberal voters in Detroit:" "As a special request, we ask our membership NOT to vote for Pliny Marsh for recorder in the city of Detroit. He was a former Anti-Saloon League worker, and has spent most of his life in the work of professional reforming. To insure the defeat of Marsh take no chances."

Detroit, a city eminent for its achievements in the field of good government and judicious citizenship, has given heed to this infamous counsel, and Judge Marsh is defeated. Two of his colleagues endorsed by the reform forces were elected; but the control of the court passes from the group which established its procedure and principles.

The election is a defeat for civic righteousness; but to have been denounced and fought by the underworld, and selected for personal attack by the liquor gang as was Judge Pliny Marsh, reveals this Christian jurist in his defeat as more than ever worthy of the confidence and love of all decent people.

OHIO

THE CHURCH OF THE MASTER, Cleveland, of which Dr. Franklin W. Sweet is pastor, had a number of additions to the membership during the Easter season. The church cooperated with the city-wide denominational campaign, Feb. 27-Mar. 11. The results were due largely to a three months' campaign in the church school. The plans of Dr. A. H. Gage were used, and more enthusiastically followed out because of an all-day visit from Doctor Gage during the campaign. The climax of the movement was reached Mar. 11—Declaration Day—when 214 cards were signed for various kinds of consecration, fifty-four being decisions for Christ or immediate baptism. In spite of the fact that Doctor Sweet was out of his pulpit because of illness, the work went steadily on. During his absence the following conducted services: Rev. H. F. Stillwell, Rev. Archibald M. McDonald, Rev. Howard Vernon, Henry Turner Bailey, dean of the Cleveland School of Art, and Rev. Alexander McGaffin, one of the pastors of the Presbyterian Church of the Covenant.

REV. G. R. ROBBINS, COLUMBUS, assisted Rev. E. Otheman Smith, pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Chillicothe, in a series of special meetings. Twenty persons were received for baptism. Mr. Smith recently completed two years of service with the church.

THE DEATH OF DR. R. B. MCDANEL, pastor of the First Church, Martins Ferry, occurred very suddenly Sunday evening, March 23. He had been in his usual health at the moment of his death, the call coming to him while welcoming his young people into the auditorium preparatory to their evening service. Doctor McDanel stood high in the esteem of his brethren in the ministry, and his death is a great loss to Ohio and the denomination. He was born in Philadelphia, Pa., 1862. After graduating from Bucknell in 1888, he held pastorates in Philadelphia, Pa.; Clarksburg, Charleston, and Alderson in West Virginia, Covington, Ky., and Martins Ferry, This last pastorate began Sept., 1917. Mrs. McDanel, two daughters, three sons and two sisters, Miss Lily McDanel of Martins Ferry, and Mrs. Charles A. Fuller of Brooklyn, N. Y., survive him. Funeral services were conducted Wednesday, Mar. 28, at Martins Ferry. Rev. G. E. Bartlett of Parkersburg, W. Va., and Rev. C. H. Stull, Granville, officiated and were assisted by Mr. French, Secretary Ministerial Association of Martins Ferry.

A WORTHY TASK

To undertake to furnish a Christian House of Healing for needy Colored Persons is a task worthy of the Christian profession of any group. One who is not familiar with the sanitary conditions of the average Negro home in the South is unable to comprehend the frightful environment of the average Negro when he is sick or injured. Alabama Baptists have set themselves to the task of supplying the need of Hospital facilities for Negroes, where they may receive treatment in an environment the equal of that found in any first-rate Hospital in the land. A little more than one year ago, as a result of the 75 Million Campaign, the was opened at Selma, Alabama. It is operated under the superintendency of white persons, supported by white persons, and was paid for by white persons, solely as a Christian ministry to colored persons.

The average Negro is improvident; he has nothing laid aside for times of sickness. He is, therefore, unable to pay hospital fees. Nearly all the work we do is done without hope of payment—is charity. Our means are limited. We ask the cooperation of every Christian who has an interest in suffering humanity—especially a class of humanity which is incapable of caring for itself.

erator of the council was Rev. J. H. Cozad and the clerk, Rev. J. R. Hastings. Rev. Geo. W. Taft preached the ordination sermon.

THE FIRST CHURCH, Champaign, has experienced the most successful revival it has had in many years. The meetings were held the two weeks preceding Easter, and were conducted by Rev. George H. Thompson, harp evangelist. Nearly sixty signed cards. Rev. W. B. Morris is pastor. The outlook for the future is encouraging.

STREATOR.—THE CHURCH held a week of pre-Easter services which proved to be helpful and interesting. The pastor, Rev. G. W. Claxon, preached. There were eight additions, of whom six were baptized Easter. There have been fifteen additions since the first of the year.

UTICA.—SINCE REV. L. P. CASSEL became pastor three and a half years ago, there has been a steady growth in the work. The attendance in the Sunday school has doubled. On Jan. 28, Rev. A. H. Gage conducted a decision day service, as a result of which there were nineteen baptisms on Easter. Extensive improvements have been made on the parsonage and the church building has been redecorated.

IOWA

REV. J. W. CASE OF RIPLEY, N. Y., has accepted the call of the church at Spirit Lake and begins his work at once.

THE MANCHESTER CHURCH has had a successful revival season with the assistance of Evangelist C. E. Hillis of Kahoka, Mo. There were many conversions. The Christian people have been quickened and all departments of the church are feeling the uplift of the meetings.

MR. S. C. SONNICHSEN recently resigned his position as professor of political science at Des Moines University, to take up the work of the department of vocational education for the state.

DR. W. B. HUTCHINSON, one of the field workers for the Iowa Convention, recently visited Des Moines University. He reported that the four field workers were holding conferences in their respective districts with the different promotional committees of the associations, in an effort to line up the offerings for the New World Movement. These meetings are having success.

GEORGE C. CONRAD, who graduates from Des Moines University in June, recently became pastor of the church at Keota. He is already on the field and will be ordained this month.

STANLEY L. THOMAS, a junior at Des Moines University, has accepted a full time pastorate at Ethelstan. He will continue his studies at the university.

REV. V. N. WITTER, director of religious education for the state convention, has been attending a number of associational B. Y. P. U. meetings in various parts of the state.

THE MONTHLY REPORT of the Creston association B. Y. P. U. shows a growing interest in the work of the young people in that part of the state. The report mentions particularly the work of the young people at Corning, Massena, Mt. Ayr and Cumberland.

A WORK OF PERSONAL EVANGELISM was conducted among the students of Des Moines University during the month of March. The Y. M. C. A. took on new life; new officers were elected and a program of activity was planned for the future. Students will long remember the days, Mar. 27-29, when A. J. (Dad) Elliott presented the claims of the Christian life.

MISSOURI

EASTER WAS THE MOST wonderful day the Central Church, Kansas City, has ever had. All previous records in the Sunday school were broken, and even the goal set for that day, surpassed. The attendance was 503; the offering, $115.06. The work was never more prosperous than at present. An assistant to the pastor, Rev. C. H. Berry, will be secured within a short time.

MINNESOTA

REV. A. T. WALLACE OF WINONA has accepted the call of the First Church, Duluth. Rev. A. A. Orn, Rev. Olaf Breding and Rev. A. Edstam are planning to attend the Baptist World Alliance in Stockholm. Minnesota will have a relatively large delegation from present prospects. Prof. and Mrs. Walfred Danielson will go to Assam as missionaries under the Foreign Society. Professor Danielson is the registrar of Bethel Institute. Rev. Alex Anderson of Eveleth has accepted a call to the West Duluth Swedish church.

NORTH DAKOTA

EVANGELIST ERIC ANDERSON assisted the Swedish Church, Fargo, of which Rev. W. G. Holmberg is pastor, in a series of revival meetings. The meetings were well attended and there were many conversions.

KANSAS

THE FIRST CHURCH, PARSONS, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary March 17. Dr. J. T. Crawford, who was pastor for ten years, delivered the morning address. The First Church was organized March 20, 1873, with twelve charter members. In 1879 a lot was purchased and in 1880 the first house of worship was completed at a cost of $1,000. The building was enlarged several times, but in 1907 was completely destroyed by fire. A new site was purchased and a new building erected at a cost of $50,000. During the entire fifty years there have been but seventeen pastors. Rev. H. A. Smoot is the present pastor.

Kansas City Theological Seminary

A year ago the seminary faced the necessity of a change of location, having been crowded out of its present one by the complete change in the surrounding population. In Feb., 1922, Mr. S. J. Rudd, of Belpre, offered a farm worth from $12,000 to $16,000 toward a new site. The concluding check for the fiscal year from the New World Movement enabled the payment last July of $5,000 down on the twenty-acre site finally chosen, conceded to be the finest in the city. By January, pledges had been obtained for $15,000, chiefly in Missouri, thus providing the whole cost of the site. Last February the seminary sold its present building, Lovelace Hall, its home for twenty-one years, to the city school board for a negro high school, and gives possession May 10. It has other rapidly salable property in the vicinity amounting to about $25,000.

Mr. George E. Merrill, home mission architectural secretary, is perfecting the plans for the new buildings on the basis of the probable growth in the next twenty years, though only the buildings immediately needed will be erected now—administration, library, and the first home unit of the women's training school, aggregating a cost of perhaps $125,000. Toward this, there is now practically in hand over $75,000, which is being rapidly increased by a quiet canvass among friends. The latest gift is a $10,000 farm from Mrs. N. M. Bartles, Dewey, Okla., for a building to house the Pratt-Journeycake Library, in honor of Major Pratt, Baptist missionary to the Indians, and Charles Journeycake, chief of the Delawares and a Baptist minister.

Others have investigated our Annuity plan and found it excellent. This is what a few of them say about it:

"I have been receiving Annuity interest on $2,000 for a number of years and now want to take out $3,000 more. It surely is a satisfactory way to get the best returns from one's money while still living."

"I am enclosing a check for $2,000. May it do as much good as the pleasure it gives me to invest."

"I am enclosing a draft for $500 to pay for another Annuity Bond. It makes me happy to know that this money will be doing Christian work which I can't do myself because of other responsibilities."

"I've always been glad about my Annuities not only because I regard them as perfectly safe investments but also because it is a comfort to know that when I no longer need the money it will go to carry on the work that I love."

The raising of the additional $50,000 needed by that time will be a herculean task, but with God's blessing, so signally bestowed in the past, and the aid of God's people, it will be successfully accomplished. The seminary's enrolment this year is over eighty, exceeding any previous year.

Rev. B. J. Minort, Alliance, recently closed a series of meetings with the Congregational Church, Hayes Center. There were eighty additions to the church and twelve volunteers for the ministry and missionary work.

NEBRASKA

Mr. R. R. Coon, state correspondent, has recovered from a six weeks' illness, and is back on the job. This accounts for the fact that there has been so little news from the state.

The possibilities of lay evangelism were manifested at the Calvary Church, Omaha, on Easter. As a result of six weeks for intensive personal work, forty-eight new members were welcomed into the fellowship of the church at the morning service. In addition, fully that number have had their interest quickened. Another feature of the day was the dedication of the new pipe organ. The organ is a three manual, electro-pneumatic type, with 1,500 pipes and thirty-eight speaking stops. The equipment includes a fine set of chimes, harp, and other modern devices. As an expression of affection and appreciation, the church dedicated the organ in loving recognition of the faithful services of the Carpenter family, which has had a large place in the life and work of Calvary Church.

Obituary

MRS. H. H. TUTTLE

Laura Jane Luse, daughter of Deacon John and Martha Byrd Luse, was born Aug. 8, 1845, in Clark County. Her girlhood was spent at home except while she attended seminary in Springfield, where she was a member of the First Baptist Church. June 14, 1870, she married Rev. H. H. Tuttle, a graduate of Wittenberg College and Crozer Theological Seminary. Their first work was at Bradford Junction, but because of failing health they moved back to Clark County in a few years. In 1880 Mr. Tuttle reorganized the Sinking Creek Baptist Church and retained the pastorate almost continually until 1910. In 1888 they moved to Granville to educate their children at Denison University, and lived there until 1904. In 1918 Mrs. Tuttle returned to Granville to make her home with her daughter, Mrs. E. J. Owen, where she quietly slipped away Feb. 5, 1923, and was laid to rest in Ferncliffe at Springfield, Feb. 9. A brother, W. H. Luse, a sister, Mrs. Mary C. Tuttle, twenty grandchildren, two great grandchildren and the following children survive: Mrs. Milo B. Price, Owatonna, Minn.; Mrs. E. J. Owen, Granville; Mrs. E. H. Jesson, Rochester, Minn.; A. Judson Tuttle, Gauhati, Assam; Wallace Tuttle, Kansas City, Mo.; Clyde Tuttle, Columbus; Mrs. Oscar T. Laybourne, Miss Mary C. Tuttle and John Luse Tuttle of Springfield.

Our Book Shelf

The Possibilities of Prayer, by Edward M. Bounds. New York: Revell and Co.

The material in the book is very suggestive but its style of presentation might have been greatly improved by editing.

An Introduction to the Psychology of Religion, by Robert H. Thouless. New York: Macmillan Co.

A most interesting and stimulating discussion for lay readers. While the book deals with a scientific subject, it does so in a simple way and thus fittingly introduces the reader to a vast realm of new material.

Suggestion and Mental Analysis, by William Brown. M. A., M. D. New York: Doran Co. $1.50.

As its subtitle states, the book is "an outline of the theory and practice of mind cure." It is a simple treatise along a line which Dr. Brown understands probably as well as any man of the day. Some of the chapters of the book were delivered as lectures to audiences in the universities of Oxford and London.

Huntingtower, by John Buchan. New York: George H. Doran Co. $2 net.

An amusing and absorbing, though improbable, tale of the adventures of a middle-aged Englishman who starts out in search of youth and romance. The plot deals with Bolsheviks, jewels, a kidnapped noblewoman, a poet, and a band of doughty cockneys. The result is an entertaining, thrilling story with the interest sustained to the end. The character of Mr. Dickson McCunn as a lovable, dependable, yet romantic grocer, is especially well drawn.

"The Vision of Desire," by Margaret Pedler. New York: Doran Co. $2.

Ann, about whom the story is woven, is a Pollyannaish sort of girl who pleases every one and particularly the men, all of whom are more or less in love with her—generally more. She is finally betrothed, after a serious misunderstanding, to the one whom the "average reader" would have her accept—a man who has been ill-used by women in earlier life and has become a misogynist because of it. The scene is laid in Switzerland and England. There is enough of interest in the romance to hold the attention pleasurably. A touch of individuality is given to all of the characters—the lovable rector and his gossipy sister, the bluff Lady Susan, gambling Tony, villainous Brett Forrester, dependable Robin, sturdy Maria Coombe and disillusioned Cara.

Intensive Powers on the Western Slopes, by Lemuel C. Barnes. Philadelphia: Judson Press. $1.

spring. Irrigation is the open sesame to unlimited food. Irrigation ditches are the arteries through which the throbbing heart of the ocean pours its life-giving currents. A hungry crowd waited the multiplying power of the Christ. A hungry world waits upon our harvests. Unrestricted water power drives the turbine, the turbine drives the dynamo and electricity drives, lifts, lights and warms. Until the ocean dries up, power is our willing servant. Agricultural power plus mechanistic power minus conscience will wreck the Republic. It is the duty of the churches to breathe spiritual life into the new giant. Dr. Barnes' new book deals with facts and calls for acts. A copy of this book ought to be in every Christian home and the result should be a second volume of the Acts.

New Blood, by Louise Rice. New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.

This new "melting-pot story" melts one's eyes to tears and one's spirit to tenderness and human sympathy. An exclusive New Jersey village suffers a sudden inundation of foreigners who are to work in a lace factory. The humorous and pathetic episodes connected with their assimilation and Americanization make up a delightful story. Reading circles in church and home cannot afford to overlook "New Blood."

Drama in Religious Service, by Martha Candler. New York: The Century Co.

A complete hand-book of the subject, beautifully printed, in large clear type, with twenty-four fine illustrations: a typical "Century" book. Miss Candler argues: "It is in drama, so utilized, that the pent-up social and spiritual impulses of the participants, suddenly released, take on a form, a beauty and a vividness of appeal which even the sponsors of modern biblical drama scarcely saw. It is here that the significance of Christian teaching blossoms anew, infinitely fresh, infinitely miraculous." A sketch of the history of religious drama; discussion, with examples, of the use of the dramatic form of teaching religious truths; descriptions of experiments and achievements in this field; a resume of numerous plays and pageants; a chapter on stage lighting and setting; on costuming; and appendices listing available material for dramatic use in churches make this work indispensable to those who wish to specialize in this rapidly-growing enterprise in modern church life.

"It Is to Laugh"

Before this becomes a really thrifty country again somebody may have to start the fashion of wearing patches where they are most needed.—Chicago News.

Miss Smithson was not unconscious of her attractiveness to the opposite sex.

"And did Mr. Brown say," she simpered to her friend, "as I entered the room last night, 'Clara, is that the beautiful Miss Smithson?'"

"Yes, dear," answered Clara, "with the accent on the 'that.'"

He was a rising artist and decided to surprise his wife by painting a portrait of her and himself together. He showed the finished picture to his son, who said:

"That's fine! But who is the lady, dad?"

"Why, that's your mother."

After a long pause the son remarked:

"Well, in that case why have you painted her with a strange gentleman?"

A man had been in a public telephone box for half an hour. He appeared to be bored, and, though he held the receiver to his ear, he made no attempt to speak.

At last one of the crowd outside, exasperated with waiting, opened the door and asked, politely: "Are you speaking to anybody?"

The silent one replied, "Yes; I am speaking to my wife."

A group of officials were examining a mine where the only method of travel was the rope and bucket. When they had finished their explorations they were hauled up in this bucket two at a time.

As the last was ascending, with a miner as fellow passenger, he noticed unmistakable symptoms of frailty in the rope.

"How often do you change your ropes?" he inquired when about halfway from the bottom of the awful abyss.

"We change them every three months, sir," replied the miner, "and we shall change this one tomorrow if we get up safe."

WAYS FOR MAKING ORGANS FIREPROOF

By H. V. A. Parsell

There is always a feeling of sadness when we hear of the burning of a church or other edifice in which the organ has shared in the general destruction. Especially is this the case when we are in the actual presence of the charred ruins of such a structure and think of the familiar console and the well-beloved tones which were once the joy and comfort of the organist.

But why should this be always so? It would seem that in this age of invention and almost unlimited resources, matters could be so arranged that the organ, at least, could be preserved from the flames. In view of the fact that the organ is probably the most expensive of the furnishings of a church it would seem logical to provide it with every possible safeguard against fire. Let us see what might be done to preserve it.

First, we shall consider the origin of fires in churches. They may start inside or outside the organ. Fire inside the organ could be caused by a forgotten or overturned candle of the tuner. That is a carelessness against which only vigilance could guard. The same is true of a forgotten cigarette stub left on the windchest. The only probable remaining cause would be defective wiring within the instrument. Of wiring there are two types—the lighting circuits and the low tension action circuits. For the first of these the best preventive is the exclusive use of the best materials and fittings installed under the most recent underwriters' rules and regularly inspected. As to the low tension circuits, careful insulation and installation must be insisted on, as a short circuit is apt to cause undue heating of wires and possible smoldering of insulation, which might break into flame at a later time.

As to protection from fires originating outside the organ, that would seem to be a simple matter if the organ is so located as to permit of certain safeguards. The introduction in recent years of cement swell boxes is a long step toward the fireproofing solution. But one thing more is needed to protect the organs enclosed in such swell boxes, and that is to fireproof the swell shutters. This would seem to be easy now that it is so easy to obtain fireproof doors and windows. All that is required would be to cover the swell shutters with metal. With a suitable cement box and metal-covered shutters it would seem as if the organ thus protected could withstand for a considerable time the assaults of a conflagration.

This arrangement, however, leaves the great organ unprotected. The suggestion for that is to place the great organ in a chamber of masonry, with an arch opening into the auditorium, so that a rolling iron shutter can be dropped to cover this opening during the times when the organ is not in use. Perhaps an asbestos curtain could in some instances be used. This need not interfere with the placing of the carved organ case, with its display pipes, across or in front of such an arched opening. The fireproof curtain would descend between the case and the windchest with its pipe ranks.

It might be possible, in some cases, to install automatically-closing doors, but this would not be good practice, as these doors operate only when the heat in the building is sufficient to melt the fusible link which holds the doors open, and, of course, such heat would be destructive to the pipes even if the flames did not reach the interior.

The installation of automatic sprinklers within the organ would be worse than the automatic doors, for not only would the temperature have to reach the fusing point of the sprinkler links, but the resulting deluge of water would be almost as destructive to the organ and action as the fire.

The console now remains to be protected. Most of us have seen advertised the all-metal desks built by several metal furniture makers. Among these the writer has seen mentioned a roll-top desk. The obvious conclusion is that an all-metal structure of this type could be built which would safely house the delicate mechanism of the console and preserve it through all ordinary fire and flood, excepting only the crushing weight of a falling roof.

The electric blower and low tension dynamo can safely be left in the chamber where they are usually installed, as it is, or should be, a fireproof room and kept locked.

I am aware that many practical difficulties may be found which would deter builders from adopting the suggestions above advanced, but innovations can be made which will render the numerous worthy examples of the king of instruments in this country and elsewhere less apt to succumb to the destruction to which fires, freely acting, have hitherto doomed them. —The Diapason.

COMMON FAULTS

Sliding is one of the abominations in volunteer choir work. It must be due to a strange perversity of taste, for incipient singers evidently consider it beautiful. If one wants to hear it at its best, one needs but to get together any junior choir and then watch for the first good opportunity the youngsters have. They take it every time. It seems to come most natural where the music is for the moment on the down grade. Let them sing the well-known "Missionary Hymn," for instance. As soon as they get over the peak of the note C to the last syllable of the word "icy" and then to the word "mountain," down they invariably go in a most wonderful (?) slide from B to G. Wonderful? No, that is not exactly the word for it, but we shall not search the dictionary for a better one now. Let us only express our sincere hope that our singers will provide themselves with spikes, or something like that, to keep them from slipping at such icy places. It is——well——'

One of the common faults of new singers is that of clipping off part of a tone, especially at the end of phrases or at the final end of a piece. If the note is three-quarter, it is held only a quarter or even less. The trouble is due to a lack of breath control, or to nervousness. In any case, the effect is very bad. It betrays the nervousness of the singer, and thereby increases it, and it invariably spoils the piece sung. The opposite fault is just as bad, that of holding the notes too long. Rests are as essential to proper rhythmical effects as singing. If a phrase ends with a quarter note, sing only a quarter, and not a half or more, unless there should be a hold marked over the note, or the director calls for a hold. Otherwise give full value to all the rests called for, whether they be absolute rests for the whole choir, or even choir and instrument, or whether they are only given to a particular voice to allow certain progressions for other parts, or to give prominence to them, or whatever the reason may be. Everything then in its place. To "come before his presence with a song," means also at the right time and place to "keep silence before him."—Choir Leader.

SECRETARY PALMER and Mr. and Mrs. D. T. Pulliam of Loveland will sail from New York on the Mauretania, May 29, returning from Stockholm Aug. 1 on the Oscar II. Dr. Bruce Kinney will sail for Stockholm June 30. It is hoped that several others will go to Stockholm from Colorado. About twenty delegates will attend the convention at Atlantic City.

SECRETARY PALMER gave a dinner Friday, Mar. 30 in honor of Dr. Wm. Main of Philadelphia, at the Auditorium Hotel, Denver. The other guests were, the Baptist pastors of the city, Doctor Kinney, G. G. Laughlin, W. F. Ripley and Judge F. W. Freeman. Doctor Main, on his return from California, will attend the convention board meeting at the First Church, Denver, Tuesday, Apr. 24, and will speak at a mass meeting that evening.

REV. J. M. GARDNER has closed his work at Rocky Ford, and because of ill health will retire from the ministry. Rev. James M. Graham is the new pastor at Springfield, and W. A. Goudie is at Iliff.

FROM Nov. 1 to Easter week, there were received into the churches more than 1,000 as a result of special meetings. Especially successful was the meeting conducted by Pastor Walter I. Fowle, at Greeley, assisted by C. W. Thomas, student pastor at Boulder. More than fifty new members were received as a result of the meeting. During March special meetings were held at Monte Vista, Iliff, Delta, Las Animas, Trinidad, Longmont, Simla, Vona, Colorado Springs, First, Fowler, Berthoud, Peyton, Broadway, Galilee and Bethany, Denver, Grand Junction and Louisville.

CALVARY CHURCH, PASADENA, celebrated its eleventh anniversary with a fellowship meeting attended by friends and members, many of the latter being charter members of the organization. The church has the same pastor, Rev. B. B. Jacques, as when it was organized. A summary of the activities of the church for the eleven years of its existence was given by the pastor. He told how 381 members had been gained in that time. It has outgrown its present building, and work is now progressing on a new edifice to cost approximately $100,000.

Ninety and Nine Years of Service and Great Achievement

NEXT FEBRUARY The American Baptist Publication Society will celebrate its One Hundreth Anniversary.

THE NEED was never greater, nor the opportunity better. We must not go backward, but forward.

THE PROMOTION OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION in the churches of our denomination is one of the challenging tasks that have been committed to the Society. To meet this challenge at all adequately requires increased income. With limited resources, often in financial embarrassment, and last year confronted with diminished income and reduced budget, the Society nevertheless endeavored to perform the task committed to it by the denomination.

GOSPEL TRANSPORTATION has had an interesting development. First, the colporter-missionary traveling ON FOOT, then came the man ON HORSE-BACK. Soon men WITH BICYCLES were added to the list of workers, and then came the CHAPEL CARS, through which thousands of miles of territory were opened to the Gospel. With the construction of good roads came the MISSIONARY AUTOMOBILE, and now comes the latest achievement in Gospel transportation—the AUTO CHAPEL CAR. This carries a GOSPEL TENT, and provides comfortable accommodations for two workers on the road. In this colporter-missionary activity the Society is cooperating with the Home Mission Society.

IN THE NEAR FUTURE. We need five more endowed AUTO CHAPEL CARS; fifty additional Colporter-Missionaries in the United States, and twenty-four in Latin America. We need special workers for foreign-speaking and negro Bible schools; several additional directors for week-day church schools, institutes, assemblies, teacher-training and other advancing work of our Society.

WE BELONG TO THE BAPTISTS OF AMERICA. A financial emergency confronts the Society. Only $88,016.72, out of a total of $166,885.00 due for the current year has been received. This leaves a shortage to date of $78,868.28. The fiscal year closes April 30, 1923.

WHO WILL FINANCE THE WORK as it is now conducted, and also provide for future needs? WE NEED THE GIFTS OF OUR CHURCHES AND FRIENDS.

A Prayer

GIVE us thankful hearts today for thee, Lord Jesus—for thee, our choicest gift, our dearest guest.

Let not our souls be busy inns that have no room for thee and thine, but quiet homes of prayer and praise where thou mayst find fit company; where the needful cares of life are wisely ordered and put away, and wide, sweet spaces kept for thee; where holy thoughts pass up and down, and fervent longings watch and wait for thy coming.

So when thou comest again, Lord Jesus, mayst thou find all things ready, and thy servants waiting, not for a new master, but for one long loved and known. Amen.

Fresh from the Field

Dr. C. B. McAffee of the McCormick Theological Seminary, addressed the Ministers' Conference, Chicago, April 9, on the subject, "Some Recent Books for Ministers."

Rev. E. LeRoy Dakin, pastor of the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, during May will deliver a series of sermons on "The Coming King." During June his subject will be "The Gospel of the Kingdom."

The annual meeting of the Atlantic District of the W. A. B. F. M. S. and the W. A. B. H. M. S. will be held at Philadelphia, May 2-4. Registration at First Church, Wednesday afternoon. The W. W. G. banquet will be given on Wednesday evening at Grace Temple.

Rev. H. O. King is entering upon his third year as pastor of the church at Silver City, Iowa. Plans are under way for the erection of a new building on a more suitable location in order to meet the growing needs of the church. Five persons were recently baptized.

Dr. John A. Hutton has received a call to the pastorate of the Westminster Congregational Church of which Dr. J. H. Jowett was formerly pastor. At present Doctor Hutton is pastor of the Belhaven United Free Church, Glasgow.

The Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., has voted to grant its pastor, Rev. A. W. Beaven, a three months' leave of absence to give him an opportunity for travel and study. His vacation will begin the latter part of July in order that he may represent the church at the Stockholm gathering.

The annual meeting of the New England District of the Woman's Home Mission Society will be held in the First Church, Malden, Mass., May 2-3. The first session will begin Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Miss Clara E. Norcutt and Dr. George E. Haynes, both of New York, will speak. In the evening there will be music, a pageant, and an address by Dr. William A. Hill of New York. Thursday morning will be given to reports and an address by Mrs. George W. Coleman. Thursday afternoon, Miss Allene Bryan of New York and Dr. W. Quay Rosselle of Malden, will speak.

The pastor of the Gelsenkirchen Baptist Church, one of the largest on the continent of Europe, has written an important letter to Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke on behalf of the committee of the Rhine-Westphalian Association. This association includes the region into which the Belgians and French have penetrated since January 10. Among the thirteen associations forming the German Baptist Union, it is the largest and most important, both in the numbers and in its influence and energy. Its membership is nearly 9,000, over 1,100 being enrolled in the Gelsenkirchen Church, which Rev. A. Broda has served as pastor for nearly thirty years. This Baptist association, through its committee, wishes to emphasize the great danger to which the churches are exposed in consequence of the occupation. Prices have soared to a level hitherto unknown. The aged and unemployed, the sick and feeble, are suffering heavily. The churches have a hard struggle to preserve their exist-

Dollars mean power—for good or for evil. You are the one to do the choosing. In the long run it pays to be unselfish. Will you get behind our big intelligent program for bettering America? It is yours to say whether we advance or retreat. At present we are merely "marking time"—waiting for your answer.

Our problems begin and end in the pocket-book. One pocket-book can't pay all the bills required if our missionaries are to take Christ to every home in North America. But a lot of pocket-books can. It is your hand and your pocket-book that we want.

Here Is the Inside Story

Our operating budget for 1922-23 is $373,-944. Of this we have received to date $216,210. Subtract the two figures for yourself. It leaves $157,734 in regular United States money—the kind you earn and spend. Added to this we are already struggling under an accumulated deficit of $175,916.14. Can you honestly side-step these facts? You are "buying right" when you buy for Christ and eternity. An earned share in our work will pay you heart-warming dividends in satisfaction.

O Henry, You Ask So Much

"All joshing aside, I am really delighted with the success of THE BAPTIST. I was not in favor of combining our papers when the matter came up at Denver, and still think that we ought to have a third on the Pacific coast, but THE BAPTIST under your management has certainly made good and we hope that may it still make 'gooder.'"—W. E. Henry, First Church, Yakima, Wash.

Killam's Kollum

"It Would Be A Defeat"

On Monday, April 9, a few hours before starting on her "trip" the one who had come to be by hundreds familiarly called "Mrs. Kollum," said: "Don't neglect the paper." When I answered: "It is impossible for me to get out that paper this week," I was gently rebuked. "You must get out the paper, Kollum and all; not to do so would be a defeat."

This Kollum has always been "free." No one has ever had any strings on it. It is devoted to the creation of atmosphere and the promotion of circulation. The grouches and carping critics, for the most part, pass it by. We never have to ask the question when it is prepared, "Is it proper?"

Not long ago under the sense of a loss similar to that of the editor, Rev. A. H. Bailey, secretary of our work in East Washington and North Idaho, made use in the convention bulletin of an adaptation of the familiar lines of James Whitcomb Riley. Here we will do the same.

Away

"I cannot say, I will not say
That she is dead. She is just away!
With a cheery smile, and a wave of the hand,
She has wandered into an unknown land,
And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since she lingers there.
And you—O you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time step and the glad return,—
Think of her faring on, as dear
In the love of There as the love of Here."

"Remarkable"

Rev. John R. Garst, of the Twenty-third Avenue Church, Oakland, Cal., writes:

"Others have doubtless thought it—let me say it; I think it is remarkable how representative THE BAPTIST has been and continues to be, especially in the matter of publishing the local church news of the convention. (Perhaps Killam will retort, that as a daily diet THE BAPTIST itself is remarkable.) When I, with others, on the convention floor at Denver raised our voices in favor of a denominational paper, there were others among us who doubted the wisdom of the step for various reasons, one being that the local church would never be heard through the paper. Surely these now know that they had another think coming. Seldom do I receive my weekly copy without being stimulated to write some brother minister a word of congratulation or encouragement, as I am at this sitting writing three. Success for THE BAPTIST."

The American Mission to Lepers is responsible for the statement that there are 8,000 lepers under the American flag. The mission is raising $30,000 for a Protestant chapel in the leper hospital at Carville, La.

The council of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland recently passed a resolution expressing its profound sorrow at the death of Rev. Robert S. MacArthur and extending its sympathy to American Baptist churches.

There were 1,058 deaths from small-pox, typhus and pneumonia in two weeks among the Greek deportees from Anatolia who are waiting at Constantinople to be taken to Greece.

The newest Baptist theological sem-inary projected in Europe is that at Viseu, Portugal. The pioneer Baptist worker in Portugal, Rev. J. J. Oliviera, who was educated in the Baptist schools of the South, is identified with the new seminary.

The University of Chicago board of trustees announces that the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company has renewed its grant of $3,000 to the department of bacteriology for special investigation. Another gift is that of $1,500 for work being done by the Oriental Institute of the University.

Construction at an early date of a $500,000 hospital is planned by the Baptist churches of Kansas City, Mo. Committees have been named to raise $100,000 for the project, after which the proposition will be underwritten by a group of financiers who will issue bonds to secure the needed capital for completing the institution.

The eighth annual session of the Northern New England School of Religious Education will be held at New Hampshire College, Durham, July 16-23. Pres. Ralph D. Hetzel, of the college, declares as a result of three years' observation that the school represents a distinct service both to education and religion, and for this reason, the college considers it a privilege to welcome the school to its campus again this summer.

Christian workers at Ellis Island have long been faced with the pressing need for an adequate plan to guide immigrants landing at Ellis Island and destined for New York City. Many inexperienced and helpless immigrants have in the past been the victims of hotel runners, taxicab drivers, and unscrupulous people of all kinds. The Y. M. C. A. has recently been compelled to abandon the service which was rendered for a number of years and maintained on the basis of nominal fees charged to help cover necessary expenses. Representatives of the new Americans committee of the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions cooperating with the general committee on immigrant aid at Ellis Island have arranged with the Travelers' Aid Society to care for this pressing need.

The annual meeting of the Montana convention will be held in Helena, June 19-21.

The First Church, Grinnell, Iowa, reports that the Easter offering of eggs amounted to 120 dozen.

Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery was present at the services of the Baptist Temple, Brooklyn, Sunday, April 15, and delivered an address.

Under the leadership of Rev. H. F. Waring, the work in the Judson Memorial Church, Minneapolis, has progressed in a satisfactory manner. His four months' engagement will end June 1. Prof. Justin Nixon, the first pastor of the church, will be one of the summer supplies.

Dr. Henry Edward Tralle spent the last week in March with Dr. C. H. Rust and the Immanuel Church at Scranton, Pa., giving a series of addresses on phases of religious education. While in Scranton, Doctor Tralle acted as special adviser to three church building committees.

"Pussyfoot" Johnson spoke Apr. 8 at the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y. The meeting was held under the auspices of the National Anti-Saloon League.

Our World of Unrest Today Needs

TO know the gospel of Jesus Christ the Saviour

To learn how to pray.

To face fairly world facts that challenge the faith and works of Christ's church.

To apply Christian principles to individual, community, national and international affairs.

To see more cooperation than ever in foreign mission fields.

To see better home missions team play by denominational agencies.

To exercise the Christian spirit in industrial relations.

To make Americanization mean Christianization.

To infuse all education with Christianity.

To practice the ethics of Christian stewardship in money-getting and giving.

To enlist you and me in our denominational corner for immediate, definite, Christian life service.

To order such a Christian mobilization of life and money that it will adequately meet the unprecedented opportunity to Christianize a war-wracked civilization.

Lord Robert Cecil, godfather of the league of nations, has arrived in New York City. He is planning a lecture tour of the United States and Canada.

The Fellsway Church, Medford, Mass., remembered its pastor, Rev. L. Macdonald, on Easter Sunday with a gift of money. The church was organized three years ago. It is now planning for a larger church building.

Rev. W. B. Reed, formerly pastor of the Shiloh Church, Hartford, Conn., was installed April 2 as pastor of the Zion Church (negro), Philadelphia, Pa.

Dr. Milton G. Evans, president of Crozer Theological Seminary, spoke at the morning and evening service of the Mount Morris Avenue Church, New York City on Sunday, April 15.

The First Church at Minot, N. D., Rev. W. A. Daniel, pastor, reports the winding up of a $5,000 campaign, liquidating the church debt and doing some necessary improvements. There were two additions to the church membership on Easter, making a total of thirty-eight additions in the past sixteen months.

Thoroughly trained Sunday-school leaders are being educated in Korea. Teacher training courses have been prepared for the workers at large. Seventy-two hours of hard work will secure a certificate from the Korea Association and an additional seventy-two hours will gain a certificate from the World's Sunday School Association.

Dr. T. Hofmeister recently closed a series of revival meetings with First Church of New Philadelphia, Ohio. There were fifty-two conversions and more than 100 reconsecrations. With four other evangelists in the city at the same time, the Baptists had capacity crowds. Doctor Hofmeister has been invited to return to New Philadelphia next year.

Rev. James A. Mets, preacher, edu-cator, writer and lecturer, died at the Hahnemann Hospital, Philadelphia, April 5, at the age of ninety-one. He was born in Flushing, Netherlands; came to the United States in 1850; was graduated from the University of Chicago in 1864; was pastor of Baptist churches in Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey; author of "Naval Heroes of Holland," "The Holland of Today," and "Life of Rembrandt;" vice president of Baptist College at Atlanta, Ga.; principal of College Preparatory Schools at Jamesburg and at Somerville, N. J., and for six years superintendent of schools of Somerset county, N. J.

Sunday and Monday, May 20-21, Crozer Theological Seminary will celebrate its fifty-fifth anniversary. The following is the program: Sunday, baccalaureate sermon in the Upland Church by Rev. George W. Quick, Greenville, S. C.; missionary sermon in the First Church, Chester, by Pres. Lincoln Hulley of John B. Stetson University, Deland, Fla.; Monday, conference of Baptist ministers of Philadelphia and vicinity. Address by Prof. H. B. Benninghoff, Waseda University, Tokyo; annual meeting of the board of trustees of the seminary; reunion of classes; business meeting of the alumni; annual banquet of the alumni; address by Rev. James M. Stifler, class of '99. Tuesday, May 22, graduation of the class of 1923. The address will be given by Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, president of the N. B. C.

Roger Williams—Seeker

THEY have given him a place in the Hall of Fame among the three-score greatest names in American history. Cast out by the infant Massachusetts colony as a disturber of both church and state—as he undoubtedly was—and compelled to wander in the bitter New England winter shelterless, facing the peril of savage beasts and men until he could find refuge in the barbarous hospitality of Indians whose friendship he had previously won, Roger Williams had the high honor of founding the first state in human history established on the principle of absolute religious liberty. Not only so, but his principle came a century and a half later to prevail as a constructive principle of the American government and thereafter to spread widely throughout the world. He deserves his bronze tablet there beside that of Washington, Lincoln, Jefferson, Hamilton, Franklin.

But it is of still deeper interest to us who are to observe Sunday, April 22, as Denominational Day to remember that it was Roger Williams who established on American soil the first of the Baptist churches which now number nearly sixty thousand, with nearly eight million members. And it was this denomination, when its total membership was but a few tens of thousands, which succeeded a century after the death of Williams in having its principle of absolute religious liberty incorporated into the organic law of the young republic.

But what is most interesting and important of all to us just now is the fact that though Williams was the founder of the first Baptist church in America and though he held throughout his life to its most essential principles, e. g., those of a regenerate membership, believers' baptism, and that of the separation of church and state, as a matter of fact he was a Baptist church member for a very brief time. He became dubious as to the validity of his baptism (which had been administered by an unbaptized man whom Williams then baptized) and also had doubts as to whether it should have been administered by single or by trine immersion; and still more significantly, he found himself at variance with his brethren as to the interpretation of certain prophecies and apocalyptic imagery. So he became "a Seeker" and throughout the remainder of his long and useful life he sought, but failed to find, a church which always and at all points was in harmony with his own views, though he declared that the Baptist churches were nearest to his ideal. There are some great lessons for Baptists of today in that latest attitude of Roger Williams.

He fell foul of two snares which entrap many today. One was that fallacy of the sacramentarian churches, and even of some Baptist churches, that the validity of one's baptism depends upon that of the administrator instead of upon the candidate's relation to Jesus Christ. Another snare, as our Baptist historian Newman points out, is that which so easily besets pious saints in every age of attempting to find precise data and literal fulfilment in current history of the prophecies of Daniel and the imagery of the Revelation.

A still more serious error was the failure to hold in proper equilibrium the principle of fidelity to one's own convictions and that of a recognition of the validity of others' convictions. This involves also a failure to recognize the limits of individualism and the duty of cooperation. The fact is that after our fullest recognition of certain great underlying principles of our faith there are found to be debatable regions quite within the bounds of Baptist belief, e. g., views on the millennial question, varying emphases on free-will and divine sovereignty, and wide variations (within certain well-defined limits) in the details of Baptist practice. The New Testament clearly recognizes such differences in relation to the nascent observance of the Lord's day, the eating of meats and the like, yet the early Christians found a modus vivendi. There are allowable variations of stress and interpretation within the boundaries of Baptist belief. So we have no binding creed in compulsory verbal form, though Baptists have put forth confessions, statements of common belief, rather for the information of outsiders than for any compulsion on the members.

Our principle of soul-liberty protects us and all others from persecution or compulsion as to religious belief; it does not defend the liberty of an individual to remain in a Baptist church if he has abandoned what that church stands for, nor justify the refusal of a pastor or teacher to state frankly what he holds and teaches. But neither does the doctrine of individual liberty justify one in forcing his personal interpretation into every nook and cranny of his brother's belief and insisting on absolute agreement at every disputed point. Intolerance is no Baptist principle.

Brave old Roger Williams managed to keep sweet even toward his persecutors. His hyper-individualism hurt himself chiefly, cutting him off needlessly from the fellowship of his brethren. Let this anniversary of Denominational Day bring Baptists closer to each other through their growing nearness to their Lord.

The Light That Casts No Shadow

ON Monday, April 9, the wife of the editor left on "a trip" for which she said, "I have been planning for many years." For the testing of our faith and for the assurance that the foundations of God stand sure, it was the greatest day of life.

Somehow as these words are addressed to the great multitude of readers of THE BAPTIST I feel that we are a family—a household of faith. In the family circle we can speak freely and intimately. For this reason the editorial "we" will be forgotten.

Twenty-six years ago, when little more than children, we pledged to each other our love and our lives. On that day I thanked God for her, and through the years I have known that she was a gift from him. In the early morning of the day on which she left us in the evening, I told her that the time of her departure was at hand. No words can ever picture the smile that lighted her face. In it was the light that casts no shadow.

If in the possession of their faculties unimpaired, men come to such an hour, they are apt to speak of those things which then seem to be of first importance. During the glorious day—glorious because of the unmistakable signs of God's presence—Mrs. Killam spoke at length of those things the accomplishment of which had been the ruling desire of her life. "I want first of all that Gladys shall be enabled to complete her medical course and go to the foreign field. I want little Norma to have the same right to an education that the other children have had. I want my boys to grow up into good, useful, Christian men. I want my New World Movement pledge paid in full and, if possible, increased." For these and similar things she lived and in the hour of death they still seemed worthy.

A few minutes before going she said, "This is not death. You are watching for the end. This is not the end of my life but the life of which all that has gone before is but the beginning. It is only a new trip. I always loved our trips. I have planned this trip for many years. You are not going with me but I will not get lost for He knows the whole road. It is beautiful to go this way. I am so comfortable and, except for you, so happy." A little later in answer to the question, "How are you?" she said "I am smiling through." And one minute before she closed her eyes she said, "I am on my trip." And when I responded, "God speed and fare thee well," she smiled and was off.

She died as she lived and she lived as good men want to die, and all is well.

Cooperation—It Tastes Like More

THE basis for all Christian unity and cooperation is found in our personal relationship to the Lord Jesus Christ. The dynamic for all cooperative service is found in our love for Jesus Christ with its consequent love for one another.

The needed esprit de corps for true sacrificial service is thereupon found in our faith and trust in the motives of all our fellow-workers, whether they be humble followers or occupying places of leadership.

Overlordship or the attitude of, "I am in a more important place than you" is fatal to the spirit of cooperation because it destroys both dynamic and esprit de corps. In our denomination we have no place for the boss or overlord either in an individual or group capacity, but we do need most tremendously leadership and a true spirit of Christian cooperation.

Cooperation can never be really achieved in wider circles until it has been gained in small groups that naturally are thrown together for various local or world service. Cooperation is primarily the product of lives that personally are in right relations with the Lord Jesus Christ. People who are rightly related to their Lord may not like one another but they must love one another for their Lord's sake. This process must begin in the souls of those who aspire to lead before it can affect those who must follow. We cannot be too emphatic in saying that people who are rightly related to Christ cannot have long continued wrong relations with other Christians and fellow-workers. Misunderstandings, jealousies, personal dislikes or belittlements are, when long continued, wrong and most destructive to Christian dynamic and esprit de corps. Let these things continue for any length of time, and cooperation will be destroyed and failure is in clear sight.

We all have at least one weak spot in our lives, but we must not magnify that weakness in our own life or in the life of another. Instead we must magnify the things that are strong, fine and true. That is the real symbol of brotherly love and all cooperation finds its highest possibilities in that.

Cooperation we need. We need it more than ever in our history. We have had a taste of it and it tastes like "more." We are told that a great explorer stood on the newly discovered banks of a great stream in Africa and thought he had found the main stream but in response to his excited queries they pointed away and said over and over again, "More beyond." We have stood together on the branch river of cooperation but the great main stream is beyond. We hope it is to be in the immediate future of our personal and collective experience.

Out of the way, small soul, egoist, self-seeker and self-important individualist, for you destroy cooperation! Let the rest of us plan, pray and work together in a true spirit of cooperation and in a task big enough to test it to its depths in a brotherly love in the Lord Jesus Christ.

The Easter Ingathering

THE Easter season was a happy, profitable one with Baptist churches all over the country. Reports of many accessions appear in the Church News of this issue. An Ohio church reports 184 new members received on Easter Sunday. A number of churches added more than a hundred to their membership on that day. Having won these new adherents there is now the task and privilege of amalgamating them into the life and work of the church. The Canadian Lutheran speaks pithily on this point:

"It is in the power of a church to do either of two things with those who are drawn to it: to thaw them in or to freeze them out. We say "thaw them in,' that is, by manifestation of a truly Christian love, move them to a more and more complete identification of themselves with the church in its various expressions of life and activity. Love on the part of the people more than the eloquence of the pastor will hold a congregation together, while on the contrary, indifference and coldness and clique spirit on the part of the people, despite all the ability shown in the pulpit and by the pastor, will serve to dissipate any congregation."

Religious Liberty in Roumania

DR. J. H. RUSHBROOKE, Baptist commissioner for Europe, writes: "Stories of persecution continue to reach this country from Roumania. Since the beginning of the present year several instances of interference with Baptists have been reported. Dr. John Clifford has visited the Roumanian minister in London, who has promised to make inquiries.

"Meanwhile a 'constitutional law' has been placed before the Roumanian legislature by the government, and is now under discussion. It is intended to apply to the whole of the Roumanian territory as defined by the peace treaties. The sections referring to religious liberty are amazing in their self-contradictory character. They commence with a declaration of religious freedom in a form to which no objection could be taken, and then proceed to destroy this freedom by a succession of restrictions. A list of Confessions to which liberty of worship is granted includes Greek Orthodox, Roman Catholic, Reformed, Unitarian, and even Jewish and Mohammedan, but there is no mention of Baptists, Adventists, or such groups. All cults are expressly placed under the control and supervision of the state. For the children in schools there is no conscience clause. Propaganda with the object of securing converts is forbidden, and even private persuasion directed to the same end. The chief officials of a Confession can be inducted to office only with the approval of the king on the recommendation of the government. Attacks on "the honor or existence of another cult" are made penal offences punishable by heavy fines; if they occur in a place of worship and in connection with a service the place of worship may either be temporarily or permanently closed. It is needless to point out the countless opportunities of repression which such an enactment places in the hands of the authorities. Religious marriage is made compulsory.

"These are but samples of the proposals contained in a projet de loi which from first to last is in conflict with western conceptions of religious freedom. For the honor of a country which counts as one of our allies it is to be hoped that the Roumanian parliament will refuse its sanction."

"The Returning Tide of Faith"

THE Congregationalist calls attention to an advance review by P. Whitwell Wilson of a book with the above title by Neville S. Talbot published by Revell. "Dr. Talbot is Church of England Bishop of Pretoria and is a son of the venerable Bishop of Winchester. He has been in England recently, and has made his presence notable by his association with Free churchmen, and by his advocacy of Christian unity. A modernist in temper and method, Bishop Talbot's very literal belief in the incarnation, the resurrection and the virgin birth gives added interest to the breadth and intensity of his spiritual interpretation of these matters and their relation to faith and fellowship.

"Mr. Wilson's strong leanings toward fundamentalism make his plea for fellowship significant. Referring to Dr. Talbot as one of a group in the Church of England which has done more than any other to save faith in that communion, Mr. Wilson says:

" 'Most of these men, though not all, I have known personally—Bishop Gore, the late Canon Scott Holland, the late Canon Barnett, the Mastermans and others. I have never been able to appreciate, either the sacerdotal attitude of some of them nor the modern philosophy of others—for all schools are represented in this community of service, of faith, of inquiry, of worship—but I have found in these men a passion for Christ which has often put to shame my own wavering loyalties. In days when men and women are judging one another by labels—he is fundamentalist, and he is liberal, and he is conservative, and he is modernist—I, for one, am content with the whole fellowship of those—whatever they be called by themselves or others—whose lives are radiant with the presence of the Lord they love. Among the apostles, he found room for Thomas as well as Peter. Nor was it Thomas who denied him before men.' "

A Two-Hundred Year "Drive"

IN commenting on an address made by Dr. Edward Howard Griggs before the New England Historic-Genealogical Society, a correspondent to the Boston Transcript says: "Dr. Griggs thinks that Americans are slovenly in their speech and probably he is right; he does not speak hopefully and we are sorry to see it. If we are not mistaken, a week's drive was recently conducted against poor speech and bad grammar. This to us seems more than strikingly moderate. Supposing, gentlemen, we make it a couple of hundred years?"

Liberty and Fraternity among American Baptists

By Henry K. Rowe

We have won liberty—that liberty we must keep. We are achieving fraternity—that fraternity we must not lose.

BAPTIST history in America consists of winning liberty and learning fraternity. In that respect it is like all modern history. In America swiftly, in Europe slowly, men have been winning individual rights, then learning as free men to associate for various cooperative ends. In politics, in industry, in religion they have been learning to sacrifice something of their rights as free men for collective achievement under the spur of a sense of obligation and mutual advantage. The story of the struggle for freedom is full of thrills; the process of socialization is inspiring in its promise for the future.

Attempt to Define Religion

It was the privilege of the Baptists to be pioneers in the struggle for religious liberty. The Old World idea of institutional authority that had been championed by the medieval Catholic church passed to the Protestants of Europe after the Reformation. Each nation that adopted the Protestant faith undertook to regulate religion by state action. That Old World idea was transplanted to America. It was adopted as the rule of colonial government alike in Massachusetts and Virginia. The government of those colonies attempted to define religion and to regulate its observance. In the one case Congregationalism was established, in the other Episcopalianism; but the principle was the same.

Baptists are proud of having championed the idea of the freedom of the individual from external authority in religion. They point to Roger Williams in Massachusetts, to Isaac Backus and his fellows in the Warren Association, and to all the New England Baptists who in season and out of season persisted in their protests against every attempt to enforce uniformity of faith and worship. They like to remember that it was the Baptists who bore the brunt of the struggle against the Anglican Establishment in Virginia at the time of the American Revolution, and won earlier than in Massachusetts the right to think and worship and organize for religious purposes free from all restraint. Roger Williams did not remain a normal Baptist, but he was consistent with his principle of individual independence when he took up his pilgrimage on the lonely road of religious experimentation, and called himself a Seeker.

The struggle for liberty was first destructive. It was necessary to destroy an artificial unity in order to secure freedom. But Williams and his independent friends built a commonwealth in Rhode Island that was a constructive achievement. In spite of the peril of anarchy the leaders of the colony refused to bar out those who were unconventional, even revolutionary, and in time they proved that it was possible for men to be free and yet to learn to live together as citizens in mutual harmony and collective prosperity. They even ventured to admit Quakers, Congregationalists and Episcopalians to a share in the management of the only Baptist college that the colonies possessed. Their boldness and confidence inspired the nation to adopt the principle of voluntaryism in religion. Full credit belongs to our forefathers for their courage in blazing those new paths.

Baptists were the progressives of the Reformation. Save the Quakers, they went farthest in the reaction from Rome. So far did they go that they became extreme individualists. Local churches split apart over questions of doctrine, of forms and days of worship, of organs or of organizations. Some were Calvinists, others Arminians; some were Sabbatarians, others observers of Sunday; some worshipped with instruments and song, others tabooed music in the meeting-house. Some paid their ministers, others expected them to labor for their bread six days in the week, and expected God to fill them with his spirit on the seventh. Some were active in missions and Sunday schools, others opposed them bitterly as works of the devil. It is remarkable that they continued to agree on the basic principles of religious experience, of believers' baptism, and of a voluntary democracy in the local church. Theirs was a vital faith in God and in his revealed Word, and a confidence in the local church to manage its own affairs. Agreeing in those, they could afford to differ in other matters. They had a persisting suspicion of overhead authority, and it took them a long time to appreciate the value of associations and conventions. They were averse to man-made creeds or other institutions that could be used as straitjackets; they had seen too much of those things in the period of the struggle for freedom. They were dyed-in-the-wool individualists.

Liberty and Obligation

But the time came, as it came to the separate colonies, when the freedom of the individual or the local group was insufficient. The free, self-reliant frontiersman had to learn to live with his neighbors. The sovereign colonial state had to accommodate its interests to its fellow colonies. The local churches had to learn to act in association. Freedom was not positive, definite, efficient enough to achieve permanently and broadly. Something of freedom must be sacrificed for greater gain. Individuals therefore surrendered their absolute liberty to civil law. Independent states gave up part of their sovereignty to the federal government. Churches permitted their representatives to speak and act for them in associations and conventions and missionary societies, and made their contributions to the collective efforts of a common denomination. In doing this they did not sacrifice their convictions as to religious reality or acceptable service to God through worship and service, but they recognized that liberty to enjoy their rights carried with it an obligation to sacrifice personal privilege for the sake of the common good.

Thus liberty gave birth to fraternity. Philadelphia Baptists organized the first association of churches, and through the association evangelized the South, and gave the first college of the denomination to the North. The success of the Philadelphia association led to imitation of the experiment in both South and North. In the work of the denomination in the South the association is still the approved agency of the local churches in many ways. In the North the state convention has come to fill a larger place. The prominence of the convention is a significant fact in the present organization of the denomination. It is an indication that fraternity has widened, until Baptists of a whole state cooperate for education, domestic missions and benevolence.

Still more significant are the national conventions of the denomination. In their homogeneity a few Southern states could unite their missionary and educational interests in a single convention in 1845. The far more extended and heterogeneous Northern Baptists at length were able to combine forces in the Northern Baptist Convention in 1907. The process of amalgamation that has gone on since that time, the closer fellowship, not only among regular Baptists but with Free Baptists as well, the increasing generosity and efficiency of the denomination East and West, is eloquent of the fraternity that we are learning as the complement of our individual liberty. If some among us are learning how to work fraternally with other denominations in a still larger comity, it is but a wider application of the same principle of ecclesiastical socialization.

We Baptists have come to a time in our history when we should be able to hold in balance our liberty and our fraternity. With the heritage of freedom that has come to us from the heroic period of our history—freedom to look up into God's face with confidence and to think God's thoughts after him; freedom to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ as his spirit interprets them for us; freedom to keep pace religiously with the American frontier as it marches west or returns upon its track to meet the incoming millions from the Old World; freedom to carry what we believe to be the saving truth of the gospel to the jungles of India or the forests of Africa—mindful of that freedom, we cannot surrender the convictions that have grown out of our experience of God and of men to any set of conventions that have their authority in form or tradition. On the other hand, we must not forget the values that inhere in our common faith, our forms of association, our united endeavor, our whole-souled purpose to bring home to the hearts of men the spiritual essence of an unadulterated faith. We can afford to subordinate our preferences in policies, in activities, if only we can go on from strength to strength in the bond of peace, true to the genius of our denomination and uncompromisingly true in the attitude of our own hearts and minds to the Lord Jesus Christ whose we are and whose work we are commissioned to accomplish in the world. And in our attitude to our fellows we cannot afford to be unbrotherly.

We have won liberty—that liberty we must keep. We are achieving fraternity—that fraternity we must not lose.

An Open Letter to Every Church Member

My Dear Friend:

I am sending you this letter to make you stop and think. We have less than four weeks to finish raising ten million dollars.

Practically one-half has been received. That means five million dollars must be paid in by April 30.

If you and every other Baptist will only do his share the money will be raised.

Now is the time to fulfill our obligations.

We depend upon you.

Yours for victory,

J. Y. Aitchison,

General Director.

"Now Concerning the Collection"

By J. Y. Aitchison, General Director

Up to April 30, 1922, Northern Baptists had obligated themselves by personal pledges to pay to the New World Movement Fund $49,023,958.88.

The grand total receipts during the first two years after the pledges were taken amounted to $22,494,498, or an average of $11,247,249 each year.

During the current fiscal year (May 1, 1922, to April 30, 1923) there is due on pledges $13,449,816.

The total donation receipts during the first ten and a half months of this year amount to $4,749,665.

The expenditures as approved by the Northern Baptist Convention at Indianapolis call for an income for the year from donation sources of $10,000,000. This was considered a reasonable expectation in view of the amount due on pledges.

Budgets of all organizations have been reduced this year 25 per cent as compared with last year.

Financial conditions have greatly improved in nearly every section of the country over what they were a year ago.

Unless well organized effort is put forth to collect the amount due on pledges by April 30 we face the certainty of increased deficits and further reductions in our work. This would spell disaster.

Now is the time for every member to pay.

Those who pledged for but one year are asked to renew their payments again this year.

Those who have not heretofore pledged, and those who are able to increase their previous pledges, are asked to pay their full share of the $10,000,000 required to meet our obligations this year.

Inasmuch as previous to the New World Movement period nearly 75 per cent of the donation receipts for the year were paid during the last two months, we ought to be able to gather in the remainder needed to complete our goal by April 30 of this year.

Swallowing Flukes as a Missionary Task

By C. H. Barlow

Do not begin reading this story unless you have the time to finish it. It is only a letter from a medical missionary to his home church. It is filled with little personal matters, but where can you find a story more stimulating? Dr. C. H. Barlow is a missionary of the First Church, Lansing, Mich. He is stationed at Shaohsing, China. Some years ago he made certain discoveries as to the cause of the terrible physical sufferings of the people of that country. A year or two ago he was set aside to study the life cycle of the fluke and to find the infective agent. What his work will mean for that country we cannot appreciate. This story was printed in the Michigan Baptist Bulletin, and we are glad of the opportunity of giving it a wider reading.

FOR some time I have thought to write to you all, about my work, and how it came out but there have been many things to delay and prevent my writing and I am only now really at it.

You will remember that I came back to my work with some fear as to whether or not I would be able really to work out the problem set me because there were so many difficulties in my way.

On my birthday, Friday, Oct. 13, I found the infective agent and finished the life cycle. It was a long, hard search but one step at a time accomplished, made the final solution possible.

What made the work doubly hard was the fact that the eggs of the flukes did not begin to hatch till the middle of July and I had to do all of my infecting of snails and the main part of my microscopic work during the heat of an unusually severe summer, many nights working all night long, and averaging about eighteen hours a day. Many nights it stayed at 100 degrees all night long. Many days, working in the rice fields, were almost unbearable for a white man, especially for a pale, blond one like me. But I got through the summer without mishap and I got my task done. Now I feel as if I could look the church full in the face and write a letter without any excuses or attempts at vindication. The work was hindered by our not having a house to live in, by sickness, by the advent of our new little daughter, and by other things of less importance but of a hindering nature. Now everything is right again and the work is an accomplished fact with the difficulties in the past, where most difficulties can usually be put if one trusts the Lord hard enough and practically enough

But you will be wanting to know all about the fluke so we will get a good start and be off.

Life History of the Fluke

First the egg hatches a little free-swimming creature called a miracidium because it is covered with cilia or little whip-like hairs with which it swims. Each egg hatches out one of these little forms; but in each dishful of eggs, when once they began to hatch, the water was swarming full of them, making it easy to observe their action toward different snails. Snails act as the intermediate host for the fluke, that is they are the animals in which the fluke passes its extra-human life. I had many varieties of snails, all free from fluke infection, living in an artificial pond just outside of my laboratory. These I took, a few at a time and exposed to the swarming thousands of miracidia in the glass dishes. I observed them under the low power of the microscope and could see which ones they liked and which ones they rejected.

One egg of the fluke is capable of making only one miracidium but one miracidium, after it has become a sporocyst, is capable of making many thousands of adult flukes if all were to live.

As soon as the miracidia find the right variety of snail they swarm about it in dozens and attach themselves to the foot, the mantle and the tentacles of the snail, through which they bore, scraping off the outer skin covered with cilia, as these are of no further use. Once inside of the snail's tissues the miracidia are called sporocysts. Inside of these sporocysts are from twenty-five to thirty little balls called germ balls which begin at once to develop into the next form which is called the mother redia. This mother redia, as soon as it has hatched out of the sporocyst begins to travel forward in the snail's tissues till it comes into the snail's liver. Here it takes up its abode and begins to rear a large family of daughter redia. It is capable of over forty of these daughters. These mothers and daughters look very much alike except that the daughters are invariably larger than the mothers, when they get their growth. Inside of the daughters are from forty to fifty germ-balls each of which hatches out into a cercaria. This cercaria looks different from any of the other forms and it is only capable of forming one adult fluke.

The cercaria has a tail and after it has matured in the liver of the snail it comes out and swims off in the water. This is the second free-swimming form, the first one being the miracidium, as you will remember. This cercaria swims to the plant, curls up in the cyst and waits to be eaten. The cyst is very similar to the cocoon of a moth with its chrysalis inside; it has an outer shell like the cocoon and an inner shell like the chrysalis and the immature fluke is within this inner shell.

The cercaria lives for weeks inside the snail and when it escapes it looks like a little tadpole very much flattened out. Just as soon as it gets in the water it swims to some solid place and fastens on and begins to form its cyst. It forms the outer shell first and then begins to shake off its tail. This is not a slow process like the tadpole's absorbing his tail, but is accomplished very quickly and with an exhibition of tremendous activity. As soon as the tail falls off, the material for forming the inner shell flows out and the inner shell is quickly formed, the whole process of attachment, forming of both shells, and getting rid of the tail is done in less than an hour. These shells are transparent, making it easy to observe the whole process through them. Perhaps you will remember the water-chestnut, or water-caltrop which the eastern peoples eat a good deal. It is on this nut which grows entirely in the water, that the fluke encysts to the danger and damage of man and to the interest of the fluke. People eat this nut raw and peel it with their teeth. I have taken forty cysts off from the skin of one of these nuts and did not get them all then. The outer shell breaks very easily, allowing the inner shell with its agamadistome, or immature fluke, inside to enter the stomach. The shell is made of chitkin which is not dissolved by the stomach juices but is dissolved by the intestinal juices allowing the little fluke to begin life just where he hopes to stay. So you have the outlines of the story.

Each form must be studied separately and many drawings and photographs made through the microscope. That is what took the most time and strength. One will say, "Does it take physical strength, just to study these little forms?" Indeed it does. Long hours at the microscope till one's head whirls from the close, steady looking and the careful accurate measurements in thousandths of an inch. The lifting of a hundred-pound camera up on to the non-vibrating table and taking it off again, sometimes as many as twenty times a day. Tramping through sticky clay mud under a blazing tropical sun for days at a time. Loss of sleep, poor food, and thousands of insect pests, on the little boats, no larger than a big row-boat. Constant washing out of human night-soil till one's nose reeks with it and the distress of taking treatment for the disease itself, experimentally contracted.

An Inconvenience

I have contracted the disease four times in the course of my work and will contract it once more to complete my experiments. One Chinese gentleman asked me if it did not inconvenience me to take the disease and I told him it did. He asked me if it were painful and I told him it was. Then he asked me why I did it and I answered: "I'll let you swallow a hundred cysts." He said: "What would that do to me?" I told him that it would give him the disease. He assured me that he didn't wish to contract it nor could he be induced under any circumstances to take any. Then I answered his question by saying that I hadn't found any person yet who wished to take them so I was forced to take them myself if I wished to have them taken. Fifteen days ago I took a hundred cysts, and I am now enjoying the discomfort of a lot of boarders on my insides where I usually have none. They're having a good time now, but just let them wait till their ninety days is up, and then they will get a dose that will make them sicker to their stomachs than it does me, and that is going some. You see it was necessary to keep the experiment a human one throughout in order to make it conclusive and I couldn't find anybody else to take the beasts.

This study has brought me very close to the country people and I find them very willing to help me all they can and as pleasant and hospitable as any people I have ever met. Many of them have been willing for me to observe them closely and some have even come to the hospital for long periods in order to make that observation more positive and convenient.

As this is a church letter more or less, I will not go into the minute detail of the work, but will let it stand with this simple outline. I have made drawings on tracing paper which is cut to lantern slide size. It can be varnished and applied to glass, making very usable slides to show the different forms of the development of the fluke.

This is a very different letter from any which I had ever thought to have written to the church in Lansing, when I first started off as a missionary and though it is unlike what Paul wrote in any of his epistles, I think he would give it his approval as a missionary letter. One thing I know . . . the prayers of the church in Lansing, their faith in me, my love for them, and their constant heartening interest in the work have been large factors in the solving of the problem. I wish that this letter might be read before the church in appreciation for what you have all meant to me as I carried on out here.

I would have written this sooner but I have not had the use of my eyes for the past ten days and now we are in the midst of moving—back into our own house!!!

It is a great joy to me to be able to write this letter to you all. It will be a wonderful help to the poor people who have, for so long, suffered from this terrible disease, to know the means to take to keep from contracting it.

The New World Movement in British India

By Joseph C. Robbins

THE New World Movement was enthusiastically received by our missionaries in Burma and India. In this great advance program of the denomination overburdened and overworked missionaries saw long-cherished dreams about to be realized and plans for reenforcements in men and equipment fulfilled. "The report of the survey committee," said the Burma conference, "estimates of the probable needs of Burma for the next five years, the Board of Promotion, all these things are truly such good news from a far country as is like cold water to a thirsty soul. We are filled with wonder and admiration at the largeness of the task which the denomination at home is setting itself. We hope that we shall not fail to measure up to the calls of the new situation."

A Marked Advance

While all that was hoped for and expected has not been accomplished and while our missionaries have been greatly disappointed in our failure to provide them with the reenforcements in men and women and the buildings and equipment, so greatly needed to carry on their educational and evangelistic work in face of unprecedented opportunities, nevertheless there has been a marked advance on these fields during the past four years. Forty-five missionary families have been sent to Burma, Assam, South Indian and Bengal-Orissa. Fifteen new missionary residences besides a number of church buildings, schools, and dormitories and other mission buildings have been erected. The picturesque ox-carts, so long associated with the missionary as his only means of travel, have in many instances been replaced by the more up-to-date automobile and today we have at least thirty of these in our missions, greatly multiplying the effectiveness of our work and increasing the efficiency of our missionaries. Three new stations have been opened.

In Assam we have entered the important native state of Manipur in a larger and more effective way of transferring the center of our operations from Ukhrul to Kangpokpi, an ideal location on the main line of communication. We have here two missionary families working among 575 villages of Taungkuhl Nagas, Manipuri and Kuki tribes. Kangpokpi is the center of our work for lepers in Assam and a number of cures of this dreaded disease have been reported. One hundred forty-five Kukis were baptized on one tour of the missionary. On this field we have fourteen churches with a membership of nearly 2,000 of whom 599 were added by baptism last year. Tura, the central station for our Garo work in Assam, where 634 baptisms were reported last year, is for the first time fully manned with four missionary families, in addition to Doctor Mason, who is devoting his entire time to literary work.

Jamshedpur, the great industrial center of Bengal-Orissa, is the youngest of our mission stations. Here we have a flourishing work among the Indian population. Rev. Zo D. Browne, the missionary in charge, writes: "The people of different languages are mingling freely. A committee of Telugu, Oriya, and Bengali leaders are working together to establish an independent self-supporting church. For the people just to see this committee of Telugus, Oriyas, and Bengalis going around together in a fine spirit of friendship has its quite certain influence and is the leading of the spirit of God pure and simple." These people have raised Rs. 225 for the pastor, and beginning next November will pay Rs. 30 each month towards his salary. They have also raised Rs. 60 for home mission work. The young men are attending the church services in large numbers and have organized a young men's Bible class. Funds have been raised for the erection of a church building for the Indian Christians and residences for the missionary and for the Indian pastor. For the first time we have three missionary families at Bhimpore working among the Santal population and this important station in our Bengal-Orissa mission is now fully manned. We have on this field eighty-six village schools giving a Christian education to 2,355 boys and girls, the future leaders of this race.

Many Asking for Baptism

Rev. William M. Young, who in 1901 began work at Kangtung, has opened a new station for Lahus and was at Bana across the border of northern Burma. Already 3,757 baptisms have been reported on this field. "We have at least one hundred Christian villages now to look after," writes Mr. Young. "The last ten days I have received reports from many villages a little farther away where they are asking for baptism and urging us to come as soon as possible."

At Pyinmana, where we have a large Burman work in a field numbering 300,000, we have a church membership of over 700. Because of its location and the fertility of the soil, Pyinmana was chosen as the best station in Burma for the development of agricultural education and we have opened a school here for this purpose. Eighty per cent of the population earn their living by agriculture. Recognizing the importance of developing Christian education along this line the Burma Representative Council of Missions recently took the following action: "Resolved, That it is our conviction that the interests of the Christian community urgently demand the provision of facilities for up-to-date agricultural training and the introduction of modern methods regarding such things as seed-testing, the care and improvement of stock, etc. We very heartily commend the action of the American Baptist mission in opening a school of agriculture at Pyinmana."

Judson College, the one Christian institution for higher learning in all Burma, has since the beginning of the New World Movement for the first time become fully staffed. A strongly Chris-

The Alabaster Box

Matt. 26:6-13. Mark 12:42

By George H. Hudson

She loved her Lord and brought her offering most sweet
And bathed his tired head and weary feet,
Too well she loved to offer trifling gift,
To him who out of sin the race would lift.

To show her love she felt that she must bring
Of her possessions the most precious thing,
And so the alabaster box was broken
And Christ anointed with the costly token.

And then is told to us on pages bright,
The story of the widow and her mite.
How out of penury with service glad
She gave God all the living that she had.

And whereso'ere in all the world
The gospel has been preached
These stories of a woman's love
And sacrifice have reached.

If Christians in these modern days would give,
As did these women that the world might live,
The glorious gospel soon the world would fill,
And life and light would all the nations thrill.

tian atmosphere permeates the life of the college, 69 per cent of its student body being Christians. "It is our purpose," says President Howard, "to present to these men and women the message of Christ in the word and deed and in the spirit of the whole college life." Each member of the faculty is related to a particular group of students with whom he comes into intimate contact as their friendly adviser. A group of Buddhist students meets voluntarily once a week with a member of the faculty and a number are manifesting an interest in Christianity. The enrolment this year was 195, an increase of 41 per cent over the previous year. "One important factor in bringing about this large enrolment," writes President Howard, "is doubtless the generous reform scheme for the government of Burma which holds our prospects for a larger participation on the part of the people in the government of their country and is an incentive to secure a college education. There is no doubt but that Burma is the best prepared of all the provinces for democracy. Judson College is bound to play a large part in the working out of these reforms." As one of the two constituent colleges of the new Rangoon University, Judson College faces new and enlarged opportunities for promoting the ideals and spirit of Jesus Christ in the intellectual development of this great province numbering thirteen millions.

Evangelistic Work

Our Kachin mission stations are now fully manned and in addition we have Dr. Ola L. Hanson giving his entire time to the preparation and production of Christian literature for the Kachin people. A strong evangelistic movement is now taking place among these hardy war-like tribes and large numbers will be received into the churches this year. The Kachin mission should be entirely self-supporting within this decade. We have intensified our evangelistic and educational work among the natives from India who have migrated to the fertile plains of Burma in numbers already totaling more than a million. In Rangoon and Moulmein we have erected brick school buildings. The former school has an enrolment of 800 boys and girls and the latter 350. Work for Indians is also carried on in other stations, extending from Myitkyina on the Chinese border to Tavoy on the far South. There is a great need for more missionaries for the Indians in Burma. More than half the 300,000 in Rangoon, the capital and largest city, are Indians. A school for our missionaries' children has been opened at Taunggyi and is in charge of a missionary sent out for this purpose. The school, numbering sixteen, is taxed to its capacity and land has been obtained from the government for the erection of a building which will be undertaken as soon as funds are available. The Mission Press at Rangoon has been greatly strengthened by recent additions to its staff. This institution, employing 300 people who speak fifteen different languages, is one of the largest and most modern printing plants in the Orient and constitutes one of Rangoon's leading business establishments. During the last year the Press printed 8,000 New Testament portions in Burmese, 2,725 entire Bibles in Sgaw Karen in three editions, 2,000 Pwo Karen New Testaments, 10,000 gospels in Shan, 20,000 Old Testament portions in Talain, besides issuing every month 22,000 International Sunday School Lesson Helps in three languages.

After several years of financial cooperation with Madras Christian College we are now represented on the faculty of this institution which occupies such an important place in the life of the Indian Church. Dr. A. S. Woodburne writes: "The answers I have just received from members of the senior class in the Christmas examination in scripture make me feel that our work in the college as missionaries is amply and abundantly repaid. I have the senior B. A. class in scripture three times weekly and it has been a revelation to me as to the way in which the young manhood of India is turning to Jesus for example and inspiration. I am more than ever convinced that Madras Christian College is one of the first agencies in the land in bringing about the consummation of our missionary endeavor, the Christianizing of India." In Nellore, where we formerly had only one man, we now have a missionary each for the school and evangelistic work. Rev. Wheeler Boggess as general evangelist of the Telugu mission is giving his entire time to promoting the evangelistic and spiritual life of this great mission field. Last year he delivered 460 sermons in Telugu to 32,000 people. Among those who heard Mr. Boggess were approximately 21,000 Telugu Christians and 11,000 Hindus and Mohammedans.

These hopeful achievements thus far during the New World Movement present a situation that calls for the immediate strengthening of our work and supplying at once some of those things in the survey not yet provided for. We must have $20,000 for our evangelistic and educational work among the Indians of Burma. We must secure the funds to send out a missionary qualified to direct our building work in this our oldest and largest mission field. In South India our greatest need is for spirit filled men and women to fill the gaps in our missionary ranks and provide for a number of stations now unoccupied. In Bengal-Orissa we need $15,000 for the boys' high school at Bhimpore, and $10,000 for missionary residences at Bhudrak and Kharagpur. In Assam we need $7,500 for a hostel for Jorhat Bible School, money for two residences costing $4,000 each, a physician for the Jorhat hospital and a missionary for the Mikira.

There has been a marked improvement during the past year in the economic and political condition of India. Lord Winterton, under secretary for India, in a recent address in London said: "The promises that have been made to India are being surely and steadily fulfilled. There have been unquestionably distinct improvements in the general and political situation in India during the last year and the situation today is far better than it was a year ago. This improvement has been greatly facilitated by two good harvests. The sober good sense of the people in India is reasserting itself in the desire for constitutional methods."

More Open and Responsive

India and Burma are more open and more responsive today than they have ever been since the days of Carey and Judson. The success of a mission is measured in part, at least, by the extent to which self-supporting churches have been established and the control of the work given into the hands of the indigenous people. The great incoming tides of intellectual awakening and national consciousness are resulting in an earnest desire on the part of our Baptist Christians to participate in a large and more representative way in the work of our Baptist missions on these four fields. In each of our missions there is a healthy determination to accept a larger measure of independence and initiative and to assist in a larger way in their own support. This is the hour of all hours to press our work in Burma, Assam, Bengal-Orissa, and South India. The basic Baptist doctrine of religious liberty upholding the right to independence in religious thought and action is a welcome message to a people striving for political freedom and the development of national consciousness. Northern Baptists already have a prominent place in the life of this great Empire. More than 26 per cent of all of Protestant Christians in India and Burma are Baptists. In the province of Burma Baptists number five out of every eight Christians. In the face of unprecedented opportunities everywhere abounding we must not fail to meet the challenge of this new day in India and Burma for which Baptists have prayed and labored since the days of Judson.

"A new governor, keenly interested in education, a new council, and a new year with great prospects are before Burma," says Dr. J. E. Cummings. "It is for us Baptists who believe in soul liberty, in true democracy, to keep the faith and to stand shoulder to shoulder for advance into the new era confident that we have in our Lord and in his gospel and in the church order, which we have learned from the New Testament, the key to all successful democratic government which can be safely based only upon intelligent people who fear God and love their fellowmen."

NO human hand has yet reached up to take as much as the pierced hand is reaching down to give. God is always reaching down. His hand is fuller than it will hold. His bother is to get people to get in touch and take as much as he is reaching down to give.

—S. D. Gordon.

IT is a joyful thing to have a purpose so big and so absorbing that it nearly fills the whole horizon of our thoughts. The bored and drooping people are not those whose desires and purposes are great and are pursued with a great persistence. They are the listless, the surrendering, the Laodiceans of the world. To have a purpose and pursue it is to be like a running stream that laughs and sings because it is going somewhere. To be listless and purposeless is to be like a standing pool.—Boston Transcript.

The Gist of the Financial Situation

RESTATED BY J. Y. AITCHISON, GENERAL DIRECTOR

OF the 7,853 churches (not including foreign speaking which support their own conferences) 85 per cent contributed last year to the New World Movement.

This is a larger number of churches than had a part in the support of our work previous to the New World Movement.

These 6,712 churches (85 per cent) contain 1,088,705 members, while the remaining 15 per cent, or 1,141 churches, have a total membership of 51,235.

The subscriptions made during the first year of the movement by over 1,800 churches, including all types, represent a standard of giving which, had it been reached by all churches from the first, would have resulted in subscriptions for over one hundred million dollars.

Over 3,700 churches (in addition to the 1,800) have increased their contributions materially during the last three years.

This leaves about 1,200 churches which continue to support the work on about the same basis as formerly.

Northern Baptists have obligated themselves by personal subscriptions to pay $49,023,958.88 during the five-year period ending Apr. 30, 1924.

By Apr. 30 of the current year there is due on pledges $13,449,816.

On the basis of the outstanding subscriptions and the record of giving for the last two years the expectancy this year, namely, $10,000,000 of distributable funds, is reasonable and conservative.

All budgets have been reduced by 25 per cent below what they were last year. Failure therefore to secure the funds needed would result in increasing the deficits and hence necessitate further reductions in the work.

The receipt of $10,000,000 of distributable funds this year and a like amount next year, in addition to the income during the two years from invested funds, from matured annuities and legacies and from special designated gifts, is absolutely necessary to enable all organizations to finance their work this year and next on the present reduced basis, and comé to the end of the five-year period with all debts paid.

The total donation receipts during the first ten months of this year aggregate $4,749,665.

There are five outstanding reasons why we should confidently expect to reach the goal by Apr. 30:

1. The funds needed are covered by personal subscriptions.
2. In former years about 75 per cent of the entire contributions was received during the last six weeks of the fiscal year. During the closing six weeks this year the collection of 60 per cent will give us the $10,000,000 needed.
3. New members and others who have not pledged are abundantly able to make up any possible shrinkage in the payment of the amount due on pledges from those who may not be able to pay.
4. The income during the last six weeks will be greatly increased by payments on the part of those who have made large subscriptions.
5. Financial conditions have greatly improved in nearly every section of the country over what they were a year ago.

Our S. O. S. Call

Twenty-five per cent of our churches, representing both city and rural groups, have contributed at least 70 per cent of the entire amount secured during the last two years.

Through faith, courage and heroic leadership there is yet time for the other 75 per cent of our churches to bring their giving up to the standard of the advance lines.

When this is done

1. The 25 per cent cut can be restored.
2. Our work will advance again along all lines.
3. Our workers in all fields will take up their tasks again with renewed faith and courage.

What to Do By April 30

1. Broadcast the information contained in "On the March." All members should know of the achievements of the first three years.
2. Furnish each member a statement indicating the amount subscribed, the amount paid and the amount due, to Apr. 30.
3. Observe Pay-up Sunday not later than Apr. 22.
4. After Pay-up Sunday, personally canvass all members who have not paid their full share.
5. Ask those who have not been contributing on the higher scale of giving reached by hundreds of our churches to do their full share NOW.
6. Local church treasurers should make final remittances by the evening of Apr. 30.

It is time for every member to pay his full part.

Filling up the Gap

BY J. H. JOWETT

"Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see; the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them."—Matthew 11:4.

TO me the startling thing in this record of our Saviour's work is this, that in Christ everybody found just the thing that was missing. The blind found his sight, and deaf found his hearing, the leper found his purity, and lame men found buoyancy and strength. And these broken folk, with their lives full of gaps and aching necessities, found the gaps filled up in the fullness of the Lord. His completeness fitted into their incompleteness. Yes, he met them at the gap, and their deep want and longing were fulfilled. And there was no fuss about it, and no strain. And there was no misinterpreting of their necessity, no confusion of the issues. Every separate lack found its own fulfilment, just as every empty bay and cove along the shore is filled to the brim by the flowing fullness of the infinite sea. "We are complete in him."

And this, the Master says, is to be the witness of his messiahship to thee and me and all men. "Go and tell John what things ye do see and hear." And the witness was just this, that in Christ all men found their missing piece, and that in him life attained its full supply and satisfaction. He had bread for its deepest hungers. He had water for its fiercest thirsts. He had healing for all its wounds, even though it were the terrible wound of a broken heart. All our Master's words about his purpose in the world are great primal words, reaching far behind all artificial appetite and secondary desire to the fundamental things of the soul. He describes his mission in such words as bread, water, breath, light. These are not mere superfluities; they are necessities. They are the great primal wants and hungers in human life. And he comes among us to fit his fullness to the individual lack. His ministry is not indiscriminate. It discerns and separates the individual need. He does not deal with us as a flock, but as separate members of the flock. "I know my sheep." He does not deal with humanity but with men. And so there is an exquisite appropriateness in all his ministries of grace. There are no misfits. The infinite resources are directed by the infinite wisdom. The same wonderful grace seeks out everybody's necessity, giving sight to the blind, and hearing to the deaf, and purity to the leper, and movement and exhilarancy to that which is lame. Our scriptures speak of God's "manifold" grace, and it is a word which means many-coloured, and it suggests a thousand different ministries as varied as the wide fellowship of colors in earth and sky and sea.

In thus completing every life the Saviour does three things. First of all he redeems every life from its secret bondage. He goes deep down into that mysterious realm whose borders we are now exploring, that hinterland of the soul where the past has gathered its harvest for good or ill. He goes into that region, and he seeks out old guilt that still retains its tyranny. It has passed out of our memory, but it has not passed out of our life. It not only binds, it defiles. It is like some secret polution in the current of our life. The Saviour seeks it out and removes it.

In him we have the forgiveness of our sins. "He breaks the power of cancelled sin; he sets the prisoner free." But he deals not only with everybody's ancient guilt, but he deals also with the sin of today, the failure of this morning, the new scar upon the face of the soul, the new derangement, the new paralysis, He does not cast us away when our disloyalty has overthrown us. He seeks us in our defeat and humiliation, and he says to us, "Lovest thou me?" And if we can tell him that in spite of everything our love has not grown cold—"Thou knowest all things, thou knowest that I love thee"—he can find an entry into the devastated heart, and he will begin to turn out the beast and transform the wilderness into the garden of the Lord. Yes, the first thing the Lord seeks to do in everybody's life is to set everybody free from their sin. And he never muddles the issues. He leads each one out of his bonds.

And the second thing the Saviour does in bringing release is to lead every life into its native air. Before he comes to us we have been breathing a destructive spiritual atmosphere, and our nobler powers have shrunk and sickened like plants in an air that is laden with poisonous gas. The Lord changes the climate of the soul. "He breathed upon them and said, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." And a heavenly air is breathed around and godlike things begin to grow, and our powers exult in the inspiration. And the wonder of the divine ministry is this—that as we move about we carry our climate with us. We are in the world, and yet not of it! And every one develops according to his own image in the mind of God, and every one is distinctive while all share a common inspiration.

And thus the Saviour's work is very thorough. He does not merely fill up the gap and leave it. He perfects that which he hath begun. His ministry is not a pick-me-up, it is the gift of eternal life. "Having loved his own he loves them unto the end."—British Weekly.

A Pastoral Review

By Edward L. Blackstone

> LARGE is the life that flows for others' sakes, > Expends its best, its noblest effort makes;
> Devotion rounds the man and makes him whole;
> Love is the measure of the human soul.
> —James Buckham.

MY wife and I have been recalling the ten pastors our church has had in the forty-three years since we entered its membership. The church in the next town to the north has had only two ministers in all that time and it is the strongest church in all these parts.

The first man came to our church the fall after we were baptized. He was the homliest man who ever stepped off the train at the Junction, but was fascinating to everybody. The children liked him, and he used to go tramping with the boys one Saturday and with the girls the next and he was a real child himself. He had a contagious laugh and a smile that just drove the blues away. He was a great pastor. He went everywhere and he prayed in every home wherever he went. He was gentleness itself and led more people to Christ in the eight years he was with us than any other leader we have ever had. He doubled our church and I think would have been with us today if he lived. We will never forget the day he died after rescuing a drunken man, who was a stranger to us all. He was returning home from a funeral in the Narrows and saw a man fall from the bridge. Our pastor leaped after him and brought him to the bank, but in doing so he over-exerted himself and died that evening while speaking on heaven at our prayer meeting.

Sermons for Every One

He was unmarried and lived with his sister. She was a college woman and for two years we had her read to us her brother's sermons over again. We never got tired of those sermons. At last she went as a missionary to the Indians and the spiritual feast ended. The noble man left many manuscript sermons and they were sold to his parishioners at one dollar each and the money divided evenly between home and foreign missions. We have two of those sermons and have read them so many times that we can almost say them by heart. This man went in and out before us as an apostle. He always preached without notes, but he wrote every word. And such sermons—profound, but simple. The children were able to get the thought and yet the college graduates, of whom we have always had from two to seven in our congregation, said he was a wonder.

He took plenty of time to think. He had a small library but a good one, and he knew his subjects well. His illustrations were not drawn from Greek and Roman mythologies, or from medieval history. No sir, not he. That man had a telescope his uncle left him and a microscope we all gave him, and these furnished him his leading word pictures. It seemed as if he knew and saw everything with eyes such as none of us had. He knew interesting things about birds, ants, wasps, bees, fish and wild animals, horses, dogs, cats, sheep, the tides, the winds, the rocks and rivers and the clouds, and we all were amazed to hear the spiritual lessons he drew from them in the course of the years.

We recall now how tender and earnest he was in prayer and how gentle when any one did wrong. The gossiping almost died out in our town after he preached a sermon on "the fire the tongue ignites." How he did lay down the truth to us! We have never seen another like him. He was not a great man, but he made Christ real to us and he preached the good news of a free salvation in such a way that we all wanted to be good Christians no matter what else was forgotten. He was really one of us—and we knew his heart was in his work. I see no reason why any man might not be the same kind of a minister of Jesus Christ.

Our gifts to all our denominational missionary societies and our convention never before or since have been so large. He talked faithfully to us about making our wills for home and foreign missions and for the convention and our seminary, and we did it too. We made our wills at that time and have never changed them. He was a good minister of Christ.

The minister who followed our dear friend stayed just two years and he was a bull in a china shop. I never saw his equal. He had four sermons and with some changes he repeated these under various texts and with new stories. He pounded our Bible out of its cover and he was irreverent in other ways. He was a very light weight, but dreadfully dramatic. At times he shouted at the top of his voice and then would fall into a whisper. No one liked him; and when it was found he was smoking on the sly and that he also chewed tobacco, even when he was preaching, the committee told him he must go, and he left in a hurry. The bills he left behind we paid and proposed to be more careful next time. Yet this man's wife was an angel and they had two of the sweetest little girls you ever saw. We pitied them—with such a rattle-brained husband and father. He went down South. The climate, or something there, seemed to change him completely. He is now said to be a very subdued and sane preacher and is in a large and excellent church. Well, we had our share in training him, but some of us nearly went crazy while he was prancing all over our pulpit platform.

After he went we had a year in which an aged retired pastor came among us to help us get our balance again. He did it, and then went west to live with his daughter. We then had a man come about whom we knew nothing good or bad, but he had heard our pulpit was open and came to visit us. It so happened that the Saturday he arrived we were disappointed in our supply for the next day, and he, being a Baptist minister, offered to preach. His eloquence was wonderful and his voice was soft as velvet. Some of us wanted to look up his record, but the majority said it was risky to lose a day's time as the preacher had his ticket bought for Chicago and was to leave the next morning on the early train. That was an evil day for our church. He was called with twelve of our leading members voting against him. I can't tell the story of those four years, but it was a time of fire and flood. He didn't believe anything that one could call Christian, and he split us all to pieces. The only thing that saved the day was when he came to church one Sunday under the influence of morphine and that experience saved the church from threatened extinction. His friends threw up their hands, and after he went things settled down.

The next man was a fine preacher but no pastor. He preached the meeting house full and then empty in the course of three years. His successor was just the opposite; a poorer preacher, but a tender, loving pastor. He got the church back again into right ways and was with us seven years.

An Eye on the Main Chance

Our last pastor was a good man but neutral in his teaching, a sort of meandering brother with his ear to the ground. He had his eye always on the main chance and was looking out for number one. He was what Deacon Dakone calls an "apportunist." He agreed with everybody and had as few convictions as a goat, but it was wonderful what an appetite he had for the material things of life.

The pastor we had four years before our last one came was a good man with high intentions, but his wife upset him completely. She wouldn't let him have family prayers or a blessing at the table. She was what you call a worldly soul, fond of dances and led them in the hall over the store. At last he, to be popular, got to smoking and playing cards and became intimate with men of no reputation. Then he went away for business ventures, got the church to give up the prayer meeting because so few came and just preached Sundays, and the thinnest sermons you ever heard. He made no calls and when strangers came to town, he never went near to welcome them.

At last he left because his business failed and hardly any one went to church. We all breathed easier when we heard the train whistle that took him and his wife away. Too bad for a man to do like that, isn't it? What are we coming to? We are searching for a minister again and it's a job I don't like. Some want a young man, but the most of us want a man of experience, who isn't an extremist, but an all-round, faithful man, well-trained, manly. And we don't care how old he is if he has a good brand of common sense and can preach the gospel clearly and will be a faithful pastor. Talk about the ministers reaching the dead line—our churches are the ones in danger of the dead line and some of them I fear don't see it because they have eyes that see not.

Matters That Matter in Japan

By William Axling

The Political Outlook.

THE year 1922 marked a milestone in Japan's political history. She lived up not only to the letter but to the spirit of the agreements into which she entered at the Washington Conference. She recalled her soldiers from Hankow, restored Shantung to China, and withdrew her troops from Siberia. She closed the postoffices which for many years she had maintained on Chinese soil. Her whole Chinese policy has undergone a change for the better. Ever since the notorious "twenty-one demands" were made on China, they have been subject to attack from various quarters and for various reasons both within and without Japan. It remained however for Mr. Tokugawa, (ex-minister of home affairs, and a leader of such caliber that he looms large among men slated as possibilities for the premiership), to attack them on the floor of the House of Representatives charging that they encroached on the sovereignty of China. This bold attack made by a man of his type and standing caused a sensation and an uproar in parliament. The incident is pregnant with meaning in that it shows that the conscience of the nation is reasserting itself in high places.

At home she has gone farther than almost any nation in preparing to scrap battleships and in reducing the personnel of her navy both as to men and officers. Of her own accord she has carried the limitation of armament into her army and has reduced its personnel by 60,400 men and officers and cut the army budget by 21,000,000 yen. In a word, Japan has gone beyond the hopes of her most ardent friends in reversing her policies and falling in line with the program adopted at Washington. She has also gone farther than any other nation in her effort to eradicate militaristic ideas and ideals. This she has done by carrying out a revision of the textbooks in the lower schools, substituting the ideas of peace and world brotherhood for those of war and ultra-nationalism. Here she has thrown down a challenge to the other nations of the world to deal in a fundamental way with the evils of militarism.

The Religious Outlook.

There are evidences that religion has come to a new day in Japan. It is getting an ever-widening place in the thinking and yearning of the people. There are signs that a great heart hunger is abroad in the land. Although they say little about it, multitudes are conscious of a great lack in their inner lives. At the present time there is a perfect rage in the journalistic world for featuring religious articles. Every magazine and newspaper is taking this new religious interest at its high tide and is endeavoring to meet this new demand by dealing with religions old and new, near-religions, as well as fads and fakes. The contents of many of these articles are disappointing, yet they throb with a passion characteristic only of sincere seekers after the truth.

The special evangelistic campaign carried out by the Baptist Forward Movement brought out the significant fact that a generation of young people has come upon the scene upon whom the pagan faiths have little or no hold. Most of the converts that came into our churches through this campaign were young people who knew little or nothing about Buddhism and Shintoism. This is of course a great loss to the sum total of the nation's spiritual experience and spiritual life, and confronts the new generation with a great danger. The old sanctions and restraints have broken down and the young people of Japan are adrift religiously. This situation, however, makes Christian work less difficult than was the case when Christianity had first to tear down what was false in the old before it could do any constructive building of its own. It was evident in this campaign that those who made the decision for Christ found the break with the past less violent than was the case in the old days or is the case even today with the older people who accept the Christian faith.

The time was when Buddhism and Shintoism felt that it was their mission to fight Christianity. So great has been the change in the situation that today they find themselves fighting for a place in the nation's life. One of the most outstanding problems that is puzzling those of Japan's leaders who are deeply concerned about the moral and spiritual welfare of the people is the fact that the pagan temple and the pagan priest no longer exercise the authority and the control which they have for centuries in the community life throughout the empire. With these indigenous faiths it is no longer a question whether they are going to be able to keep Christianity from spreading and securing a foothold in Japan, but the burning question with them today is, whether they themselves are going to be able to keep a place in the heart and life of the people of this nation.

Faced with this unparalleled opportunity and sensing anew their responsibility, the Christian forces in Japan are feeling the urge toward closer unity in organization and greater cooperation in action. This is taking concrete form in the building of a National Christian Council for Japan. Through this council all the constituent parts of the Christian movement in this empire will be welded into one mighty force and be enabled to present a united front in its warfare and speak with a united voice on moral and national and international questions.

The Baptist Outlook.

In spite of paralyzing cuts and reduced budgets, Japan Baptists are on the move. The generous gift of $23,000 from the First Baptist Church of Detroit for the Mabie Memorial School for Boys at Yokohama, will make possible the erection of an additional wing to the splendid main building of that institution. This is a great gift from a great church for a great purpose and comes at a most opportune time. The Mabie Memorial School is making a unique record. Since its opening four years ago, 1,230 young men have applied for entrance. Of these it has been possible to enter only 518. The present attendance is 427. This new wing will lengthen the reach of its service by a third and enable it to enroll 140 of the 350 new applicants who are seeking entrance this spring. This institution with its growing equipment, efficient faculty of twenty-eight members and rapidly expanding student body, is putting the Baptists on the educational map of Japan.

Our girls' schools are also moving forward. The Himeji School has outgrown its present quarters and will shortly remove to a splendid new site where it will put on a program of expansion. The Sendai School, through the generosity of Mrs. E. M. White, is about to erect a new dormitory in order to accommodate its increasing student constituency. The Osaka Women's Bible Training School has just finished a building to be used as a Christian community center, and through this will be enabled to dig itself deep down into the life of its neighborhood.

During the past year substantial and up-to-date churches with provisions for kindergarten and other features of community work have been erected in Tokyo, Shiogama and the Inland Sea. Moreover the Yokohama church — our oldest Baptist organization in Japan, is just starting the erection of a building which will be a memorial to such early missionary leaders in this empire as Doctors Brown, Bennett, Dearing and Mrs. Carpenter.

Some of the ugly gaps on the far-flung evangelistic front have been filled with new reinforcements. Capt. and Mrs. James F. Laughton are at the helm on the "Gospel Ship," and the work in the "Sea Within the Straits" is again being pushed. Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Thompson are located in Kyoto, the ancient capital and this field which was without a Baptist missionary for ten years is feeling the throb of new life. Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Derwacter are rebuilding the line on the long-neglected Himeji field. The prospects are good that the undermanned fields in northern Japan will be reinforced in the near future. While these signs of advance hearten us, we look with growing concern upon fields still unmanned, institutions undermanned, and our tragically curtailed program of work. The call to advance comes clear and clarion like. How long, oh, how long, shall we be compelled to keep hanging on to the brakes?

Another's Burden

"MY burden is too heavy, Lord,"
I tremblingly said.
"I can no further carry it!"
And tears I shed.

Then came a sudden cry for help
From one sore pressed;
I ran to seek him, gladly gave Him of my best.

Then thought I of my heavy burden—
But, lo, 'twas gone!
The gloom and doubt had vanished quite
And love's light shone.

When we another's burden lift
Or try to bear,
Love's gentle hand removeth swift
Our load of care.

LESSONS FROM THE PSALMS. (5) A PRAYER PSALM.
(CONSECRATION MEETING)
Psalm 86: 1-17.

"O Lord our God, grant us grace to desire thee with our whole heart; that so desiring we may seek and find thee; and so finding thee may love thee; and loving thee, may hate those sins from which thou hast redeemed us."—Anselm.

Materials.

"The Meaning of Prayer" by Fosdick, price $1.25; "The Stewardship of Prayer" by Taylor, free. Order from the General Board of Promotion, 275 Fifth Avenue, New York; 125 North Wabash Avenue, Chicago; 313 West Third Street, Los Angeles, Calif.

Samuel Johnson once was asked what the strongest argument for prayer was, and he replied, "Sir, there is no argument for prayer." One need only read Johnson's own petitions to see that he did not mean by this to declare prayer irrational; he meant to stress the fact that praying is first of all a native tendency. It is a practice like breathing or eating in this respect, that men engage in it because they are human, and afterward argue about it as best they can. As Carlyle stated it in a letter to a friend; "Prayer is and remains the native and deepest impulse of the soul of man."

When any one undertakes to study the meaning and to cultivate the habit of prayer, it is well for him to understand from the beginning that he is dealing with a natural function of his life and not with an artificial addition. Raising palm trees in Greenland would be an unnatural proceeding. They never were intended to grow there, and never can grow there, save under stress of artificial forcing. The culture of prayer would be just as strained a procedure, were it not true that the tendency to pray is native to us, that prayer is indigenous in us, that we do pray, one way or another, even though fitfully and without effect, and that men always have prayed and always will pray. The definition of a man as a "praying animal," while not comprehensive, is certainly correct. The culture of prayer, therefore, is not importing an alien, but is training a native citizen of the soul. Prof. William James of Harvard was thinking of this when he wrote: "We hear in these days of scientific enlightenment a great deal of discussion about the efficacy of prayer; But in all this very little is said of the reason why we do pray . . . The reason why we do pray is simply that we cannot help praying."

Our justification for calling prayer natural may be found in part, in the universality of it. In some form or other, it is found everywhere, in all ages and among all peoples. The most discouraging circumstances do not crush it, and theories of the universe directly antagonistic do not prevent it. Buddhism, a religion theoretically without a God, ought logically to exclude prayer; but in countries where Buddhism is dominant, prayer is present. Confucius, a good deal of an agnostic, urged his disciples not to have much to do with the gods; and today Confucius is himself a god and millions worship him. Before the tendency to pray all barriers go down.—From "The Meaning of Prayer" by Fosdick.

Important Notice.

The appeal for this extension work should in no way interfere, but rather re-enforce the general denominational plans. Young people who have made pledges to the New World Movement should see to it that payments are made. The fiscal year of Northern Baptists closes April 30. The financial returns so far are not very encouraging. Make some special effort in your society along the line of payment of pledges already made, and secure new ones. The missionaries on the home and foreign fields are our missionaries. Many of them decided for Christian service in the societies of other days. Let's stand by them now. Do all in your power to make April 22, pay-up Sunday, a red-letter day in your church. We must prove ourselves worthy of the confidence the denomination has placed in us.

Railroad Rates, Boston Convention

A round-trip fare of one and one-half times the adult one-way fare from starting point to place of meeting has been granted by two passenger associations as noted below:

New England Passenger Association.

This association covers:

States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Connecticut, and stations in New York on lines of the Boston and Albany, Boston and Maine, and New York, New Haven and Hartford railroads.

Going tickets will be sold from the territory mentioned from June 30 to July 6, inclusive.

Final return limit, to reach original starting point by continuous passage, not later than July 13, 1923.

Trunk Line Association.

This association covers:

New York state (east and including Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Suspension Bridge and Salamanca) New Jersey, Pennsylvania (east of and including Erie, Oil City and Pittsburgh) Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia and West Virginia (east of and including Wheeling, Parkersburg, Kenova, Orange and Norfolk.)

Tickets will be sold from the above mentioned territory from June 30 to July 6 and will be validated at Boston by agents at the regular ticket offices of the lines over which tickets read into Boston, Mass., on any date after arrival, but must be used returning to reach original starting point not later than midnight of July 13.

Central Passenger Association.

Rates have also been granted for this association which covers a large area.

The Chimney Corner

Baptist Boys and Girls Take Pen in Hand

THIS writing of poetry is a solemn business, and when the Chimney Corner editor announced a poetry contest based on the "Crusade Up Dollar Hill" she knew what it was going to mean to her Young Reserves: a very anxious searching of the dictionary for words that rhyme, and a very critical scanning of the Crusader picture which you may have seen in THE BAPTIST several weeks ago—ten plumed knights on gallant steeds, climbing up the curves of a dollar sign. Each knight carries a banner on which are listed the various types of mission work a dollar helps to maintain. Based on this list of definite Baptist tasks our boys and girls have written the following poems. They are put on this page for your enjoyment, not because they are great poetry, but because they indicate what a definite part in The New World Movement our Baptist children are already taking. If you are challenged now and again by the implied censure in some of the rhymes, rejoice that somebody is taking "our" job so seriously and eagerly and enthusiastically, wondering why we grown-ups are not cooperating with the same zeal!

Contestants over fifteen are not eligible for prizes, therefore the judges have awarded the first girl's prize to Helen M. Goodwin of Northwood, N. H., and a second girl's prize to Mary Raycroft of Chillicothe, Ill.; the first boy's prize goes to Malcolm MacQueen of Rochester, N. Y., and a second boy's prize goes to T. Emerson Hough of Brooklyn, N. Y.

How I Earned My Dollar Going Up Dollar Hill

YES, I'll tell you what I did
To earn my little dimes,
I turned the wheels within my head
To grinding out some rhymes.

So I writ in rhyme the things I thot
And sold them to the ones who bot,
And every time I writ a rhyme
I charged the purchaser a dime.

Ten rhymes I writ and all I sold
And got the money, not in gold—
But here they are—ten silver dimes,
For all of which I sold my rhymes.

And yet the wheels kept grinding, grinding,
And still more rhymes kept finding, finding;
For every rhyme a dime I'd "collar"
Till here it is, another dollar.

One may be, and none may know it,
A heaven-born and gifted poet;
For poetry's eternal goal
Is not in words, but in the soul.
—J. A. Smith, Ogden, Utah.

The Crusaders Will Help

OVER across the sea
There's work for you and me;
Many a child lies suffering,
And the Crusaders will help.

Of hospitals they've only a few,
And they're in need of doctors, too,
If we knew how dimes count up
Wouldn't every Crusader help?

Maybe for a little girl or boy
Our money would buy a toy;
Just think of their happiness
If all the Crusaders would help.
—Luella Jackson, 10 years,
De Kalb, Ill.

A Modern Crusade

THESE knights have set forth on a modern crusade
To give all the heathen a needed first aid,
But the children of Baptists should surely do more
To send Christianity the whole world o'er.

San Francisco, Cal.

India's Needs

AS you learn of India's needs
How can you refuse to give
That she may know your Saviour
And for him learn to live?

She is full of superstition,
And Ignorance, and doubt.
Why not tell her of Jesus
And drive these evils out?

Jesus gave us the Golden Rule
To live by every day.
Let us put it into practice
And tell India of the "Way."

We can do it with our dimes,
Each one doing his share,
And filling his container
To send the gospel there.

Don't let Miss Noble think
A single knight would shirk.
If your container isn't full
Just hustle and get to work.

Last year we did so well—
We must not fall behind.
If we but do our best
True happiness we shall find.
—Helen M. Goodwin, 9 years,
Northwood, N. H.

The Hobby on the Hearth

OWING to the urging of Miss Margaret Applegarth
I housed ten little horses beside my firelit hearth—
They were curious little horses, they kept neighing all the time,
"No hay! No grain! No fodder, please! I'm hungry for a dime!"
"What will you do with dimes?" I said, fearing indigestion,
But they looked really quite surprised at such a foolish question.

Politely they replied with the best of well-bred manners,
"We'll tuck the dimes for future use inside our Crusade banners,
Then forth we'll go through all the earth
With Easter joy and Christmas mirth."
So then I fed them a dime a day
And sent them forth on their Christian way.

The thing that worries me now is this—
A fear each of you may miss this bliss!
—V. T. Y., over 15, New York.

What the Horse Said

GIVE, said the little steed,
Give oh give, give oh give.
Give, said the little steed,
As it hurried up the hill.

I am small, I know,
But wherever I go,
Give oh give, give oh give;
I am small, I know,
But wherever I go
The folks grow brighter still.
—Jane D. Jones, Denver, Colo.

Billy's Decision

BILLY sat one day a-thinking,
In his hand two dimes a-clinking,
Across the street a candy store,
With luring things to tempt him sore.

But in his mind a thought came rushing
Of mounted men with banners flashing.
Each told of needs that must be met,
And lack of dollars—not come yet.

Up, up, they rode determined, very,
Because Crusaders never tarry,
But forward press when call comes clear,
For dimes make dollars and good cheer.

So Billy thought of dark-skinned brothers
Across the sea, and many others,
And so his dimes were sealed in place,
On Dollar Hill to speed the race.

—Mary Raycroft, 14 years,
Chillicothe, Ill.

A Baptist Crusade

IF I had my way
I'd pay
A dollar a day
With might and main
To this campaign.
But being small
I've nothing at all!
So wood I haul,
And fires I tend,
Chairs I mend
The gospel to send Across the sea
Where the heathen be.
I sell old rags—
To fill the flags
Which the knights uphold
(A dime in each fold.)
And lawns I rake
For the heathen's sake.
I think it really is lots more fun
If money you pledge has to be won.
At least I've found it is that way,
For I love every dime every inch of the way.
Indeed I'm filling my second container
And finding it fun to earn the remainder.

—Elsie and Doris Sharpe, 16 and 18 years, Boston.

Children's World Crusade

SOME heathen live around our door,
While those elsewhere are even more.
If we should give our Baptist dimes
It would lessen cruel crimes,
For the heathen do not know
That the gospel to them we owe.
This campaign will help us each
The word of God to the world to teach.

—Myra Evelyn Crump, 12 years,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Earning a Dollar

BESSIE who was eight years old
Always did what she was told,
So when the Crusaders told her to earn
To help the heathen children learn
She earned a dime in lots of ways,
So doesn't Bessie earn your praise?

—Elizabeth R. Boice, 14 years,
Chicago.

One Little Dollar

ONE little dollar does so much good
More in fact than you'd think it would!
It helps carry a missionary over the sea
To where the Chinese drink their tea.
For Indian orphans clothes it provides
And gives every one a Bible besides.
To our busy doctors across the sea
It gives what they need for surgery,
It gives missionaries autos to ride
When they go to visit the countryside.
And of course our missionaries should have pay
For the wonderful good that they do each day.
Besides, these missionaries can't walk all the time
So we pay their fare while in this sunny clime.
And part of this dollar also provides
That we should have Sunday-school needs supplied.
While each Christian center needs a sewing machine
And swings and shower baths to keep children clean.
In foreign countries they must have schools
To teach the children to be handy with tools.

—Malcolm MacQueen, 12 years,
Rochester, N. Y.

The Merry-Go-Round

FOR Baptist boys and Baptist girls the cheerfullest fun that can be found
Is the Crusader's Dollar Hill merry-go-round.
You start at the foot and it costs you a dime
To ride on a horse to some distant clime—
Here you build schools!
Here you build centers!
Here you buy Bibles!
Here you buy swings!
And all other kinds of friendly things!

Each of the horses causes such fun
Surely you, too, wish you had begun
This jolly, important, new merry-go-round
Which upward and onward is always outbound—
Here you build hospitals!
Here you build ships!
Here you buy shower baths!
Here you buy books
For all of earth's bookless and ignorant nooks!

—A Friend.

The Crusade Up Dollar Hill

THE road curved up hill like a letter S
But the reason why you'd never guess—
'Twas because that hill was a dollar sign
And the gallant steeds toiling up were mine.

Steadily up and up they trod
With banners unfurled in the name of God,
Carrying help to every clime—
For each banner was filled with a silver dime.

Of course some day we'll all be grown
And have more money of our own,
But grown-up Baptists don't like to give Like Young Reserves, I'm positive.

For if they did they'd fill Dollar Hills
Not with dimes, but with dollar bills,
And then the Baptists from coast to coast
Would certainly have good cause to boast.

—Shermer S. Stacy, over 15, Detroit.

Up Dollar Hill

I THINK it would be a crime
If any Baptist did not climb
Dollar Hill—it costs a dime,
But takes you into every clime
To spread God's gospel so sublime
And give the heathen a happy time.
I may not be much good at a rhyme
But wait till you hear my ten dimes chime!

How a Boy and a Girl Climbed "Dollar Hill"

"LUCY, oh Lucy, where are you?" cried Will,
As he rushed down the stairs one day,
"I have something here which would interest us
And I know how we can make it pay."

"I'm here in my room," answered Lucy, "come in,
I would like to climb up 'Dollar Hill'
So I'm making these beads out of sealing wax,
For somebody's need I'm sure they'll fill."

"That's just what I wanted to tell you," said Will,
"I'd like to pass papers, and say, by the way,
I know you make aprons of muslin so white
And trim them so nicely with gay applique."

"Sure," replied Lucy, "I'll sell strings of these beads,
Mrs. Davis admired those I made for Aileen,
She told me again and again one day,
That those beads were the prettiest she'd ever seen."

International Sunday School Lesson for May 6

SAMUEL: JUDGE AND PROPHET

Lesson: I Samuel 12:1-5, 20-25. Golden Text: I Samuel 12:24

Introductory.

The chief record of Samuel's life is to be found from the first chapter of 1 Samuel to the twenty-eighth. By reading these a general survey of his life may be had. This is necessary if full value is to be gained from the lesson of the day, which is a final scene in his active work as ruler of the people. The two books of Samuel were originally one. They are so named because Samuel is one of the principal characters portrayed, especially in the early chapters. Samuel was the last of the judges who ruled over Israel; as well he was the first of the prophets. Under the rule of the judges, Israel had become corrupt and disorganized. It fell to Samuel's lot to correct the faults of his predecessors and to save his people from heathenism. With no uncertainty as to his calling, he went up and down the land, showing them the error of their ways.

The Lesson.

The people of Israel were demanding a king. Their excuse was that the sons of Samuel whom, in his old age, he had made judges over Israel, were unjust men and money-seekers. In spite of any hurt or angry feelings this request may have created, Samuel considered it and, as was his custom, talked the matter over with God. The result was the anointing of the young Saul as king. Saul had just won a victory over the Ammonites; following this Samuel called a mass-meeting at Gilgal, and there gave to the people his farewell address, which is the subject matter of today's lesson. Samuel was now aware that Saul was not the right king. He knew that in the course of time a new one must be anointed. This king was David. In today's lesson, Samuel reminds the people that he granted them a king in response to their demand. Then he throws his life upon the screen for them to read and judge. "Here I am: Witness against me before Jehovah, and before his anointed. Whom have I defrauded? Whom have I oppressed?" But there was no one to say a word against him. Then followed parting words of advice as to the conduct of the people henceforth: "Only fear Jehovah, and serve him in truth with all your heart; for consider how great things he has done for you." And then the word of warning: "But if ye still do wickedly, ye shall be consumed, both ye and your king."

Leading Thoughts.

1. Continual prayer is a secret of strength. 2. No man fears public investigation when there are no hidden dark places in his life. 3. Personal power meant nothing to Samuel; it was the highest good of the people he desired.

Diligens—Again

ROY L. VAN DEMAN

"Those live books you spoke of yesterday as you were starting home on the car, Diligens." said Proctor when the two friends met as they sometimes did at the the Commercial Club, for lunch.

"Yes," the older man answered, "I wish more of us could have a chance to pick up books like these two. There are only a few. I've thought Patricius might be interested in a bit of money put into some strong advertising of these two, just for the reach it would have. Now there's Mr. Powell's book. He has a chapter on present-day conditions and the church. Play, he says, is the index of a civilization. There was the Colosseum. There is or was Rugby football and cricket. And there are American football and the national game played on the league and the vacant lot. Play makes and reflects national ideals. It is interrelated with morals. Twenty-five thousand balls with bats followed the first of the boys to France. One league championship series cost about a half million dollars. One in every seven of our people sees a film today—in fact, every day.

"There's a four million attendance at dance halls in New York City each year. There must be something in original human nature that nothing but rhythm can meet. We use enough money in our playhouses in twelve months to build the Nicaragua Canal that is now being considered necessary before long."

"How much?"

"A billion dollars. Powell goes on suggesting things. Where shall the church come in? If the people's money is to go to play, why not have it go to good play, play that will recreate the weary, build up youth and make people see that the church is interested in whatever will make human life joyous and constructive?"

Proctor was neglecting his ice cream.

"I've been thinking, Proctor, that play is of God not of the devil. Has the church let the devil put one over on us? No matter about Puritanism now. It was good but this is the twentieth century not the seventeenth. The Young Men's Christian Association gives us the cue."

He continued, "This book and the other by Mr. Richardson are packed full of the Christian principles of play. They have an abundance of materials to start a church recreational director off on the right foot in making a graded, balanced, natural and Christian program for the social and recreational life of our young people. It's a man's job. Richardson is a trained and experienced minister, now a religious education professor. These books are needed. Religion covets all life. The church will be heard if it proclaims an adequate recreational policy, sane, positive, suited to young life and capable of filling American leisure time with satisfying and natural activity. After that the church will be heard when it insists on the distinction between good and evil in play, and moves to protect youth and parenthood from debasement and exploitation at the hands of commercialized amusement sellers. The expenditure of money to attract and guide young people by an adequate recreational program based on a survey of needs as they are is as legitimate a Christian expenditure as the maintenance of the worship of God. If not as important, it will nevertheless contribute to that worship by setting the church in its true light before the eyes of youth as the champion of human rights and the defender of the good in youth's rightful heritage of play."

"Diligens, suppose we look these books carefully through, the three of us. Perhaps Patricius——"

They were interrupted but they went through the books, the three of them.

Railroad Rates—Boston Convention

Those interested should interview local agents at an early date regarding fares to Boston.

Trans-Continental Passenger Association, Western Passenger Association.

These two associations have also granted reduced rates to the Boston convention. Because of the distance, and the territory covered, all prospective delegates to the convention should inquire at a very early date as to rates. Local railway agents throughout the entire territory will be informed as to dates of sale and final return limit. Identification certificates must be presented in order to secure rates for this convention.

Southeastern Passenger Association.

Tickets will be sold within the territory of this association June 30 to July 6 inclusive with a final return limit of July 13. Reduced rates cannot be secured without the identification certificates.

Identification certificates may be secured from state or provincial transportation leaders, or from General Secretary White, 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Our Own Folks

Church Cooperation in North Haven, Maine

In Penobscot Bay, twelve miles east of Rockland, there is a small island where many people go for their summer vacation. On this island the Episcopalians and Baptists are cooperating in an unique way. Why can't Baptists and Episcopalians work together for good, although they do have different ways of conducting their religious services and have a different form of church government?

It all began years ago. When the summer people began coming to the island it was found that only a few of them attended the Baptist services, and because of this fact some felt a responsibility for the spiritual life among themselves during their vacation season. Therefore Rev. George Strong and Dr. Endicott Peabody organized a committee and they started Episcopal services in Library Hall, at the village, which have been continued until this day.

The North Haven Baptist Church was organized in 1804 and celebrated its one hundredth anniversary under the pastorate of Rev. Maurice Dunbar. The old church building was placed about the center of the island in order to accommodate the whole people. With the increasing number of summer people the center of population changed. Many of the farms were sold and many of those who had formerly made their living by fishing left the island to seek other employment. When the church was finally awakened to the new situation and learned that many of its children had separated themselves from it by a two-miles' distance, and that only a handful was left to mourn the weakness of its declining years, it began to shake off the shackles that had bound it and sought to extend its border of influence and to build a more stately structure at the center of activity, the village. But there were some who would not have the church disturbed; they had rather let it lie forsaken and to have its voice silenced than to move it to meet the new situation.

The church had been without a pastor for nearly two years when the present pastor, Rev. Milton G. Perry, arrived. He saw at once that there was need of a new church building at the village, for the old building was now two miles from the center of population. This need had been foreseen by previous pastors and even agitated by some of them. Mr. Perry, with a few earnest workers, at once made plans to bring the matter of a new church building before the church. A fine lot of land, overlooking the water, was finally purchased for a new building. This being done, the next step was to raise money for the building. It was decided to launch a campaign among the town's people. The goal was set for $8,000. Many said it couldn't be done, but in less than a week more than $7,000 had been given in cash and pledges and in a short time we went over the $8,000 mark.

When the island was visited again by summer friends and they learned what the Baptists had done, the Episcopalians gave up the fond idea which they had cherished for several years of erecting an Episcopal church and agreed to raise the sum of $17,000 and give it to the Baptists to help them build their church. In this Baptist church just behind the pulpit platform there is a sanctuary for the use of the Episcopal service, and the Episcopals are to have their services on Sunday mornings during the summer season in this new church. When the building is being used by the Baptists the sanctuary will be closed by means of curtains.

The Baptists of North Haven believe that it is high time for the Christian world to cooperate one with the other for the good of mankind. These two Christian bodies are cooperating in a fine manner and a splendid work is being done. As the work proceeds the people of North Haven are realizing the wisdom of the step taken in August, 1920, when the church made plans for the future work of Christ upon the island. When we learn to put Christianity before churchianity we will work together in the spirit of harmony and the triumphant march of Christ will be more pronounced in the days to come than it has been in the years that have passed.

Mr. Perry is hoping to build a community house and parsonage at the village in the near future. The words of the prophet ring true, "Where there is no vision the people perish." The people of North Haven, Maine, have seen his star and have not been disobedient to the heavenly vision.

Burma

By J. Herbert Cope

A correspondent last year stated in The Baptist that the Northern Baptists baptized one person for every eleven of the membership and the Southern, one for every twelve. That makes the figures for Burma look bad. Last year there were baptized about 4,000 Christians into a membership of 65,000. Thus there was but one for every sixteen members. I guess this will be a surprise to many people both in Burma and America; it was to me. The fact of the matter is the largest constituency of Baptists here is not working at it; one man said they are lying down on the job. Last year the Burmans had a larger proportionate increase in membership than the Karens. One wonders whether the work of the missionary is finished when he has established the self-supporting and self-governing churches, whether here in the East where a man gets a living so easily, it will not always be necessary for the missionary to be the inspiration and leader in evangelistic work. Certain it is that Burma needs a tremendous awakening along these lines.

The present cold season has seen the passing of three veteran missionaries—Dr. Kelly, Mr. Phinney and now comes news of the going of Mrs. Rose, or Mama Rose, as she was called by all. She has been for years the mother of the mission and no one but her father and perhaps a few others have come near equalling her term of service in the mission field. About three years ago in the Guide Book there were published the pictures of the men who had served thirty-five years or more in the service. Of these Burma had nine, the largest number. And yet today there are but two of those nine in active service.

It is wonderful how the country is advancing in certain respects. The Buddhists are not thinking perhaps so much of the erection of pagodas and other works to secure merit. But they are improving those already built and beautifying them. Electric lights are becoming common in illuminating their pagodas at night. The Shwe Dagon, in Rangoon, their greatest, is most atrociously done and makes a poor effect but it was a beginning and now all over the country the small towns are eagerly following. At a little bit of a place on the way to my field they have an oil engine and a dynamo which lights the pagoda and other buildings in the enclosure. The original cost was $3,000 and the upkeep is $3 a day or rather night. The manager does not start his engine until the $3 is in hand. One of the missionaries writes of the wonderful improvement it has made in his chapel since he was able to get power from the pagoda dynamo.

A writer in a newspaper not long ago told the people of the province what he thought of their capital city, calling it one of the dirtiest and poorest planned cities he has ever seen. He ridiculed the buildings pretty generally. Then he turned to the new school built by the Karens of Bassein and Doctor Nichols, and practically said it was the finest building in the country. He had not a word of criticism to make. Our missionaries are leaving monuments in stone as well as in spirit and flesh to testify to their wonderful abilities and spirit.

Pasadena First Church Building Campaign

Amidst the scene of indescribable enthusiasm, The First Church of Pasadena went "over the top" in its great building campaign on Sunday night, March 25. Upon the recommendation of the pastor, Dr. John Marvin Dean, the church had secured the services of Dr. F. H. Divine of Brooklyn, N. Y., to lead in this enterprise. It also had the assistance of Mr. B. B. Wilcox of the foreign department of the International Y. M. C. A., who is a member of the First Church of Pasadena and who volunteered his services to help in the great project. The present objective was $325,000; $50,000 of this was available from a previous campaign held three years ago when Dr. S. W. Cummings was the pastor of the church. A special cabinet was created to cooperate with Doctor Divine and Mr. Wilcox, consisting of the pastors of the church, Doctor Dean and Mr. Handel, and a group of laymen under the chairmanship of Mr. Ira J. H. Sykes.

The First Church of Pasadena has long been noted for two things—its liberality and its supposed opulence. Doctor Divine discovered what the pastors already knew, namely that the people of the First Church were very modestly circumstanced and that an unsually large percentage of them were the Lord's poor. He declared that, of all the campaigns he has conducted, the giving was the most heroic and devoted. Doctor Divine left behind him a spirit of unity and devotion. His messages were biblical, vigorous and eloquent.

The church now has in hand toward its building enterprise a magnificent site in the heart of Pasadena, extending for a block on Marengo Avenue, fully paid for. It also has pledges to the amount of $435,000. It is planned to begin in the near future the construction of the auditorium and the church activities building. These will be built around the present structure which will then be torn down. A third unit will eventually be built upon the site of the present structure.

MAINE

ROCKLAND, LITTLEFIELD MEMORIAL CHURCH: Special services under the direction of Rev. John T. Holman of Port Clyde, closed on Easter. Over a score enlisted in the Christian life.

LISBON FALLS: Rev. W. M. Davis, the pastor, and the church appreciate the aid brought by Evangelist Evans in a recent series of meetings. The closing service included the baptism of nine persons, and other decisions have since been made.

FIRST CHURCH, ROCKLAND: Nine days of special meetings were held preceding Easter. Rev. J. Chas. MacDonald of Auburn was the speaker. The pastor, Rev. B. P. Browne baptized thirty-three people. As a feature of the church's ninetieth anniversary, a new memorial organ will be installed. Another interesting event will be a three-day Bible conference which will be conducted by Rev. Harry C. Leach of Hackensack, N. J.

FIRST CHURCH, HOULTON: Thirteen persons were baptized on Easter. Rev. G. J. Gilbert of Fort Fairfield gave four addresses during Passion week. The attendance at the Bible school has averaged 307 for the past quarter. Rev. Henry C. Speed is pastor.

ESSER STREET CHURCH, BANGOR: Under the leadership of Rev. Roy M. Trafton, the church is making the most of its opportunities. On Easter twenty-one persons were baptized in the afternoon, and in the evening the hand of fellowship was extended to twenty-six.

FIRST CHURCH, WATERVILLE: Pastor Quarrington administered the ordinance of baptism to twelve candidates on Easter. During this month special effort is being made to bring the payment on all pledges to the N. W. M. up to date.

SECOND CHURCH, CALAIS: The senior C. E. held an Easter entertainment, and the amount received—$65—will be used to send young people to summer schools for religious education.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

TEN PERSONS WERE BAPTIZED and eleven received the hand of fellowship on Easter at the Berlin Church. Rev. A. N. Chandler is pastor.

AT THE EASTER SERVICE, the hand of fellowship was extended to forty-four new members of the First Church, Nashau, of which Rev. A. J. Archibald is pastor.

REV. H. E. WYMAN, missionary pastor of the convention for the eastern section of the state, has resigned. Mr. Wyman has served in this capacity for two and a half years. He ministered to a very needy section in the eastern part of the state, and one which had had no previous pastoral attention. But because of lack of funds, probably no one will be appointed to continue Mr. Wyman's work.

THE REGULAR APRIL MEETING of the entire board of the convention was held in Manchester, April 10.

REV. J. K. MILLER, missionary at large for the convention during this month is visiting the churches in the northern part of the state giving stereopticon lectures and presenting the missionary work of the denomination.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE WOMEN'S United Baptist Mission Society of the state was held Wednesday, April 18 in the First Church, Nashua. The morning session was devoted to business reports. In the afternoon, Rev. A. J. Archibald, Nashua; Mrs. J. F. Ingram, Burma, and Miss Ethel Bowker, New York, spoke.

NEW YORK

TEN CANDIDATES WERE BAPTIZED by Rev. Elbert Beebe, pastor of the Westport Church, on Easter.

FIFTY CANDIDATES WERE BAPTIZED on Easter at the First Church, Olean. There have been 126 additions to the membership since the beginning of the pastorate of Rev. A. Frank Houser last July. In the afternoon the first sod was turned for the new Sunday-school and recreation building.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE FIRST CHURCH, Le Roy, of which Rev. I. C. Taylor is pastor, was held April 6. The treasurer reported that all bills had been paid and that there was a balance of $300 in the treasury. Nearly $6,000 had been raised of which $2,400 was given to the N. W. M. Approximately $5,000 has been secured for additional Sunday-school equipment. Mr. Taylor is in the eight year of his pastorate.

SINCE THE BEGINNING OF THE YEAR there have been thirty additions to the membership of the First Church, Salamanca of which Rev. L. E. Ford is pastor.

WITH SEVERAL CHURCHES as yet not heard from, the Hudson River North Association reports 122 baptisms with more to follow soon.

THE CALVARY CHURCH, SCHENECTADY, of which Rev. E. C. Smith is pastor, has broken ground for a new parsonage which will be completed in July.

THE COHOES CHURCH RETURNED to its own building on Easter after an extended absence while repairs were being made on the old house of worship. The collection of $1,400 will be used toward the building expenses.

THIRTEEN PERSONS WERE BAPTIZED on Easter at the Tabernacle Church, Utica. In thirteen months there have been 140 additions to the membership. Rev. Edward Bleakney is pastor.

FIRST CHURCH, ROME: The two years of the pastorate of Rev. Ivan Murray Rose have been years of achievement and progress. Under the leadership of Rev. Frank H. Divine about $123,000 was set aside on Easter, 1922, to remodel the church building, and on Easter, 1923, ground was broken for this project. Work will begin immediately. It is now estimated that the cost will be approximately $200,000. The church has made a place for itself in the life of the community.

Religious Activities at Colgate

Outstanding among the religious services held in the Colgate University chapel Sunday afternoons this year, was the vesper meeting on Mar. 25, at which the address was given by James C. Colgate, '84, president of the university board of trustees. Mr. Colgate was heard with intense interest by a large congregation of students and members of the faculty as he spoke on "Spiritual Equipment for Present Day Life."

The annual dinner given by the Baptist Education Society to students at Colgate who are preparing for the ministry was held in the college commons on the evening of Mar. 26. Dean Vichert presided, and addresses were made by President Cutten and Doctor Barbour, president of Rochester Theological Seminary. There are fifty-four men in the Colgate Seminary this year, and there are twenty-six men in the college who are preparing for the ministry. Statistics read by Dean Vichert show that there are 700 alumni who are pastors of churches at home or serving as missionaries in foreign lands. Four hundred replies to a questionnaire sent these men have been received recently. The total membership of the churches served by these 400 men is 70,000. Current expenses of the churches to which these men minister exceed $1,000,000. The benevolences total more than $700,000. Last year these men baptized 3,366 converts. Their salaries range from $400 to $7,500 per year, with an average salary of $2,293.

Through the interest of friends of the university, it was possible to secure the services of Mr. Frank D. Buchman and Mr. Loudon Hamilton for a campaign in personal evangelism on the campus during the past five weeks. Mr. Buchman is a man of wide experience in religious work in colleges in the United States and England. Mr. Hamilton is a recent graduate of Oxford. As a feature of the campaign conferences were held in all the fraternity houses and in the dormitories, and to lead these conferences a dozen or more under-graduates and young alumni who have been active in religious work in other colleges were brought to Colgate. One meeting, which was attended by approximately 150 students, was held in the home of President Cutten, and the problems of the men were frankly discussed. Scores of students were helpfully influenced during the campaign, and the results of the movement, which are appearing in many forms, are highly satisfactory.

MASSACHUSETTS

SEVENTEEN NEW MEMBERS were received on Easter by the First Church, Natick, of which Rev. H. H. Powell is pastor.

THE WORK AT THE BETHANY CHURCH, Roxbury, is steadily progressing under the pastor, Rev. D. W. Lyman. Forty-five persons have pledged themselves to tithe. The Sunday-school attendance has been increased. The church is striving to make itself a real power in the community.

NEW JERSEY

TWELVE CANDIDATES WERE BAPTIZED Easter by Rev. William Park, pastor of the First Church, Penns Grove. During the past three months the attendance has doubled, the Sunday school has grown 300 per cent and twenty-four new members have been received. Pastor Park is also doing some work at Crozer Seminary.

REV. WILLIAM E. BRAISTED, pastor of the First Church, Red Bank, baptized nine converts on Easter.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

ATGLEN: Rev. B. F. SKINNER of Richmond, Va., assisted Rev. J. Evan Balderson, pastor of the Glen Run Church in special meetings the week preceding Easter. The pastor baptized fifteen persons on Easter. The church has also experienced a revival within itself.

UNDER THE PASTORATE of Dr. Clarence A. Adams, the new church at the State College is making fine progress. The number of student members is increasing constantly. They are wholehearted in their appreciation of the work of the pastor.

PASTORAL CHANGES: Rev. J. W. Lyon has presented his resignation at East Smithfield. The church at New Albany has extended a call to Rev. Walter Mininger of the graduating class at Crozer Seminary. Rev. Thos. H. Lloyd has been invited to the pastorate of the church at Minersville. Rev. Raymond C. Kanne is coming from Elkhart Mines, Md., to Stony Fork.

PASTOR ELMER E. DRESSER of the Luzerne Avenue Church, Pittston, baptized ten persons at a sunrise service on Easter. The annual business meeting of the church showed a good year—$6,926 was raised for all purposes, of which $2,033 was the result of the day's wage campaign to reduce the indebtedness of the church.

THE FIRST CHURCH, NESQUEHONING, is prospering under the leadership of Rev. H. G. Wray, who has been pastor for nearly four years. A large indebtedness has been paid and improvements made on the property so that it is in first class condition. On Easter nine people were baptized.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

MONONGAHELA: SIX YOUNG PEOPLE were baptized on Easter and eleven are awaiting the hand of fellowship at the May communion. Over $1,000 was raised toward a fund for a new church building. The church school is now organized into four separate departments and is supplied

Mississippi Valley

MICHIGAN

APRIL 1, THERE WERE NINETEEN accessions to the membership of the Eaton Rapids Church.

TEMPLE CHURCH, DETROIT: The attendance in the Bible school on Easter reached 1,020. Rev. Llewellyn Brown is pastor.

THE MUSKEGON HEIGHTS CHURCH held two weeks of special services preceding Easter. The meetings created a splendid spiritual atmosphere. Twenty-one new members were received by baptism. Rev. Austin Wesley Lyons is pastor.

THE MILLS MEMORIAL CHURCH, Mayville, presented an impressive Easter pageant. After the program, the ordinance of baptism was administered.

THE BEULAH CHURCH EXTENDED the hand of fellowship to fifty new members on Easter. The revival interest is so strong that there are conversions at almost every service. The church now has a membership of 750 and has set a goal for 1,000 in a few years.

THE HURLBUT AVENUE CHURCH OF DETROIT is three months old. It has been meeting in a small chapel for more than two years. As a result of a week's meeting before Easter, there were thirty-one decisions for Christ. Of the present membership of 104, sixty-three have been received during the present pastorate of two years. The Detroit Union is aiding the church to secure an adequate building. Mr. Calvin Hamilton is pastor.

OHIO

FIRST CHURCH, YOUNGSTOWN: On Easter, the church welcomed 170 new members. For the past eight weeks the pastor, Rev. A. C. Archibald, had led a campaign of home evangelism. One hundred personal workers were organized. These workers thoroughly canvassed the field and the results show what they accomplished. The building committee is actively at work to provide as soon as possible a new edifice which will accommodate the enlarging needs of the church.

CLEVELAND: TRINITY CHURCH reports that as the result of special meetings led by Rev. J. C. Killian of Parkersburg, West Va., forty-five new members have received the hand of fellowship. Rev. P. M. MacKay is pastor.

FIVE MEMBERS WERE RECEIVED on Easter at the First Church, Blanchester.

REV. H. T. HOUF BAPTIZED four students of Dension University at the Granville Church on Palm Sunday. Twelve boys and girls were baptized on Easter. The offering which amounted to $1,000, will be used as the foundation of a building fund for additional Sunday-school rooms. The church recently voted Mr. Houf an increase in salary.

EMMANUEL CHURCH, TOLEDO: Rev. Roscoe Murray assisted Pastor E. G. Griffith in a series of pre-Easter meetings for ten days. During this time there were forty conversions.

DURING THE THREE AND A HALF YEARS that Rev. A. G. Adriance has been pastor of the First Church, Bellevue, the church's contributions to both the current and mission funds have more than doubled. Mr. Adriance recently resigned to accept the unanimous call of the East Liverpool Church where he will begin work May 6. Rev. F. P. Rundell of Erie, Pa., has accepted the call of the Bellevue Church.

THE TENTH AVENUE CHURCH, Columbus, of which Dr. H. O. Rowlands is acting pastor, received thirty new members Easter week.

Cleveland Association

Easter brought great rejoicing to the Baptists of Cleveland. Practically every church in the association had baptisms and large accessions to the membership. Our great down-town church on Euclid Avenue received 184. The Cleveland Heights Church, an organization just three years old, received forty-four. It has now a membership of over 200 with a Sunday school of over 300. The Nottingham Church, worshipping in a building that could not possibly accommodate more than 200 people, baptized fifty on Easter, making its total accessions for the year approximately 100. Results in many other churches were equally satisfactory.

This ingathering was largely the fruitage of a series of simultaneous evangelistic meetings conducted in twenty of the churches from Feb. 27—March 11. During that time there were twenty visiting pastors or evangelists assisting in local churches, and as a result more than 1,200 people made definite profession of conversion.

The united effort grew out of a suggestion made to the Cleveland Baptist Association by Dr. H. F. Stilwell, superintendent of evangelism for the Home Mission Society. Early in the fall a committee of laymen, consisting of one person from each church, was formed. Working through especially appointed committees in the local churches and meeting with them frequently, the laymen's committee made sure that in each church a careful census was taken, that proper provision was made for finances and that the necessary preparatory religious work was energetically and prayerfully carried out in all the departments of the church life. It is the general opinion that the campaign not only resulted in a large number of converts but that it has brought the churches into a working cooperation such as they have never before experienced. Many, who a year ago were doubtful concerning the possibility of conducting evangelistic meetings in certain sections of the city with any success, are now convinced that the proper kind of a campaign can be made sucessful in any quarter of the city.

The simultaneous effort has its advantages over the center or tabernacle method in, that whilst it is carried on in a quiet way and lacks all the elements of the spectacular, it does succeed in gathering a larger aggregate number of people, It makes room for a larger number of personal workers and puts the local church into definite contact with the converts, making it much more likely that they will seek membership.—A. M. MCDONALD.

INDIANA

THE FIRST CHURCH, LAPORTE, of which Rev. W. F. Bostick is pastor, held its annual meeting recently. For the first time in several years the current expense receipts exceeded the expenditures. During the past year seventy-nine new members were received. Ten persons were baptized on Easter.

FOLLOWING A SERIES of evangelistic services led by Rev. Britton Ross of Mineral Wells, Texas, there were seventy-five additions to the membership of the Baptist Temple, Logansport. Five thousand dollars was raised to remove the debt on the property. A school of missions is being conducted with success.

FIRST CHURCH, HAMMOND: Pastor Oranger has been on the field eighteen months. During that time there have been 224 additions to the membership, 119 by baptism. Rev. Fred Daniels of Rock Island, Ill., has been secured as pastor's assistant. The work of the Polish department of the church under the leadership of Rev. M. S. Anuta is progressing, and the Polish Baptist Church now has forty members.

ILLINOIS

BELDEN AVENUE CHURCH, CHICAGO: As the result of pre-Easter services, between fifty and sixty persons took a decided stand for Christ. The objective for the church is 1,000 members by Jan. 1, 1924. On Jan. 1, 1923 the membership was 761.

REV. F. T. KLOTZSCHE of Cornell has accepted a call to the church at Havana. Mr. Klotzsche has served the Cornell church for three years.

THE CHURCH AT VILLA GROVE of which Rev. B. F. Tilley is pastor, has been seriously affected by the railroad strike. Nearly one-half of the membership moved away. However, the state convention was able to aid the church a little and the work is beginning to show signs of improvement. There were several additions to the membership as a result of special Easter meetings.

CLINTON IS ANOTHER RAILROAD town that has had a hard time recovering from the strike. Many of the best Baptist families moved elsewhere and there have been but few additions. The convention gave some temporary assistance and the church is now able to cover the deficit. Rev. O. P. Miles is pastor.

THE CHURCH AT NORMAL is still pastorless. Dr. E. P. Brand has been elected stated supply and will continue to serve in this capacity until a pastor is secured.

REV. CHAS. E. DOUGAN until recently pastor of the Baptist church at Cornwall, Ont., Can., preached morning and evening at Tabernacle Church, Chicago, on March 25. He occupied the pulpit of Marquette Manor Church on April 1 and April 8.

THE DEDICATORY EXERCISES of the First Church of Oak Park will be as follows: April 22, preaching by Dr. Carl D. Case in the morning, and Dr. Theodore G. Soares in the evening. April 23, meeting of the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Chicago with complimentary luncheon at 12:30. April 25, complimentary dinner for members of the church and congregation and friends. April 29, preaching by Dr. Benjamin Otto in the morning and Dr. Carl D. Case in the evening. May 3, concert, dedication of the Skinner pipe organ, the Deagan chimes and the Baldwin concert grand piano.

AS THE RESULT OF A THREE WEEKS' evangelistic campaign, there were forty-six additions to the membership of the Marissa Church, forty-one by baptism. A special feature of the campaign was the house to house canvass of every family in the town by the pastor, Rev. T. Bert Frary.

FOR SEVENTEEN DAYS PRIOR to Easter, Evangelist F. M. Dunk held meetings with the East Park Church, Decatur. Twenty-nine persons were received by baptism. Rev. Russel A. Rapson is pastor.

THE WOODLAWN CHURCH, CHICAGO, of which Rev. M. P. Boynton is pastor, reports that the ordinance of baptism was administered to fifty-one candidates.

FIRST CHURCH, JACKSONVILLE: There were fifty-one accessions on Easter, twenty-one by baptism. This was the result of the special campaign for new members. All departments of the church have been quickened. Rev. A. P. Howells is pastor.

FIRST CHURCH, MATTOON: The two weeks of special meetings conducted by Rev. R. S. Kirkland of Urbana, were brought to a close on Easter with the result that forty-six candidates were baptized, making a total of eighty-three additions to the membership. The plans for the new building are about completed and it is hoped that construction will begin by May 1 on which date the pastor, Rev. James M. Lively, finishes his seventh year as pastor of the church.

REV. J. H. MARTIN, pastor of the First Church, Belleville, reports that the church is out of debt and that extensive repairs will be made on the building. There have been ninety-nine additions to the church membership during the present pastorate.

TWO OFFICERS FROM THE CHANUTE aviation field were baptized on Easter at the First Church, Rantoul, of which Rev. C. W. Kerst is pastor.

IOWA

DURING THE LAST SIX MONTHS there have been forty-five additions to the membership of the First Church, Mason City, twenty-one of whom were baptized Easter. Rev. Robert N. McDonald and Mr. W. B. Howell of the Walnut Street Church, Waterloo, assisted in a two weeks' meeting in March. Rev. A. W. Tandy is pastor.

WISCONSIN

THERE WERE EIGHT ACCESSIONS to the membership of the First Church, Fond du Lac, on Easter.

SINCE CHRISTMAS THE WAUPACA Church has devoted much time to evangelism with the result that there have been twenty-four additions to the membership. Rev. J. W. Clevenger is pastor.

GREEN BAY BAPTISTS have recently had a successful series of meetings conducted by Rev. Robert L. Kelley of Delavan. As a result on Easter, ten persons were received into the church by the pastor, Rev. A. T. Erickson.

MINNESOTA

REV. J. MCFARLANE is completing his sixth year of service with the Austin

Church. During that time 242 members have been received into the church. Nineteen people were baptized on Easter.

Rev. E. W. Annable, pastor of the First Church, Worthington, reports that there have been thirty-six baptisms in thirty months, six of whom were baptized Sunday, April 1.

Rev. W. E. Loucks has completed fifteen years of service with the Fourth Church, Minneapolis. During that time 821 persons have been received into the church. In 1907 the amount contributed was $3,584.91, and in 1923, $30,690.44. The new church edifice cost $85,000 and pledges have been secured to erect an additional Sunday-school building.

NEBRASKA

The First Church, North Platte, gave a farewell reception to its pastor, Rev. Paul A. Shenk, Friday, March 23. During his ministry of three years, there were 255 additions to the church membership.

The First Church, Lincoln, held special meetings for two weeks preceding Easter with the result that on that day there were thirty-two additions to the membership.

As the Result of Meetings held in he First Church, Norfolk, by Evangelist C. B. Jones of Anderson, Ind., twenty-five persons have been added to the membership.

The First Church, Holdredge, has voted to cooperate with the other churches of the city in conducting a community vacation school. At the city election this spring the pastor, Rev. J. P. Forsander, was elected a member of the school board. There were four additions to the membership of the church on Easter.

EASTERN WASHINGTON

The Twenty-Sixth Annual Meeting of the Spokane association was held March 27-28 with the Central Church, of which Rev. A. B. Waltz is pastor. There was a good representation of the thirty churches in the association. Six very interesting sessions were held. The meetings consisted principally of conferences on women's work, missionary needs in the association, the missionary program of the denomination and young people's work. Special features were the addresses by Rev. J. C. Austin, field director for Linfield College and Dr. W. E. Witter of Assam. The latter gave some interesting accounts of his harrowing experiences among wild beasts and wilder men, but always testified to the faithfulness of God and his wonderful deliverances. Other speakers were Rev. T. H. Hagen, Seattle, Mrs. W. A. Kemp, Rev. A. H. Bailey, Rev. A. F. Colver, Rev. C. H. McHarness, Rev. J. H. Dickson, Rev. J. R. George, Rev. A. F. White and Miss Margaret White of the Spokane association.

Obituary

REV. JAMES LISTER

James Lister was born at Great Broughton, England, Dec. 29, 1839, and died at Newman, Ohio, Jan. 19, 1923. He was married to Margaret Mackenzie in 1861 and with her came to this country in 1865. Mrs. Lister died Aug. 25, 1921. Six sons and three daughters survive them.

Mr. Lister was a licensed preacher in England but was formally ordained in Ohio in 1880. He held several pastorates in Ohio, the longest one being at Newman where he founded the church and preached for twenty-seven years.

His preaching was characterized by great clearness and power. He gloried in the doctrines of grace, Christ being his all in all. Calvinism had in him an able exponent; salvation was entirely by the grace of God, through faith in the blood of Jesus.

JESUS SAID

"The poor always ye have with you. When ye will, ye may do them good." Nearly all the Negroes of Alabama are very poor. In sickness their condition is distressing beyond description. Hitherto, their hospital facilities have been few and very crude; and little means with which to pay the necessary cost of hospital care.

A year ago, as a result of the Southern Baptist 75 Million Campaign, the white Baptists of Alabama established the exclusively for colored persons, without regard to their religious creed or ability to pay. The Hospital is supported and operated by the white Baptists of Alabama, under the superintendency of the same person who is in charge of the hospitals for whites. It is operated solely as a Christian ministry to the needy Negroes.

The demand for service is far greater than the bed capacity of the Hospital. We would enlarge, but our funds are exhausted. We solicit the aid of those who desire to have part in this form of service.

Religious Drama in Elementary Grades of the Church School

By Flora James Collyer

The Purpose of Religious Drama

The purpose of religious drama is to make Bible stories real by injecting into them the personal element. Through impersonation characters of the Bible are made to speak in audible voice. Their messages, which so often have fallen abstractly upon the ear, ring out in fullness of meaning.

Dramatization of Bible stories is a phase of religious education that is fast coming into its own. Its roots dip deep into the educational methods of the Great Teacher. When Pharisees sought to entrap him in his teaching, he not infrequently put them to shame by making them actors in a religious drama. If the disciples were dull of comprehension, he often exemplified his meaning by a simple drama. In these dramas not only were the disciples actors, but sometimes Jesus became an actor. Girding himself with a towel, he taught them the lessons of humility and service. To speak in present educational phraseology, Jesus introduced into his teaching the principle of self-expression. To clarify, impress, and secure a reaction through doing was his educational method. This today is the purpose of religious drama.

Children in Religious Drama

Jesus used not only men and women in drama, but he also used children. Taking them in his arms, he enacted a drama that silenced the murmuring disciples. Setting the child in the midst, he taught them the meaning of the kingdom of heaven.

Play and dramatization are the child's native atmosphere. The public-school teacher makes the child's play instinct and imitative tendencies her best allies. Dramatizing stories in readers is almost a daily exercise in public schools. The children in the Sunday-school primary grades are the same children that are in the public-school primary grades. Should we not be as pedagogical in one school as in the other?

As valuable for self-expression as is hand-work in connection with Bible stories, dramatization of stories is even more valuable. Through no other form of self-expression will the child receive so great a reaction. By no other way so well as by dramatization can we make live with him the great stories of the Bible.

When Children Should Dramatize

There are several arguments for incorporating dramatization of Bible stories into the regular beginners', primary, and junior Sunday programs.

1. Sunday is the teacher's best opportunity for making vivid and lasting impressions.

2. It affords an incentive for memorization of Bible texts.

3. It turns into useful channels the child's natural restlessness.

4. It converts what otherwise might be a prosy Sunday-school session into one of live interest.

Much of Sunday-school dramatization will be necessarily more or less crude. But the child lives in a world of imagination. What is crude to adults may be beautiful to the child and serve its intended purpose.

In more perfected form dramatization of Bible stories may be a most appropriate feature of special programs. When thus used it emphatically reveals the Sunday school as an institution for religious education.

The greatest handicap to dramatization of Bible stories in the Sunday-school session is the short time usually allotted for Sunday-school work. The length of the Sunday-school session in the majority of schools is probably an hour and a quarter. If everything necessary for dramatizing the story is at hand, much can be done even in that short time.

A Practical Illustration

Previous to Sunday an eight-foot ladder was placed in proper position in the primary Sunday-school room. When the time arrived in the order of service for retelling Bible stories, a small boy was asked if he would not like to come and lie down at the foot of the ladder and play "go to sleep." Several little girls were asked if they would not like to climb up and down the ladder. "How many can tell the name of the story that we have played?" she asked. "Jacob's Dream," was the ready response. "When Charles has told us what Jacob dreamed and what he said when he awoke, he may take his seat," resumed the superintendent. This called for the main facts of the story and the memory verse. "How many," continued the superintendent, "would like to play this story next Sunday?" Enthusiasm ran high. "But only those," she added, "will be able to do so who can tell the story and recite the memory verse."

All this took place in less time than it takes to tell it. It was the first attempt of that primary department at dramatizing Bible stories. It was not their last attempt. The stories of Moses in the bulrushes, Lot and Abraham, Eli and Samuel, the visit of the Wise Men, together with a long list of others, were found to be equally good for dramatizing, and that in the regular Sunday-school session.

Fully two-thirds of the graded elementary Sunday-school lessons now in current use lend themselves to dramatization. It is a matter of regret that no hints for such work accompany the lessons. It is to be hoped that, in the near future, elementary Sunday-school workers may be provided with a hand-book of helpful suggestions for dramatizing Bible stories.

Are These Things So?

The "Christian Index" of Georgia recently published an article on "Why the B. Y. P. U?" The greater part of this article is quoted below. If these things are so, there is room for serious reflection.

"A generation has come and gone. It is time to look at the fruits of the B. Y. P. U. in our churches. It can be fairly claimed that the drill in group meetings has developed more church members with the gift of leadership. Perhaps it has come in some cases with a certain pertness and air of superiority to the old leadership. The study courses have been good, but the precise difference between the B. Y. P. U. classes and the Sunday-school classes has not been always clear. But the young people have had an increase in Bible knowledge. It is not so easy to say as much for the training in Baptist doctrines. Much had been hoped for in this direction, but the results are not very manifest. Do they teach a Baptist catechism?

"The city B. Y. P. U. has done good in gathering the Baptist young people together for fellowship and service. Some of the state gatherings and summer assemblies have been fine with large attendance and great enthusiasm. At times a noble response has been made to appeals for volunteers for Christ in some form of personal service. The very mass of so many young people caring for the things of the kingdom impresses one. The B. Y. P. U. in the South can present a most impressive report in the point of members and of classes of attendance and of volunteers for personal service for Christ.

A Vital Matter

"If all this is true and more, why put a question mark at the head of this article? Why throw cold water on the work of the young people? Why dampen the ardor of those who show so much zeal and enthusiasm for Christ at a time when so many people are carried away by jazz and the movies I do it because of what I have seen so many times and because of what other preachers have told me. On hundreds of occasions I have met the B. Y. P. U. (junior, intermediate, and senior), going away from the evening service as I was going to it. I have seen it when I was preaching and when others were preaching. I have myself asked the B. Y. P. U. to stay to church and have seen them calmly walk away. I have known the pastor to go to the B. Y. P. U. and beg them to come in to church and get a refusal. Pastors by the score have confided to me their sorrow on this point. They say that their young people have taken the B. Y. P. U. in place of the evening service.

"There are exceptions, but my experience shows the exceptions to be rather few in comparison with the rest. My remarks now apply only to the B. Y. P. U. That takes the place of the evening service. When that is the case, I submit that the organization has gone wrong. It has missed its objective. It was started to make better Baptists, better church members. Loyalty to Christ, to church, to pastor, was the motto. If the B. Y. P. U. in any given case leads the young people to cut the evening service, I am bound to question whether that B. Y. P. U. should not end its career. It is using the church building to hold a meeting that takes the place of the church service.

"Originally the B. Y. P. U. meeting was held on a week night, but soon it was transferred to Sunday night. Now the B. Y. P. U. in many churches has become the rival of the evening service. Why have a B. Y. P. U. that trains the young people to stay away from church?

"It may be said that the young people would not come to the evening service if no B. Y. P. U. was held. Perhaps not. But at any rate they would not have the B. Y. P. U. as an excuse for not coming. If Sunday school is to take the place of the morning service and B. Y. P. U. of the evening service, one may ask where the regular church service comes in? Why have them at all? It would be cheaper to have no pastor at all.

The Local Church Must Be Preserved

"Baptists are not as a rule very ecclesiastical. We have no bosses and overlords. Our conventions are cooperative bodies on the voluntary plan. But we do believe in the dignity and worth of the local church as the body of Christ. We cannot sit by with indifference and see hurt done to the local church even by the children of the church, friendly off-shoots which have become rivals of the mother.

"Our trouble, undoubtedly, is the overcrowding of services on Sunday. Sunday school claims an hour and a half. Morning church takes another or more. The B. Y. P. U. calls for an hour and the evening worship adds another hour at least. The spirit of rivalry gets members of the classes to the Sunday school and to the B. Y. P. U. Many then feel that they have gone enough for one day and go home. They cut out church in the morning or evening or both.

"I believe in the B. Y. P. U. and in the Sunday school provided they are made to help and not to hinder the work and worship of the churches of Jesus Christ. A letter in mild protest to my article, 'Why the Morning Service?' enclosed the church circular with the item in it that on the preceding Sunday exactly twice as many people attended Sunday school as church with an urgent appeal that all remain to church. I have another church circular in which the pastor begs the Sunday school to remain to church in the morning and the B. Y. P. U. in the evening. Why 'beg' people to stay if they are already staying? Dr. Broadus used to say 'that what can not be endured must be cured.'"

"Khanto Bela Rai, our Jubilee guest, is going home again this next summer, with the B.A. degree from the University of Nebraska. She has enjoyed her two years of study here, and has an ambition to take some books back for the school library in Midnapore. So, Mr. Editor, I am venturing to write to you, and through you to your constituency, to see if we can not give this Baptist girl of ours a real book shower. She says that besides clean, interesting, wholesome story books, she wants some educational books, those dealing in a small way with hygiene, science, history, and some magazines; some technical books dealing with nature study, carpentry, mechanics and all sorts of applied science. In fact, anything that will interest American boys and girls will be likely to interest the boys and girls of India. Anyone who has a book that is good, and which may be useful, is asked to send it to Mr. Foss of the shipping department of the Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City. Mark it plainly 'For Khanto Bela Rai" and indicate what the value of the book is. The books should all be in hand before the end of June." So writes Mrs. Helen B. Montgomery.

Rev. S. W. Cummings, a member of the board of managers of the Foreign Mission Society, and Rev. Joshua Gravett, a vice-president of the society, have been invited by the board to undertake preaching tours in Europe next summer. The gratifying success which attended the preaching tours in Europe by members of the board of managers last summer has encouraged the board to arrange for similar service in other sections of Europe this year. Doctor Cummings is to devote his time to evangelistic work in Latvia and in Esthonia, where he will be interpreted by Rev. J. A. Frey and Rev. Adam Podin respectively. Mr. Gravett has been asked to make an evangelistic preaching tour in Poland where he probably will be accompanied by Rev. K. W. Strzelec, for several years in charge of the relief work and of other activities in that country. It is hoped that both of these brethren will be able to accept the invitations which have been extended to them.

Our Book Shelf

Dramatization in the Church School, by Elizabeth Erwin Miller. Chicago: University of Chicago Press. $1.25.

Dramatic entertainments in church schools and among young people's organizations are becoming very common. They have often lacked merit because the organizers and leaders have not been, as a rule, trained in dramatic art. This volume will be a great help in the selection of dramas, methods of arrangement and in drilling the actors. It is a better help than anything of the sort we have previously seen. The fact that this issue is its ninth printing is the best evidence of its appreciation.

The Consciousness of Jesus, by W. Chapman. Boston: Pilgrim Press. $1.25

In fine language and pleasing style the author pictures what Jesus thought about his ministry and mission. During the course of this psychological analysis we observe that in the personality of Jesus were great deeps often stirred by strong emotion as his consciousness of God, the eternal Father-King, sent him on a mission to bear the cross for each suffering, sinful son of Adam. History of the Free Churchmen (Called the Brownists, Pilgrim Fathers and Baptists in the Dutch Republic, 1581-1701), by the late J. DeHoop Scheffer, D.D., professor of church history in the Mennonite College and in the University of Amsterdam, Netherlands. Translated from the Dutch by J. DeHoop Scheffer. Ithaca, N. Y.: Andrus and Church.

Here is a rare and valuable publication especially acceptable to the people called Baptist. We are taken back herein to the origin of our New Testament faith in our more modern English churches. Not that there were not Baptist witnesses before; they are to be found in all the earlier records of Protestant faith hid often in caves and holes of the earth. But in these papers we trace out our Baptist testimony as it has found expression in meager conventicles in the days following the Episcopal establishment and fighting its way against many odds has at last been given the large declaration seen in the body called Baptists today, acknowledged to be the most numerous sect of Protestant Christendom at the present time. For these annals we are indebted to the Mennonite historian, J. DeHoop Scheffer of Amsterdam, though his writings were not fully published or released until after his death in 1893. Dr. Griffis has at last, under date of July 3, 1922, collected the data which have been in the hands of the successors of Dr. Scheffer and has submitted them to the religious public. He has cleared up many doubtful points regarding Baptist history in England and the Netherlands, going back to the sixteenth century. The experiences of our early fathers in the faith, their statements and restatements under test and trial, are here to be read. The appendices are exceedingly important. John Smyth's confession of faith may be read with gratitude, seeing its exactness and yet its generous breadth. With it are the thirty-eight articles of the early English branch expressing clear New Testament faith but closing with the humble and generous words "We subscribe to the truth of these articles desiring further information."

God's Will and Our Life, by Charles A. Cook. Philadelphia: The Judson Press. $1.

The title of this volume covers its contents. In not one of its twelve chapters, hardly in a paragraph, does the writer swerve from the title—God's will as a dynamic of life. He treats of the blessedness of the divine will, how to discover it, the profit of accepting and proving loyal to it; the way into its fullest discernment, and finally the rich reward of making the will of God the guide of life. Well-known writers of prose and poetry are liberally quoted to enrich or illustrate a chapter.

The nature of the contents and their discussion classes the book with those of Drummond, Miller, Robertson (F. W.), Matteson, Fosdick and like authors of religious essays. The purpose is to nurture and intensify experimental religious life by adjusting it to the will of God. While the contents are devout in spirit they are not effervescing in pietistic sentiments and expression. They are sane and rational. The flavor of mysticism would be still stronger were it not for the practicalness and human experience manifested. As a literary product it not only escapes criticism, but it is of unusual merit as a book of religious literature. The reviewer covered its 35,000 words at one sitting with unflagging interest. As a thesaurus of inspiring suggestions for thought and devotion, we heartily commend it.

"Purpose in Prayer," by Edward M. Bounds. New York: Fleming H. Revell. $1.25.

Prayer is urged upon the children of God as the one great essential to the development of Christ-like character and the expansion of the kingdom of God. Throughout the thirteen short chapters the reader is conscious of sitting at the feet of one who knows the way to the throne-room of God, and has mastered the secret of obtaining answers to prayer. The book is rich in illustrations of holy men, both ancient and modern, "who, through faith, subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises . . . . and turned to flight the armies of the aliens." The author deals with such vital matters as the conditions necessary to successful praying; the relation of prayer and the closet to personal piety throughout the non-closet hours; the possibility of prayer changing the purpose of God; and hindrances to prayer.

"Being a Preacher," by James I. Vance. New York: Fleming H. Revell. $1.25.

That the holy calling is a poor business as a money-maker the eminent author acknowledges at the outset; but he insists that no calling in all the world furnishes such a fine opportunity for life-investment as the Christian ministry. The preacher's value to the world is seen in that he ministers to the spiritual in human nature, has a line of eternal values, and proclaims a message that saves from sin and transforms human society. In brief he is the man of all men who holds the key to the betterment of the world. What should lie back of the preacher's message is described as the Incarnate Christ, Christian experience, the throne of God, and such sublime moments as Calvary, Pentecost, and the empty tomb. Dr. Vance offers reasons why the preacher should be physically fit, intellectually alert, morally clean, and spiritually sound. Under "The Preacher in Action" the author treats of such matters as gifts and training, style of delivery, hard work, sermon themes, and the preacher's relation to his official board, other denominations, and the missionary enterprise. Throughout the eight chapters Dr. Vance enthusiastically holds up to his readers, whether they be seasoned pastors, students in training, or young men considering the choice of a life-work, the Christian ministry as the most sublime calling open to the sons of men.

Exasperated beyond endurance, he finally put up a sign which read: "If you must pincha de fruit—pincha da cocoanut!"—The Crow's Nest.

A Sunday-school teacher had been impressing upon his pupils the ultimate triumph of goodness over beauty. At the close of a story, in which he flattered himself that his point had been well established, he turned confidently to a ten-year-old pupil and inquired:

"Now, Alice, would you rather be beautiful or good?"

"Well," replied Alice, after a moment's reflection, "I think I'd rather be beautiful—and repent."

"Children," said the Sunday-school teacher, "this picture illustrates today's lesson: Lot was warned to take his wife and daughters and flee out of Sodom. Here are Lot and his daughters, with his wife just behind them: and there is Sodom in the background. Now, has any boy or girl a question to ask before we take up the study of the lesson? Well, Susie?"

"Pleathe, thir," lisped the youngest in the class, "where ith the flea?"

"Are you sure," an anxious patient once asked a physician, "are you sure that I shall recover? I have heard that doctors sometimes give wrong diagnosis and have treated patients for pneumonia who afterwards died of typhoid fever."

"You've been woefully misinformed," replied the medico indignantly. "If I treat a man for pneumonia he dies of pneumonia."—The Crescent.

Climbing Dollar Hill

So day after day, this boy and his sister
Worked hard and worked long to climb "Dollar Hill,"
At the end of a month, eight dollars were given
The Crusaders and their cause, by Lucy and Will.

Neigh! Neigh!

I SAID I'd like to climb Dollar Hill
But perhaps I'd better wait until
I had more money, for usually I'm Poverty-stricken most of the time.
Said the First Crusader's horse to me:
"Neigh! Neigh!
A missionary's salary help to pay."
I know that preachers must be sent abroad into the Orient,
To spread the gospel of love and beauty
But I foolishly said: "'Tis not my duty!"
Sighed the Second Crusader's horse to me: "Neigh! Neigh!
'Tis yours on the sea their way to pay."

The Third and the Fourth horse echoed: "Neigh! Neigh!
'Tis yours their fare on land to defray."
"But I'm not responsible for these rules
And I shan't spend money on mission schools."
The Fifth and Sixth horses smiled: "Neigh! Neigh!
Earn part of that money in the time you might play."
"All right," I said, "but I'll be too poor
To help the sick folks get a cure,"
But the Seventh horse chuckled a soft: "Neigh! Neigh!
Sympathy always finds a way."

And that is how I went over the top,
For when once I got started how could I stop?
For every one of those horses ten
Said "Neigh!" to my "No!" again and again.

—A Friend.

OUR MUSIC CORNER

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

AN ANTHEM CONTEST

The several prize anthem contests conducted by the Lorenz Publishing Company in the past years have been so satisfactory in some of their results, that it was deemed wise to inaugurate another. Announcement of it is hereby made to the subscribers to our various journals, many of whom may be in a position, and are earnestly invited, to enter the contest. Others may know of promising composers who would be glad to enter the contest if their attention were called to its announcement. While we shall make all possible effort to reach the composers ourselves through circulars and through general advertising in the musical journals, we shall greatly appreciate all help given us by our friends to make this contest known to possible music writers. We shall be glad to send to any one interested, our folder giving the formal announcement and the terms of the contest.

There will be three prizes offered. The first prize of $150 will go to the writer of the anthem which is considered by the judges to be the best, irrespective of its type or fitness for one or the other of the journals. The second prize of $100 will go to the writer of the next best anthem, and the third prize of $75 to the writer of the third best.

The competing composer must have his manuscript in our hands not later than July 1, 1923. He may submit any number of unpublished anthems, but his manuscripts must not bear his real name, but a nom de plume by which it may be identified. With each manuscript should be sent a sealed letter giving the name of the anthem, the nom de plume and the real name and address of the composer.

The Lorenz Publishing Company reserves the right to retain and purchase any anthem submitted for the competition but not winning a prize, and upon payment of the sum decided upon by the company as the value of the anthem it shall become the complete property of the company. However, the company will not pay less than $25 for any anthem so retained and any anthem for which the company is unwilling to pay that sum will be returned to the person who submitted it for the competition.

Over and above the unusual financial remuneration which will come to a composer from his prize-winning anthem, there are several special features worthy of mention in the winning of one of these prizes. One is the national recognition as a composer that comes to a prize winner in this contest. In a number of cases in our past contests, such as in those of Mrs. E. L. Ashford and Mr. J. A. Parks, our prize has been the first step in acquiring a national reputation as a composer. Then it is bound to be a matter of deep satisfaction to a composer to know that his anthem will be sung from Maine to California, from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico and in lands across the sea by not less than twenty thousand choir singers and possibly as many as forty thousand within three months of its publication.

To the thousands of choir singers who look to us for their music, this contest will be a matter of keen interest. It will mean the appearance of some unusually choice anthems, and of music from new writers not heretofore represented in our magazines. The Lorenz Publishing Company is now as always "up on its toes," seizing every opportunity to provide the choicest anthem music for our choirs.

In this connection it needs to be said that our editors are always pleased to examine manuscripts from any composer. Even immature compositions are given earnest consideration, and in such cases when the basic theme is worthy, careful and expert arranging and editing are done, and full credit is given the original composer when the selection is published.

MUSIC REVIEW

From G. Schirmer, New York

Preludes and Prieres for Organ—Alkan-Franck
Dramatic Pedal Studies for Organ—MacDougall

Two valuable volumes of practical interest to every organist. The set of pieces by Alkan will meet the desires of many of us who are on the lookout for effective organ music, melodious and fitting for service use. Charles-Henri-Valentin-Alkan, born at Paris, Nov. 30, 1813, and dying there March 29, 1888, was a pupil of Zimmerman at the Conservatoire when but six years old, and won the first piano-prize when only four years older. He is one of those European composers of the nineteenth century to whom lasting fame came not, in spite of superior talent. His piano works are numerous; and many of them, apparently, enjoyed considerable vogue. That such a great musician as Cesar Franck should find so much merit in Alkan's compositions as to transcribe them for organ should prove sufficient to recommend them to present day musicians. Mr. Boyd's very painstaking editing is a feature of this valuable addition to Schirmer's library.

The other item under review is purposed more definitely as study material for the budding organist, or as a tonic for the more mature player. The idea behind this most interesting volume is unique, and one which will appeal to all organ teachers who correctly have regarded the pedals as more than a mere fundamental bass. In his foreword Mr. MacDougall states his case: "The function of the organ pedals is very much like that of the double-basses in the orchestra—to play the fundamental bass-part on which the whole musical structure rests; seldom is it that the pedal or the string basses are assigned important melodic passages. In the present studies the parts given to the feet are either well-defined melodies or are melodically interesting. They will therefore stimulate the player's interest in pedal playing and, through the assignment to the feet of those climacteric and dramatic passages usually (and quite naturally) given to the hands, give him a grip of the pedals not otherwise obtainable."

We would add that melodic pedal passages are now commonly appearing in modern compositions; and, generally, because of bad pedal habits which this book will help to correct, are being badly performed.

The Easter Sunday offerings, morning and evening, of First Church, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Rev. Clarence Hill Frank, pastor, totaled $1,671.25.

Rev. Alexander Henderson, Waterville, Me., who was state director of religious education activities for the Baptist Convention for several years, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Church, Fairfield, Me.

Rev. Chas. E. Dougan, who recently resigned his pastorate of the Baptist Church at Cornwall, Ont., Can., to come to the United States, will be free for supply work after April 15. On March 25 he preached both morning and evening at Tabernacle Church, Chicago. The following three Sundays were taken by the Marquette Manor Church. Mr. Dougan is a graduate of McMaster University, Toronto. His address is 218 N. Harlem Ave., Oak Park, Ill. Telephone Oak Park 3898-R.

The Baptist Minister's Conference of Chicago will meet Apr. 23 at the new Oak Park Church building, as a part of the dedication week program. The conference members will be guests of the church. The address will be given by Prof. J. Heinrichs of the Northern Theological Seminary. His subject will be "Interpreting the Bible to the People of India.

The regular monthly meeting of the Woman's Baptist Mission Union (Chicago Association) was held Apr. 10 in the Englewood Church, Chicago, with the newly-elected president, Mrs. F. S. Osgood, in the chair. The meeting was attended by 500 or more women, with fifty-two churches represented. Mrs. E. H. Silverthorn, one of the national secretaries of the Presbyterian board, spoke on the need for leaders in missionary work, emphasizing the fulfilling of this need by the summer schools of missions. In a short memorial for Dr. Judson D. Thomas, Dr. Smith T. Ford spoke feelingly of his deep sense of loss in Doctor Thomas' death. Mrs. Clayton Eulette, of the national board of the W. A. B. F. M. S., in an address during the afternoon session, chose for her subject "The Business of Being a Pilot." The day was closed with a devotional period led by Rev. Charles R. Osborn, pastor of the Morgan Park Church.

Dr. J. H. Shakespeare, secretary of the Baptist World Alliance, has written requesting that the names of American Baptist delegates to the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm in July, be sent to him immediately. The Northern Baptist committee to promote attendance at Stockholm is now making a list of Northern Baptist delegates, and it requests that those who have not already advised the committee of their intention to attend the meeting at Stockholm will send their names at once to the Baptist World Alliance Committee, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City. These names will be forwarded to Dr. Shakespeare and will be held as well at the office of the committee for use in sending out special information a little later regarding registration of delegates, hotel accommodations and other matters. Leaders of special tours to Europe in connection with the meeting at Stockholm are uged to send in the names of members of their parties in order to insure a complete list.

Shall We Make Another Reduction?

In May, 1922, the Foreign Mission Board began another year of work on an expenditure of 25 per cent less than that of 1921. This involved

1. Retaining at home missionaries who otherwise would have returned to their fields.
2. Reducing the number of newly appointed missionaries to be sent as reenforcements.
3. Discontinuing relief in devastated Europe beyond that provided by specific offerings.
4. Reducing the work of missionaries and native churches, thereby retarding the work of grace that might have been reported this year.

Why was this necessary? The denomination had failed to contribute all that was needed to meet the expenditures of that year, thereby adding $152,071.80 to the deficit of the Society, increasing it to $914,262.50.

Another fiscal year comes to an end on April 30. Must the Board of Managers again have a special meeting and project the work for next year on the basis of another reduction? You can answer this question.

To pay salaries of missionaries; appropriations for mission work, including care of property, to cover all expenditures projected for this year, and to pay interest on bank indebtedness, requires a total income of $1,507,890.00. Up to March 1, the Treasurer had received $787,226.00, leaving a balance to be secured by April 30 of $720,664.00.

YOUR HELP IS NEEDED

The Foreign Mission Society faces an emergency more serious than you as a Baptist can adequately appreciate. With open doors on all fields, with the world ready for the Gospel as never before, with an evangelistic movement gathering momentum, with more than 12,000 converts baptized in 1921 and the prospect of a similar record for 1922, there is grave danger that this work of grace may be retarded. The Board is confident that you do not wish to see this foreign mission program curtailed. Will you substantiate that confidence?

The Last Call

"The King's business requires haste"

IN behalf of our
Seven national societies and boards
Thirty-six state conventions
Seventeen standard city mission societies
Fifty-two schools and colleges
And other organizations

We earnestly appeal to each church to put forth its utmost endeavor during the remaining days of April to pay this year its full share of the $10,000,000 needed to carry on the work of our denomination.

Each church is asked to

1. Collect the amount due on pledges.

2. Secure generous gifts from individuals who have not previously made pledges.

3. Solicit "over and above" thank offerings from those who have been specially prospered.

4. Forward all funds to the state director of promotion by the evening of April 30.

Fresh from the Field

All members of the senior class at the Baptist Academy in Ningpo, East China, are Christians, according to a report from Principal F. C. Wilcox. In December twenty-one students were baptized.

The first play to be given in MacLeish Hall of the First Church, Evanston, Ill., was "Mr. Pim Passes By" which was presented by the senior B. Y. P. U. The proceeds will be used for missionary enterprises.

According to government figures, the people of the United States spend two hundred million dollars a year for ice cream and confectionery, while only ten million dollars is spent in saving the starving people of the Near East.

At a recent meeting of the representatives of the Methodist Book Concern a dividend of $300,000 was turned over to the denomination for the benefit of retired ministers, and the widows and children of ministers. This represents the profits on their publishing business.

The first publication in preparation for the centennial celebration of the Publication Society has been issued. It is entitled "A Golden Century," is profusely illustrated and gives an interesting description of the society's work. The society will celebrate its one hundredth anniversary next spring.

There were 130 conversions at Santiago, Cuba, as a result of the evangelistic meetings under the direction of Rev. and Mrs. F. J. Peters. These two evangelists are now in Camaguey. Since the beginning of the year, 900 conversions have been reported.

The American delegates who attend the World Alliance at Stockholm should plan to arrive there in time to participate in the celebration which Swedish Baptists are arranging for the observance of the seventy-fifth anniversary of their work. This celebration will take place on Thursday, July 19. The First Baptist Church was founded seventy-five years ago and the work has grown until there are today more than 700 churches with a membership of more than 60,000.

The fellowship committee of the commission for relief in Belgium educational foundation recently awarded six fellowships covering a year's study in a Belgium university, according to an announcement by Perrin C. Galpin, secretary of the foundation. Thirty Belgian graduate students will enter American universities next autumn under the foundation's exchange plan. "The most important development of the year," Mr. Galpin explained, "was the agreement to assist Brussels University. Through generous help received from the city of Brussels, the Rockefeller Foundation, and many Belgians, buildings and equipment for the polytechnic schools and the medical schools are being provided. Buildings for administration and library purposes, for the housing of its faculties of law and philosophy, and for dormitories for men and women students were required to round out the plans for the creation of a new university center. These buildings, together with the land, will be provided as a gift to the foundation at a cost not to exceed 15,000,000 francs."

Rev. B. F. White, pastor of St. John's Church, Indianapolis, Ind., died recently. Funeral services were held at the Second Church, Rev. B. F. J. Westbrook officiating.

Fifty persons received the hand of fellowship at the First Church, Denver, Colo., Sunday, April 8. The Easter offering amounted to $1,500. Rev. Alfred H. C. Morse is pastor.

A conference on international relations was held in Pittsburgh, Pa., April 16, under the auspices of the World Alliance for International Friendship, the Federal Council of Churches and other cooperating bodies.

The annual meeting of the Ministers Aid Society of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin for the election of officers and the transaction of other necessary business, will be held at the Ministers Home, Fenton, Mich., Wednesday, May 2, at 9 a. m. The annual meeting of the trustees will follow. Churches contributing to the work of the society are entitled to send delegates to the annual meeting.

Senator Borah has submitted the following resolution to Congress: That it is the view of the Senate of the United States that war between nations should be outlawed as an institution or means for the settlement of international controversies by making it a public crime under the law of nations and that every nation should be encouraged by solemn agreement or treaty to bind itself to indict and punish its own international war breeders or instigators. . . That a judicial substitute for war should be created in the form or nature of an international court, modeled on our Federal Supreme Court.

Harp Evangelist Thompson of Waterloo, Ia., has spent this month with the Central and Harvard Park churches of Springfield, Ill.

A unanimous call has been extended by the First Church, Lansing, Mich., to Rev. Ralph W. Hobbs of Fargo, N. D. It is expected that he will accept the call and begin his work in the early summer. He will find a great field for service.

Licensed to preach seventy-nine years ago—that is the record of Rev. Z. A. Colestock who recently celebrated the ninety-ninth anniversary of his birth, in the Colestock Home for Aged People at Quincy, Pa. He is the oldest United Brethren minister in the United States.

Every Baptist in a church connected with the Northern Baptist Convention who proposes to go to the Baptist World Alliance meeting at Stockholm, July 21-27, 1923, should have credentials. Write to Rev. W. C. Bitting, 5109 Waterman Avenue, St. Louis, Mo., who has been authorized to issue these credentials, and enclose stamped and addressed envelope, and also give the name of the Baptist church of which you are a member.

There has been placed in the north window of Calvary Church, Minneapolis, a memorial tablet honoring Rev. Amory Gale, the father of Deacon A. F. Gale. This memorial, which stood for many years in a window of Central Church, has been transferred by Mr. Gale's daughters. Rev. Amory Gale was the pioneer Baptist missionary of Minnesota. In 1857 he became the pastor of the First Baptist Church of Minneapolis and the next year was appointed by the Home Mission Society as state missionary for Minnesota. He then organized the Minnesota State Convention and for sixteen years, through the Civil War, Indian massacres and financial hardships, carried on this work, in which he is said to have organized two-thirds of the Baptist churches of Minnesota. He died in Joppa, Nov. 25, 1874, while on a visit to the Holy Land and was buried there.

At the annual meeting of the Boston Baptist Social Union in Ford Hall, Monday evening, the following were chosen as officers for the coming year: President, John F. Rood, Malden; first vice president, Frederick M. Sears, Boston; second vice-president, J. Arthur Sparrow, Wollaston; treasurer, William O. Abbott, Wakefield; secretary, Harry A. Gilman, Roslindale; directors, Silas C. Bentley, Brookline; Joseph Clench, Dorchester; Elbridge G. Davis, Malden; G. Lewis Foster, Belmont; Ray C. Hopkins, Lynn; Sidney P. Meleney, Newton Centre; Alton R. Miller, Brookline; Charles H. Tozier, Somerville; Arthur W. Hopkins, Brookline and Arthur S. Pevear, Cambridge; members of the Christian work committee for three years, Franklin P. Daly, Boston; William E. Perry, Brookline; J. Victor Day, Melrose; Arthur E. Gates, Winchester; Leslie Langill, Charlestown; DeWitt G. Wilcox, Newton Centre; H. N. Lathrop, Brookline; trustees for three years, Henry W. Newhall, Brookline; Charles W. Bailey, Wollaston; representative to the Boston Baptist Bethel City Mission Society, Wiliam E. Macurda, Bedford; Guy T. Mitchell, Melrose. The union has now 345 members and twenty-seven applicants for membership are on the waiting list.

An Up-to-the-minute Message

BY JOHN MASON PECK

TRANSMITTED BY L. C. BARNES

"Among the evils to which we as a nation are peculiarly exposed are the lust of gain— the love of excitement—lawlessness — superstition — skepticism, under the mask of philosophical liberalism, but filled with intense hatred to Bible Christianity. From these evils physical means cannot save us. We may construct canals and railroads, and increase the facilities of inter-communication—our commerce may whiten every sea—caloric may drive our machinery—the forked lightning may convey intelligence to every city of the land—science may open all the stores of nature, and yet the nation may sink with its own depravity. Education cannot save us. Colleges may be multiplied—schools for the intellect may exist in every hamlet—and literature may pour its treasures at our feet, and yet ruin overtake us if we are destitute of the moral principles taught nowhere else but in God's blessed book. The development of the resources of the country—the success, or the eventual triumph of any one political party—the increase of population—or the extension of territorial domain—cannot work out our emancipation from sin. And yet the means of our preservation and salvation are within reach. They are to be found in the simple principles of the gospel of Christ. The object is to be gained by the very simple measure of making the people of our country a sober, thinking, reading, praying, and truly religious people. It is quite possible to provide these means for the whole population of our country, and for all who may immigrate from foreign shores."—Publication Society's Annual Report, 1845.

Liberty or Editorial Death

Editors are mere humans and as such entitled to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. Editorial life does not count for much, and in the pursuit of editorial happiness we usually find ourselves barely within sight of our quest. It is liberty—the opportunity for freedom of speech and freedom of press, that makes an editor's calling life at all. On the editorial page you will find how we feel about this priceless editorial possession. Without liberty an editor is dead while he lives.

We Fear He Has Been Fleeced

A letter from Dr. O. R. McKay, of the Indiana Baptist Convention, should serve as a warning to all of our readers. We have no itinerant canvassers. Our agents are pastors and interested members of the churches who render voluntary, unpaid service. The letter follows: "Before I got around to answer your letter a young man called at my home and represented himself as the agent of the Pictorial Review of New York City. He said that he was an agent of a large number of papers and magazines. Among the list was THE BAPTIST. He showed a small pamphlet catalog of the periodicals for which he was soliciting subscribers and renewals. Seeing a copy of THE BAPTIST on the table he picked it up and noticed that the subscription had just expired. He begged Mrs. McKay to renew through him. I write to know if this is real business or have we been fleeced? The young man signed his (supposed) initials to the receipt. This was not discovered until he had gone. He represented himself as an injured soldier. We hold his receipt for $2.40. How about it?" Sorry—awfully sorry, but the only comfort we can give is to say that if you will forward us $2.50 (Beware of reduced rates!), we will extend your subscription date a full year. Our "soldier" is doing "real business" for himself, for he has not cashed in on your account. Can you beat it?

We Can Afford to Let the Knockers Knock

Rev. Lester B. Mathewson, of Hayden, Ariz., writes: "Enclosed find etc. . . I have no knocks for THE BAPTIST but a great deal of praise. Only I wish you could be accorded the privilege of knocking the knockers with greater emphasis; yet, after all, I suppose the very best treatment to accord them is silence. That hurts them worse than the knocking. For its virility and veracity and vivacity, I am very grateful and appreciative. I honor you very much for the refusal to stoop to the low plain of cheap, and I would call it un-Christian, criticisms that some of your contemporaries give you. I could name them but I dislike to use the names as they leave a bad taste in my mouth, and I never did like such tastes. The part that grieves me is that they go so far out of the way to create discord, manifestly, again and again, either deliberately or ignorantly—take your pick—misrepresenting what THE BAPTIST says in its columns. The way I look at it is this, we ought to be willing to go out of our way a considerable distance to preserve concord and to be unwilling to stir from our way a thousandth of a millimeter to create discord. And that's that!"

The success of the first special vacation course for pastors, teachers and Christian workers, has led the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, to announce a similar course from July 5—Aug. 3.

Mr. and Mrs. John Imrie, evangelistic singers, held special pre-Easter meetings with the church at St. Louis, Mo., of which Rev. H. C. Combs is pastor. There were forty additions to the membership. Mr. and Mrs. Imrie may be addressed at Topeka, Kan.

Boys and girls serving the church is one of the aims of the Unitarian Church of Quincy, Mass. At the close of the year the boy or girl who has best served the church will be presented with a silver cup provided by Thomas S. Burgin, a layman in the church. Rev. Fred A. Weil is the minister.

There seems to be a shortage of copies of the American revision of the Japanese English New Testaments, according to Miss Esther McCollough, a worker at the Japanese Woman's Home in Seattle. This is the property of the Woman's Home Mission Society and Miss McCollough writes enthusiastically about the enlarging spiritual interest among the Japanese people in that section.

In behalf of the board of Managers Katherine S. Westfall executive secretary announces the forty-sixth annual meeting of the Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society will be held in Convention Hall, Steel Pier, Atlantic City, N. J., May 24, 1923, at 9:30 a. m., and on such other days as may be necessary during the following week. The annual report of the board will be presented, officers and members of the board of managers elected, and such other business transacted as may be presented to the meeting.

Five hundred Church of England clergy have presented the following memorial to Ramsay MacDonald: "Sir: We, being priests of the Church of England, who have followed with deep sympathy the recent struggle of labor to secure more effective representation in parliament, respectfully offer our sincere congratulations to you and the 144 members of parliament who, under your leadership, now constitute the official opposition, a development which carries with it momentous and far-reaching consequences to the nation. As a result of this we look forward to the more serious consideration and more adequate treatment of the pressing problems and difficulties of our time, which such a combination of talent, earnestness and first-hand experience will certainly secure. Our particular calling, with its pastoral experience, gives us direct knowledge of the sufferings and deprivations, mental, moral and physical, to which millions of our fellow citizens are subjected in our present social and industrial order, and to find remedy for which is the chief purpose and aim of the labor movement. It is, therefore, a matter of great satisfaction to us that this increased opportunity is now open before you in the great assembly of the nation, and we shall support actively, in whatever ways are legitimately open to us, the efforts you assuredly will make for the spiritual and economic emancipation of the people."

Dr. W. W. Keen has written an attractive and interesting booklet on the life and achievements of Louis Pasteur in connection with the centenary of the birth of Pasteur.

Sir Alfred Yarrow, eighty-one years old and owner of the great ship-yards in England, recently gave 100,000 pounds to the Royal Society for Scientific Research.

The New Christian center at Indiana Harbor, known as Katherine House, is becoming well known, especially among the foreign families in the community. Many of them have come to explain the location of their own homes by saying that they are "so many blocks from Katherine House."

The International Missionary Union invites all foreign missionaries on furlough or retired, and missionary candidates under appointment to the foreign field to the fortieth annual meeting, as guests of the sanitarium and village of Clifton Springs, N. Y., from May 30—June 4. The only expense is the registration fee of $1; this can be paid at the time of the meeting. Those planning to attend communicate with the secretary, Rev. Herbert F. Laflamme, 71 West 23rd street, New York City.

As Jesus Taught

DEAR FATHER, thou hast sent thy Son
To teach us what is right,
And may we all be following
His blessed, guiding light.
He taught us how that we should live,
Life's happiness, to find,
By following the Golden Rule
And always being kind.

Then may we follow in his steps
And do as Jesus would;
Then soon our souls will cease to wish
For aught but what is good.
We, greatest happiness, will find
In helping other souls
And teaching all mankind to seek Life's highest, noblest goals.

Responding to an appeal from Dr. A. C. Cree, secretary of the executive board of the farmers of that state have agreed to plant a special plat of ground this year, the proceeds of such planting to be donated to religious work. Many of the farmers announce they have set apart their choicest acres for this religious enterprise and they will pray as well as work for success.

It has been arranged that the secretary of the Northern Baptist Convention, Rev. W. C. Bitting, 5109 Waterman Avenue, St. Louis, Mo., should issue credentials to all Northern Baptist delegates to the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm. Individual delegates, therefore, are requested to communicate promptly with Dr. Bitting, in each case sending him postage for use in forwarding the credentials. The registration fee of five Swedish kronen ($1.35, American money) may be paid at the time of registration of the delegate at Stockholm.

Rev. E. R. Brown, general superintendent of missionary work among Mexicans in southwest, reports gratifying progress. Last year 431 persons were baptized as compared with 390 during the preceding year, while $6,361 was contributed compared with $3,737 a year ago.

The Santurce Baptist Church in Porto Rico, has had a year of remarkable progress. Building and equipment have been outgrown and the Sunday school has more than doubled in attendance and in enrolment. Miss Lydia Huber, a missionary of the Woman's Home Society, reports that on a very rainy Sunday 105 children drenched to the skin arrived in time for the services.

Jamshedpur, known as the Pittsburgh of India, is one of the new stations opened during the period of the New World Movement. Here, because of the plant of the Tata Iron and Steel Company, a great city has sprung up, one of the most modern and up-to-date in the Indian Empire, with a population of 100,000. Baptists saw the possibilities for work in such a city and in 1919 opened a mission station. A Baptist church will soon be erected in this industrial center where people of different languages will mingle freely. Missionary Zo D. Browne, who is in charge of the work, recently wrote: "Last night, Jan. 31, 1923, the building fund committee of the Indian church met. They decided to ask each earning member to give one month's salary for this new building, and to pay it within a year if possible. This group of men, some getting $12, some $15, some $20 and one $80 a month, started a subscription paper and pledged themselves to give one month's salary each and from that meeting they are going out to every Indian Christian in Jamshedpur and ask each one to give one month's salary." Thus the Indian Christians are cooperating with American Baptists in financing the contribution of this church.

The magazine "Foreign Affairs" has now brought out three numbers, the current issue dated March 15, and gives promise of exercising influence in the development of opinion on matters relating to foreign policy. The magazine is published by the council of foreign relations. Its editor is Archibald Cary Coolidge, its managing editor Hamilton Fish Armstrong; on its advisory board are George W. Wickersham, John W. Davis, Pres. Harry A. Garfield, and other men of note and ability. The magazine was described editorially when it appeared as a review "whose dominant purpose is to promote the discussion of current questions of international interest and to serve as the natural medium for the expression of the best thought, not only of this country, but of Europe when it wishes to address itself on these topics to the American public." The magazine has "taken over the inheritance" of the Journal of International Relations. It is announced that the articles which appear in it "do not represent any consensus of beliefs;" some writers "will flatly disagree with others." Declining responsibility on the part of the magazine for the views which appear in its pages, the editors add: "What it does accept is the responsibility for giving them a chance to appear there." Each issue of the magazine contains articles which are indispensable sources of information for students of foreign policy.

A Hundred Millions in Experience

DIRECTOR Aitchison when asked at the Chicago laymen's banquet recently if he thought that we would raise the hundred million dollars, answered, with his rare smile, "Well, in any event, we shall get a hundred million dollars' worth of experience out of it." We believe he is right.

Our lawyer friends have a term which has come down from the days of Blackstone and Coke or farther. It is incorporeal hereditaments and it means invisible and intangible value or rights which may be passed on by inheritance, e. g., a title or a right of way. Experience is such a value, and the experience our denomination is getting out of our great campaign will be in itself a vast and permanent possession to be passed on to our successors. Intangible but very real, it may be called in a sense an incorporeal hereditament.

By the way that term "experience" is mishandled in a slanderous way. An action for libel would almost lie. We are wont to quote the old proverb, "Experience is a dear school, but fools will learn in no other" as though no wise men were grateful alumni of that alma mater. We chuckle or ruefully grimace (according as we or some one else has been the goat) over some experience with blue-sky stock in which good hard dollars have been swapped for experience whose only value is that of burnt fingers. Experience too often carries only stern lights and none at the bow; it so often comes too late to be of use. A gaunt mountaineer who came to one of our Baptist academies said, as he began to realize the opportunities he had let slip, "Ef I'd a knowed then what I know now I wouldn't a' did like I done!" And the negro given an opportunity to speak just before his execution said, "Folks, I want to just say to you-all that this here is certainly going to be a warning to me."

But experience is not always or predominantly in the nature of a bad bargain. Why speak so often of sad experience and so seldom of glad experience, rich experience. It is experience that is sought first in securing a teacher or an employe. Experience commands the biggest part of the biggest salaries. Perhaps we should say it does so in everything but the gospel ministry. If a young man could receive a gift of $100,000, 90 per cent of it in experience, he would be luckier than to get it all in cash.

And so Dr. Aitchison is right. Our hundred million campaign will be richly worth a hundred million to the denomination both for its positive and its negative values in experience; in ascertained facts bearing upon all our future; in its demonstration of unsuspected possibilities of cooperative work and large giving; in the campaigning itself which has changed us from raw recruits into seasoned veterans. The actual results thus far have been noteworthy. "On the March" revealed astonishing growth in converts and in constructive work at home and abroad despite the failure as yet to reach the full goal, and the inequalities and disarrangement due to the meeting of some objectives by special gifts while others are still in need.

Moreover, there is a body of invaluable data acquired for future need—data which we did not have at the beginning of the campaign. For the great task of 1920-1924 there was no precedent in our own history or in that of any other denomination. When it came to making out allotments to the states there were data of previous giving to our national societies and certain factors regarding the wealth of the denomination, church property, current expenses and the like; but there were no data applying to the raising of more than thirty millions of dollars from the denomination as a whole for education, since money had always been sought by each school from its own constituency. The inclusion of local or sectional objects, such as state conventions and city mission societies, in the general budget had to be treated empirically, for there were no data that seemed to be applicable. But when the denomination comes to reshape its plans for the years following 1924 it will have a store of invaluable statistical data on all of these points. Its experience, if rightly used, ought to repay the anxieties of the present campaign. Edison said when commiserated on the failure of numerous experiments on a certain problem, "Why, man, I haven't failed. I have found out seventy-two ways in which the thing can't be done!"

OUR experience has shown the necessity of denominational solidarity of a great undertaking, but has proved beyond question the denomination's ability to accomplish such a task if united. It shows now that no paper program, however excellent, can be sure of enlisting an ultra-independent denomination like ours, especially if there be distrust, however baseless, of the methods or motives of leaders; and that even with faultless leadership and methods unquestioned there must be a heavy allowance made for the uninformed, the uninterested and the unable.

But we shall surely have our hundred millions in gilt-edged (and sharp-edged) experience; we cannot, however, cash in on this experience in time to pay debts for 1923 or avoid disaster in 1924. To provide for that we have just three days.

A Spiritual Convention

THE 1923 sessions of the Northern Baptist Convention will soon be assembling in Atlantic City. We wonder if the widely scattered constituency realizes the importance of these gatherings? During that series of meetings, reports of the past twelve months of work will be made to the delegates and through them to the local churches. These reports need to be packed full of lucid facts and clear-cut deduction. If we must account for a failure let us do it in all sincerity; and if, as we hope, a measure of real achievement is to be reported, let us not waste words or time in foolish self-esteem, but let us use the measure of success in the coming year for the purpose of teaching us how to do better and bigger things for our Lord and Master.

The delegates at Atlantic City will also be called upon to consider the report of the committee on future denominational program. While we regret that this report will probably not be given to the churches prior to the sessions of the convention, we hope that ample time will be given for a full discussion of all that it contains and involves. We must not adopt it in haste and repent at leisure, but, if necessary, everything else ought to be swept aside so that prayerfully and carefully it might be considered in all its bearings upon our future.

We have debts to face and there should be no whining as we confront those obligations and plan how we can quickly meet them. All of us need to remember that the denominational agencies only undertook a scale of work that was duly authorized and even when they were thus authorized to undertake a certain scale of expenditures, with great wisdom, as it turns out, they did not enlarge the work to the point where they were authorized to do so. We shall be called upon to authorize a budget of expense for the next year's operations. Fear must not grip us at that point. To cut down operating expenses is often to reduce efficiency and limit production. We need, however, to safeguard the expenditure of the expense fund so that high rents or extravagance do not waste the money.

What has all this to do with a spiritual convention, you ask? Just this: That is spiritual which is rightly related to God in the name of Jesus. God is a God of order, of efficiency, of power, of common sense and of victory. We hope, therefore, that the delegates will come to Atlantic City from a place of prayer and in a prayerful frame of mind.

We hope that, in honor preferring one another, we shall honestly seek all possible light and counsel from the ranks of our democracy in order to keep close to each other and to God. We hope, further, that private personal intercession and public prayer may continuously be made to God so that sweetness, lucidity, vision, courage, self-surrender and unanimity will characterize all our councils. This, under the leading of God, will surely give us a spiritual convention.

The Last Call

HAVE you read the cover page? Have you attempted to assess the interests bound up in the national societies and boards, the state conventions, city mission societies and other organized Baptist works? How much poorer would the world be if on May 1 all of the activities of teachers, ministers in mission churches, missionaries and social workers were to cease?

But these activities have already been curtailed. If we fail to do our full duty as individuals and churches they will of necessity be further reduced. A careful, prayerful carrying out of the suggestions on the front page would send us bounding into the tasks of the new fiscal year with a hopefulness born of a satisfying experience. We can raise the full $10,000,000. It is not a question of ability but of willingness. Will you hear and heed the last call?

Wanted—the Facts

FOR many long years an unholy fear has prevented the local church and often the denomination from having the facts concerning its life and action.

It is our observation that the average local church is neither afraid nor unwilling to face the facts revealed by a proper study of its life and the conduct of its affairs. The same can be said of that larger unit called the denomination.

It must be remembered, however, that even a surgeon can do his work in a gentle way and there is an unwise way in which to inform a congregation that the building is on fire.

"Passing the buck" is a common American political game, but we church people do not even get that far for we have become expert in passing along "a blind eye." In that way the real conditions are not realized by those concerned.

The local church pats the pastor on the back and cries aloud, "All is well." Then the pastor pats the church on the back and echoes, "All is well." Neither church nor pastor have faced the facts; they have used "the blind eye," for the truth is that all is not well until the whole membership is adequately producing the results of Christian living and applying those results to their situation so that a whole big world is feeling the effects.

The local church is helped quite often in its use of "the blind eye" by some one from the outside who comes in to get something out of the church. Too often the outsider pats the church and pastor on the back, glosses over the facts and thereby helps to confirm present conditions. True praise is always wise and proper but flattery is very dangerous. Many a local church dawdles along with a part of the membership doing a worth-while thing, but most of them doing very little or nothing; and Zion is at ease. In the wider denominational circles the same conditions rule.

"What would you do about it?"

We believe the time has come to get the facts and face them.

Some time ago we sat through a whole day of conferences when the actual facts of the local situation were convincingly brought home to the workers and pastor of the church. They winced, but they did not deny. They were conscience striken but they did not protest or excuse. Finally they realized the truth and then they said, "Show us the way out." At last accounts the working group under the leadership of the pastor was hard at the task of producing different and better conditions.

As a denomination we set out to raise a hundred million dollars for all our enterprises beyond the local church. We subscribed about half the amount and are paying less than the amount that should be produced year by year on the basis of the pledges.

Perhaps we have done well, in spots. Perhaps we have done well, that is, some few may have done their best.

Instead of patting each other on the back, let us get the facts. Let us face the facts behind our failure to date to do what we have undertaken to do for our Lord. The facts, yes, let us have them, and then honestly set to work to bring a real success in the coming weeks and year.

The Bewildered Church

MANY a church is bewildered today by changes in its environment. The neighborhood has changed; foreigners are around. What can be done? Some churches conquer their environment and why should not they do it? Christians are bewildered by what is denied—things they hold sacred. But denial is cheap and easy. It takes no thought and no study. We do not have to have musicians who play in discords and sing off the key.

Parents are confused. The new appeals to their children, the low ideals of their playmates, the jazz strains in their daily life, the social confusion all make parents stagger. And yet each generation of homes has had to conquer such thrusts at its sons and daughters. The church, the human life and the home are the spiritual comrades that must endure as seeing the Lord who is invisible, but invincible also. Any church, Christian and home that seeks first the kingdom of God and his righteousness will conquer all environments and all enemies.

The Earthy Image

IT is not amazingly strange that people outside of the church wonder at the inconsistencies of church members.

We sometimes criticise, we judge, we condemn, as though those are not the things Christ warned us to avoid.

We talk glibly of certain sins of omission or commission that other people or churches have until a conclusion to the whole recital might properly be the prayer of the Pharisee.

It is perfectly possible that God is able to take care of all the doctrines—with their disciples—in the world, anyway, and that he would bless us even more, were we in the simplest way to love and serve and have abiding faith in him.

There is really not enough time for Christians this side of eternity to make sufficient study of the various creeds and people so that we might be competent to judge, had we been made their censor. It takes a lifetime for the most of us to get our own self and our own particular church so Christ-like that we may be an example for others, "in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity."

Wants Censorship Reestablished

IN the Open Forum you will find a letter from an official of one of our denominational societies concerning an editorial and an article which recently appeared in THE BAPTIST. This letter deserves a careful reading.

When a misstatement of fact is made, we are always glad to make correction. We have re-read the publicity articles, "On the March" and the display advertisements, and we have received the same general impression as that stated in the editorial in question. Our work has been greatly reduced; missionaries on furlough are being kept at home; new missionaries cannot be appointed; allowances for work on the several fields are being reduced. Perhaps technically we were wrong, but actually we are right in the position that the work is slowed up all along the line and languishing in some places because of our failure to complete our financial task.

This letter, however, contains a far more serious question than that of the details of a particular case. It calls for the establishment, or better, reestablishment, of secretarial censorship. The custom to which the letter refers may have been in effect at some time, but it certainly has not been operative during the past seven years so far as the Standard and THE BAPTIST are concerned.

We believe that the Baptist constituency of the North has the right to see some things directly through the eyes of those who are at work on the firing line without having all the material "scrutinized" by officialdom! The suggestion in this letter brings us face to face with a genuine peril to Baptist democracy. It is entirely possible for good men and women through years of service in churches, conventions, societies and boards, to come to the place where they speak of "our" church, "our" society with the implication of ownership which leaves unofficial Baptists wondering where they come in. We do not believe that the adoption of this suggestion would be good for our organized work. It would mean that common Baptists, dependent as they are upon denominational journals for the facts concerning the work, would be able to see only what in the judgment of officialdom it is good for them to see. In order to thrive, Baptists must breathe the air of freedom.

Of course, if Northern Baptists so desire, we can send down to New York our articles and editorials which have to do with the work of any particular society for "scrutiny" before they are given to the brotherhood. We feel, however, that in justice to the churches, in justice to our missionaries who primarily represent our churches and not the foreign societies as such, in justice to THE BAPTIST itself, we should frown upon even the suggestion of such a policy. If our missionaries are the right kind of folks, we want to hear from them and their work. If they are not, they ought to be recalled.

No, until we receive peremptory orders from the constituency, we do not propose to send either our articles or our editorials to be passed upon in New York.

Petr Chelcicky, an Unknown Baptist Reformer of Czecho-Slovakia in the Fifteenth Century

By Josef Novotny

In a letter to the editor of "The Baptist," Carter Helm Jones writes: I enclose an article from my friend, Rev. Josef Novotny of Prague, Czecho-Slovakia. He is the son of the founder of Baptist work in Bohemia and is himself a brilliant and efficient man. After more than a year spent in this country, he will return in June to work among his countrymen. This article grew out of a request of mine, in an interview we had in New York City last winter. I asked him to tell me something about Chelcicky, whom all the Czecho-Slovak Baptists regard with beautiful veneration. His response was both eloquent and interesting; so I suggested that he write a brief article so that we might add a new name in America to our Baptist Hall of Fame. I send it to you just as he wrote it. Mr. Novotny is still president of the Czecho-Slovak Baptist Union, the general Baptist board charged with the educational and missionary interests of the new republic.

As a golden thread there goes through history the cloud of witnesses and "protestants" against the misuse of the New Testament baptism. It is only natural that Czecho-Slovakia, the religious country "par excellence" should have a "lion's share" among them. It is a historical fact that the "Unitas Fratrum," the cradle of the Moravian Brethren Church, the "most beautiful blossom on the tree of Christianity" in the first period, and as long as this church was true to its first love, knew the believers' immersion only. Now, the spiritual father, the founder of this church, was Petr Chelcicky. (Pronounced Khalchetzke.)

Did Not Write About Himself

History knows very few facts about Chelcicky's life, as the only historical sources are his writings in which he, because of his modesty, does not write about himself. We only know that he was born about 1390 and that he died about 1460—thus living in the time of John Hus. He was born in the south of Bohemia not far from the birthplace of John Hus and John Zizka (the military leader of the Husites.) He was a peasant without academical education, but an original thinker and the greatest philosopher we had. He himself professes that he knew Latin very little. And this was to his advantage, as the Latin language at that time spoiled the style of many. And because he did not study in the university his thinking was not influenced by the dead scholastics. Besides, at that time the disciples were very much scattered and many students' work only copied their masters. Chelcicky was spared these dangers.

The Writings of Chelcicky

The importance of Chelcicky lies in his writings. He wrote many books, but two of them especially are of great interest to us. The "Postilla" (sermons) and "The Net of the True Faith."

Three views, as shown in his writings, will interest Baptists. In his books, he urged believers' baptism, he is the author of modern separation of state and church, and he is the apostle of pacifism.

"Only grown-up believers ought to be baptised" are his own words. And by this belief Chelcicky influenced the "Unitas Fratrum" so that they practiced believers' immersion in the first period of their glorious history.

Poison Poured into the Church

In his book "The Net of the True Faith," Chelcicky says literally that the Christian church suffered the greatest blow when at the time of Emperor Constantine the church was connected with the state. "Thus poison was poured in the holy church" are his own words.

Chelcicky lived in the time when Zizka defended the Husitic faith by means of arms, and although the whole nation backed Zizka, Chelcicky opposed him because of his views. "God did not take back his commandment 'thou shalt not kill.' We have, therefore, no right to make an exception." And he kept this commandment to the end. He opposed every force—murder, wars, capital punishment. "The words and example of Christ compel us to love the enemy, not to hate him. Do not obey the enemy of divine truth, but to his force do not answer with force." But Chelcicky shows the immoral effects of the war as well. And these views Chelcicky dared to proclaim to everybody, even to his friends. They were very unpopular in his time, but he did not mind. After fifteen years, when the Husites wanted to give up their spiritual fight, the same Chelcicky again compelled his countrymen not to capitulate spiritually but to continue in the fight of the spirit.

His Philosophy of Life

Chelcicky's whole philosophy of life is a logical system. His ideal is that of the Christian church of the apostles' time. He does not wish to have anything to do with the state. The state only punishes the criminals but does not try to make them better. The best occupation is the work of the peasantry; in it is the least of temptation. Business is very dangerous; the temptation of deceiving is very strong. It is better to live in the country than in the city. In the city it is very difficult to keep clean from the world. The church (Catholic) is so bad that it is not possible to reform it. The chief thing is not teaching, but life; not discussion about faith, but realization of the gospel in life. The priests have no right to add their own thought to the law of God. The pope is the first and chief anti-Christian; the priests are his apostles. A good Christian is happy if he can suffer for Christ. The first Christians suffered from the heathen; today they suffer from the false church. Those who know the falsehood of the church ought to leave it. The Christian has no right to use force, not even for the sake of his faith.

The style of Chelcicky is very picturesque. He attacks the abuses of the church without any reservation.

"The priests compel the people to fast and they think it is a great sin to eat meat on Friday. But they are not ashamed while fasting to quarrel and to speak behind the back about their neighbor the whole fasting day! . . . The word of God is replaced by human nonsense. Does the gospel speak about the purgatory and the mass for the dead? 'Thy faith will cure thee,' 'thy' and not faith of somebody else. . . . They speak about New Testament, but their only Testament is what they themselves have done. And the council in Basel dared to say that if even the Lord's supper under both kinds were from Christ himself, the church has the right to change it! . . . And whosoever tries to think differently is called by the priests a heretic and sectarian. . . . Today there are very few sins in existence, they changed them into virtues. But if somebody has a sin he goes to the pope who will forgive him. And if he cannot go, he can find a drunk priest who will ask his purse to repent. . . . The Lord Jesus very modestly rode on an ass, but the pope rides on a big white horse covered with gold, in sinful luxury surrounded by nobility, and thus he goes with big glory of this world. This is truly the real anti-Christ, who opposes the Christ with his pride. God himself became so modest, but the pope, a sinful man, claimed to be successor of Christ. But only blind people can honor in him God. . . . The priest praises the martyrs in the church, but follows the rich man (from the gospel) at home. . . . Many a priest is not fit to look after cattle; how can he look after the souls, whom the Lord Jesus saved by his blood?"

A Full-Blooded Baptist

Chelcicky according to his three chief views was a full-blooded Baptist. There is no question about his attitude toward baptism. As to his view about the separation of church and state, we Baptists were the leaders of this movement everywhere and so in Czecho-Slovakia, even before the war when we suffered because of our attitude. With regard to pacifism, we can, more than any other Protestant denomination, claim the honor, although we were always very bitterly persecuted, of never having a single Baptist who used force to spread his views or defended them by force. And we are the only Protestant denomination that can say that. Chelcicky, therefore, is ours alone.

Thus the Czecho-Slovak Baptists, having their own national Baptist tradition, can produce their own Baptist culture and typical Czecho-Slovak Baptist ideal. It is not wise to transplant one form of Christianity from one country into another; and in the Czecho-Slovak case it is not necessary. Czecho-Slovakians can learn from other Baptists of the world, but they can at the same time contribute toward the common Baptist ideal on which we all work. There is a great advantage for any Baptist body in its evangelistic effort if it is rooted somehow in the national history. And it is our great "plus" that the Baptists in almost every nation have their own tradition. Our world congresses would gain very much and would be really historical events if every Baptist group would come with its own typical experiences and thus contribute towards our common ideal. In the last years, because of inclination to ally themselves with other Christian bodies our typical Baptist color has been somehow lost. Even if we cannot help being allianced people we ought to conserve not only for history, but for the sake of Christianity, those valuable principles for which our fathers died and for which we try to live.

In Advance of His Time

Chelcicky was born too soon and his views have only recently been appreciated. Tolstoy himself professed that Chelcicky is his great teacher and Tolstoy considered himself to be his humble disciple. Professor Iastrebov of Petrograd University (now in Prague) is the greatest expert on Chelcicky's life and teaching. And there is no wonder that our Baptist brethren in Czecho-Slovakia consider Petr Chelcicky as their great spiritual father and call their Baptist union the Union of Chelcicky. May the view of the greatest Czecho-Slovak of today, President Masaryk, be the closing words:

"In the great reformation time we produced three typical characters: Zizka, was first; second, Comenius, the great educator. Is Zizka enough for us today? Shall every one of us be a Zizka? If I study the history, if I meditate about the spirit of the Czecho-Slovak history, do I wish to be a Zizka? No! Do I wish to be a Comenius? No! Sword—Book? What do I wish to be? I desire to be a Chelcicky! Chelcicky does not wish force, but he is neither Zizka nor Comenius. Not the military offensiveness, but again not the love because of weakness—some different firmness, manhood and clearness of Chelcicky. I think therefore that we have in our history that man for whom we ought to long. The Czecho-Slovak humanity means the synthesis of Zizka and Comenius in some modern Chelcicky! This is the Czecho-Slovak idea!"

The Crowd at the Cross of Christ

By Arthur T. Fowler

"And sitting down they watched him there"

HOW often we do not realize the significance of an event till it has passed! Great events pass like common things. What a pathos there is in the words, "He came unto his own, and his own received him not." Jerusalem was asleep at the time. We see the self-complacency of religious prejudice. The Pharisees and Sadducees, though opposite religious parties, would unite to destroy Jesus. To them the tragedy of Calvary was the vindication of God's righteous judgment, and in their own views substantiated, endorsed and proved. How often the effect of things are determined by the spirit in which we see them. We see only what we have capacity to see. A man without a musical ear, will not detect the fine harmonies of a masterpiece. The person with no sense of rhythm in his nature, will not appreciate the beauty of poetry. In the experiences of life and character men find the reflex reproduction of themselves. It is still true that a man's attitude toward the cross of Christ determines his life. Every man saw his own figure of Christ that day. There were those who saw and recognized the power of suffering innocence, and there were those who only saw criminal condemnation fulfilled. The ages have been watching ever since, and in one of these two classes we all find ourselves. With Christ on the cross there was a transcendent moral power and dignity. What we see in Christ so he will be to us, and so we shall be!

Calvary is the school where we learn reverence and love. It is where we are won into surrender and spiritual fellowship. It is where we find the gracious ministries of forgiveness, purification, and illumination. It is where the human finds union with the divine.

Forward to Victory or Back to the Desert

By Robert A. Ashworth

IN the fourteenth chapter of Numbers we have described a situation that is immensely suggestive at this hour of our denominational history. Israel stands on the very border of the promised land. The spies who have surveyed it are unanimous in reporting that it is a good land, flowing with milk and honey. They have displayed some of its fruit, the foretaste of Canaan. But there are two opinions as to the possibility of possessing it. One group is despondent, its attention fixed upon the obstacles: "The people of the land are strong, and the cities are fortified and very great: moreover we saw the children of Anak there." The minority said, "Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it."

However, the people rejected the counsel of these hearts of oak, and adopted that of the ten defeatists. They wavered, hung back and then retreated. They forgot the great deliverance that had been theirs, forgot their solemn vows, forgot their high destiny. They failed in the hour of their greatest opportunity. Israel fell a victim to a sad reaction and longed for Egypt. They forgot the cruel bondage and remembered only "the fish which we did eat in Egypt for nought, the cucumbers and the melons and the garlic."

Locomotion without Progress

The consequences for this people were tragic. God decided that he could do nothing with such as they, and they and their children were sent back to wander in the wilderness for a generation, back and forth, to and fro, always on the move but never getting anywhere—locomotion without progress. The reason for the deplorable failure of the children of Israel assigned by the author of the epistle to the Hebrews is twofold: disobedience and lack of faith. In other words, they were not good enough and not big enough. God waited until a new generation arose whom he could trust, and they went into Canaan.

It is a page of history that has been often rewritten. A period of great enthusiasm is often followed by a period of reaction. Every forward movement or reform is likely to suffer from it. Both weeping and laughing philosophers have often commented upon it. Macaulay tells us that it came in England after the reformation under William and Mary. "The most just and salutary revolution," he writes, "cannot produce all the good that has been expected from it by men of uninstructed minds and sanguine tempers. Even the wisest, while it is still recent, cannot weigh quite fairly the evils which it has caused against the evils which it has removed. For the evils which it has caused are felt; and the evils which it has removed are felt no longer."

This is the situation in which men find themselves today, and we are writing today the history which is to determine the future for at least a generation. We stand today on the border of a new world, on the threshold of a better day. Never have we been so near to some of the things for which we have hoped. All agree that it is a good land that lies just beyond; but there are conflicting reports as to our ability to possess it.

> "Well, then, as the promise of entrance is still left to us, let us be afraid of any one being judged to have missed it. For we have had the good news as well as they; only, the message they heard was of no good to them because it did not meet with faith in the hearers."

For the world at large it is a warless world. Never has the world been nearer the fulfilment of the promise of international peace. No generation has seen so clearly the horrors of war as this generation that fought to end war. But (God forgive us!) already the cries of the maimed and dying are faint in our ears. Already war is recovering some of its glamor. America is indifferent and holds back the world. The obstacles to peace seem too great to be overcome.

For our own country it is a sober land. National prohibition was never so near as now. But the forces of reaction are at work, and even some of the friends of prohibition are in despair and talk of "light wines and beer!" They have forgotten the cruel bondage of the saloon in politics, and the degradation of womanhood and exploitation of childhood which the liquor traffic brought, and are appalled by the outbreak of lawlessness which has ensued upon the effort to enforce the law. "The evils which it (prohibition) has caused are felt; and the evils which it has removed are felt no longer."

Are we good enough and are we big enough to win the causes of prohibition and world peace? That is the question. If we are not then we must go back for at least a generation into the wilderness, "that great and terrible wilderness," "the waste, howling wilderness," to borrow scripture phrases, of the domination of the liquor traffic in America and the continuance of war, with all its horrors, in the world at large. We are deciding for ourselves and our children.

No one doubts that America will some day, that the world will some day, be free from the curse of alcoholic liquors. No one doubts that some day the promise will be fulfilled and that wars shall cease unto the ends of the earth. Will this generation put itself at the disposal of God for these great ends, or must God send it back into the wilderness and wait for another generation who will dare to do his will? Must God's plan for a better world wait for the appearance of better and bigger men?

There is another issue that is of great concern to us Baptists because we are immediately responsible for it. It is that great forward impulse of our denomination which we call the New World Movement. Let us try to visualize it, to idealize it! It means this generation's share in the progress of the kingdom of God. It is our promised land and we stand on the border of it.

Are we to fail in it? Look behind at the wilderness from which the New World Movement brought us forth—inadequate giving, competition and conflict of denominational interests and the lack of a unified purpose. Are we to be sent back there to wander there for another generation?

"Thus we see it was owing to unbelief that they could not enter." If we fail it will be not because of any one of the many reasons that have been assigned, not because of lack of financial resources, nor because of theological differences within the denomination.

Nor will it be because of deliberate infidelity to our promise. Such a spirit is sporadic. I have read of those who have cancelled their pledges for reasons of self-interest. They must be few. I have read of a minister who counselled his church that their pledges might be disregarded since they wanted to do something else with the money—I have forgotten what. It is that sort of thing that makes the church a scandal in the eyes of the honest sceptic, and makes the Christian man hang his head in shame!

Raising Elephants

No, it will not be for any such reasons if we fail. It will be for sheer lack of imagination. A friend told me the other day of his sister's six-year-old boy who announced his determination, when he grew up, to raise elephants for a livelihood. He had heard about elephants and had seen pictures of them and his ambition was aroused. Then the circus came to town and his mother took the little fellow to the railroad to see the animals. And the first animal that came down the gang-plank was an elephant. When the boy saw it his eyes stuck out like saucers, and he ran for the fence and was half-way across the field before his mother could catch him! At Denver, where the New World Movement was started, the denomination determined to raise elephants. It was not too great an enterprise, in view of our resources, in view of the needs. But when the denomination actually saw an elephant, realized what "a hundred million dollars" really is, many climbed the fence and started for the woods, and they have been running ever since. Their imagination had betrayed them. It was not equal to the demand they had made upon it.

We do not doubt but that the day will come when a hundred millions in five years for the great missionary and educational enterprises of the denomination will seem insufficient and will be far surpassed. The immediate question is, where will this generation spend its days? Are we to turn back now to wander in the wilderness for forty years until our children shall grow up to take God at his word and enter in?

The question has not yet been answered. It is not yet too late to enter in. But it is a solemn warning that the author of the epistle to the Hebrews issues to his generation, and it might have been spoken to us: "Well, then, as the promise of entrance is still left to us, let us be afraid of any one being judged to have missed it. For we have had the good news as well as they; only, the message they heard was of no good to them, because it did not meet with faith in the hearers." Are we good enough and are we big enough to enter in?

The Baptist Churches of Atlantic City and Vicinity

BY J. L. KEITH MACLEOD

Atlantic City First Church

STANDING on one of the busy avenues of Atlantic City, within three blocks of the Pennsylvania station, and in the heart of the hotel section, is the First Church, which is the uptown convention church.

It has the sign of the cross outside the door, and inside as well. The edifice is not the most handsome, in fact it is overshadowed by a beautiful Episcopal church, as well as a fine building which is the property of the First Presbyterian Church. Nevertheless, for work as well as for a growing influence in this city of pleasure seekers, the First Church is doing through its pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. Vernon Hinson Howlett, and its loyal, cooperative people, a magnificent work. Its services are attended by people from every part of the world, and all go away with the sweetest recollections of their visit to this house of worship. For nearly forty-four years this church has stood with its light and testimony, in what is so commonly called the "playground of the world." As one walks the boardwalk, or the avenues he is constantly reminded of the genius of man and his achievement. That is perhaps true of most cities, but it is peculiarly so of this at-one-time swamp and sand dunes. Such an atmosphere and the places that stand for the things of the spirit should be able to bring to the panting heart of a restless humanity those messages, and idealisms that come from the contact with Jesus Christ. It is in this way and many more that the First Church is trying to meet the needs of the men, whether they be week-end visitors, or sojourners for some time.

Rev. V. H. Howlett is now in the eighth year of his pastorate.

For nearly ten years Dr. Thomas J. Cross was pastor of this church. The one of which he is now pastor, he started during his ministry in the First Church.

Chelsea Church, Atlantic City

"What hath God wrought" might aptly be the inscription over this church. The God who doeth wonders has always his instruments to do his will and work. In this respect he has wrought mightily by and through Dr. Thomas J. Cross and his devoted wife, who have unselfishly given of their lives to this work. Dr. Cross has had two pastorates, one of over ten years with the First Church and now for nearly twelve years the beloved pastor of Chelsea Church.

He was recalled to a work that would have crushed many another man. Everything seemed in a hopeless condition. He had thirty-nine on the roll, law suits were looming, and a $30,000 debt was on the building. The front and ground was there, but, to use a speaker's description, "They had a Queen Mary's front but a Queen Anne's back."

The persistence and enthusiasm of the pastor brought the church to its feet, and from thence to a place of power. Today there stands erected a building that is valued at $150,000—one of the most beautiful houses of worship in America. In clearing the debt, over $50,000 has been paid and the church is looking forward to the completion of its goal which is now about $24,000. With all the calls for their own needs, the church has grown more and more to have Christ's vision for the world, giving nobly to the New World Movement and supporting a native missionary in India, and one in China. Recently one of the members gave a scholarship for any of the young men who desired to train for the ministry.

Honors have come lately to both the pastor and his wife. On June 7, 1920, the Temple University trustees of Philadelphia authorized Dr. Russell H. Conwell to bestow the honor of Doctor of Divinity upon Rev. Thomas J. Cross. It was unique in that it was conferred on him in the church of his achievements. The other was the one he missed, most fortunately for him to be afterwards repeated, namely the visit of President Harding to Chelsea Church while visiting Atlantic City. His first visit was made on the morning of Sept. 11, 1921.

Doctor Cross had arranged with his friend, J. L. Keith MacLeod, of Pleasantville, to preach that day. President Harding wanted to go to the Baptist Church and so word was sent about an hour beforehand while the preacher of the morning had some fifteen minutes to get used to this tremendous new experience. The pew President Harding and Mrs. Harding and Mrs. Hoover occupied was set apart on Armistice Day, Nov. 11, 1921. A return visit was made when on Mother's Day of 1922, President Harding and Mrs. Harding occupied the pew they had sat in on their first visit. To the delight of all his friends, Doctor Cross was in his pulpit and at the close was warmly thanked by the president and his wife for his message. Mrs. Cross also shared in the honors of the day.

Ocean City First Church

Seven miles south of Atlantic City is an island eight miles long and one mile wide where is located Ocean City—"the greatest family resort of America."

Into this city about twenty-five years ago a Baptist missionary came and started a small Baptist cause. The work grew to such an extent that a building was erected and regular services held for about ten years, when the church was dissolved. During the active period of the church quite a number were baptized and started in the Christian life. One of the number was Rev. Roberts S. Wallis who was graduated from Colgate and became a missionary to India. He is now pastor of the church at Malone, N. Y. The twenty-fifth anniversary of his baptism was celebrated on Easter.

After five years of no services, some faithful Baptists reopened a New Testament testimony in Ocean City. Here Rev. Marple Lewis worked and labored with success. He inaugurated the famous board-walk meeting which attracted thousands through the summer. It is computed that 30,000 heard the gospel of Jesus Christ by those meetings.

Baptists come from all over the states; they either visit or own their homes. Last summer Rev. M. G. Buck, who has lately gone to Ocean City, had twenty-seven states and seven different countries represented in the gathering. Mr. Buck is kept busy hunting up the new Baptists who are buying homes in Ocean City. Plans are under way for the erection of a new building which will cost $50,000 to $60,000. More than half of this amount has been subscribed. It is expected to have it completed in 1924 which will give the society an up-to-date plant, which will be, including parsonage, worth $100,000.

Baptist Churches of the Mainland

Methodism seems to be indigenous to the soil in these parts, since the days of Bishop Asbury in the early eighties, when he went along these New Jersey roads planting Methodist churches here and there with apostolic zeal which has stayed with whole sections till this hour. In the Mainland Ministerial Union, fifteen of the twenty churches represented are Methodist. This soil was no easy one for Baptists who were more than ultra individualists; as a result the Baptist cause has never been of the great or flourishing order. This in part explains the smallness of the numbers of Baptists along the shore road and Ocean City. It is also reflected in the history of each of the mainland churches.

It is the belief of many that a new day has dawned for the local Baptist churches of these parts.

Seaview Church

Seaview is five miles from Pleasantville. The Baptists first organized in the year 1881. In common with all these parts in the immediate vicinity of Atlantic City things have begun to grow and are growing. The coming of Rev. R. B. Mahoney over two years ago has resulted in something little short of a revolution. With some new consecrated Baptists and a loyal following of the old, the church was transformed from dismal gloom to happy cheerfulness. The spiritual work has been kept in the forefront. The people are striving to keep step with the material progress of the community and this has been shown in providing a handsome parsonage at the cost of $6,200 of which nearly $4,000 has been paid. The pastor, Rev. R. B. Mahoney, is president of the Mainland Ministerial Union.

Pleasantville Church

This church is thirty-five years old, and is situated five miles from the boardwalk of Atlantic City. It started through the solid conviction of five believers who wanted a New Testament order of things in life and practice, so they started a Baptist church. To say they were not popular is more than a truism. The story of their struggles is repeated in a thousand instances. To the humble consecrated souls is the present place of worship largely due. From its start it has always had the missionary interest at heart. In the pre-New World Movement days, it stood third in the state of New Jersey in per capita giving. The almost grave fault was that it somehow did not think in terms of its own constituency.

The home base was negelected, and no preparation made for the rising generation. For its membership this church outstrips any other. This stewardship is largely the work of the late Rev. S. R. Stratten, who served the church in two terms of about sixteen years.

Over four years ago the present pastor assumed charge. The gifts side has continued to grow. The membership is about 100. The church had never a greater opportunity than it has in these times. To see the tremendous possibilities of the future and to direct them to the minds and hearts, and especially the wills, of the people, seems a peculiar charge for the pastor of the church, to which he is giving his whole soul. The church has a recognized standing both in the community and in Atlantic City.

J. L. KEITH MACLEOD, PASTOR PLEASANTVILLE CHURCH

The pastor of the church is secretary of two strong ministerial unions, which affect over fifty miles of territory—the Mainland Ministerial Union, and the Joint-Conference of the Mainland and the Atlantic City Unions.

There is no reason why with a modern place of worship, and equipment for the Bible school, that the church should not grow in power and in usefulness.

The History of Atlantic City

Early Days

ABSECON ISLAND is much older than the city that has arisen upon its sand dunes. The island is ten miles long with bays and marshes between it and the main land. There is a worthwhile combination—the ozone of the sea, and the pines of the mainland, five miles across the meadows and salt waters.

The word Absecomi, the name the Indians used, denoted "little seawater." As one looks to the west he understands the significance. The Indians have a story that the earliest settlers came in the year 458 A. D. They were called by the name of Scheyichtians. They were supposed to be descendants of Chinese navigators who were said to have penetrated the forests of North America.

In 1645 English and Irish settlers came from Long Island and settled in these parts. They were followed by the Dutch who sailed up one of the numerous bays and called it Eyre Haven or, as it is known today, Egg Harbor Bay. The red men grew less as the white men came in to settle. To the credit of the white men in these parts be it said they dealt fairly with the Indians and had no trouble whatsoever. The first large purchase of land was when around 1700, Thomas Budd sold to one of Queen Elizabeth's doctors, Doctor Core of London, England, 15,000 acres on the east side of Egg Harbor Bay, for $6,000. At that time it was thought it might be convenient for a whaling depot. The first permanent settler was Jeremiah Leeds who bought land on the island in 1795 and built his home in 1800. He grew grain on the sand hills and lived on wild duck and fish. The land was bought at 40 cents an acre. The island did not grow much till about fifty years ago when a glass merchant thought he saw possibilities.

R. B. MAHONEY, PASTOR SEAVIEW CHURCH

To Samuel Richards, more than to any other man, does the modern Atlantic City owe its existence. He had a survey made for a railroad. Richard Osborne was the engineer and he made a survey from Camden to Absecon Island. To him is the credit of the name Atlantic City. The sale of land was made at the price of $17.50 an acre. The first train ran July, 1854. The Reading railroad took over the line in 1879 while the Pennsylvania railroad, under the West Jersey, made their line to Atlantic City in 1880. The route by the Delaware bridge was opened in April, 1896.

Beginning of Atlantic City

The real beginning of Atlantic City was in the year of 1854, though it was twenty years later that it was thought of as a winter resort. It is to the credit of some Philadelphia doctors that Atlantic City came into fame. They discovered for certain patients a quality in the air that was of inestimable value for the building up of the human body.

Its easy access from Philadelphia and from New York City without a change has given it an advantage over many places. Atlantic City has well been named, the "magnet of the Atlantic," as well as the "playground of the world."

Its Charm

The air is mild and dry. The Gulf Stream strikes on its westerly course about two miles above the city. A scene of beauty has been made out of the sand and brush by nature. Man has made for it a riot of color and a wealth of beauty unsurpassed anywhere.

It is a city of positive delights, where life can find its copious renewals; a relaxation of mind and body; a place of leisure and of freedom from the fretting cares of life. The "board walk" is the promenade, where each contributes his share to the ever-marching crowd. The beach is the children's paradise, and the bathers' delight. The Gulf Stream is said to make a decided difference to the temperature of the water.

City of the Living

Atlantic City is the city of the living. It has no cemetery. The silent city of its dead lies on the mainland in Pleasantville.

The Present Day Facts of Atlantic City

It is estimated that 20,000,000 visitors come to Atlantic City every year. The permanent population is about 80,000. The suburb of Ventnor has a population of about 5,000, 4,000 of whom were former residents of Philadelphia. The boardwalk today is sixty feet wide and stretches eight miles long. It is the promenade de luxe. From the board walk running into the ocean are six piers all devoted to pleasure.

There are over 1,000 hotels and small boarding houses that cater to all classes The hotels on the beach front stand proudly facing the ocean. They are the marvel of man's ingenuity and rare skill, for every foundation had to be made by the work of man. The hotel structures cost in many cases between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000. The real estate is estimated to be worth $200,000,000.

The white Protestant churches number seventeen. The Methodists have the majority—both branches, six; Presbyterian, four; Episcopal, four; Baptist, two; Congregational, one.

The growth of Atlantic City is phenomenal and the towns lying around the bays are feeling it. Pleasantville is the gateway to Atlantic City. The boulevard leads across the meadows and in twelve minutes one is landed by car at the famous board walk. In eight years the population has increased from 5,000 to 10,000.

In the confines of the convention there are five Baptist churches, two on the island, two on the mainland, and one in Ocean City. The total membership will probably not reach the 1,000 mark, but an influence beyond their numbers is being exerted.

The Mainland or Shore Line

THE mainland or shore line, as it has been called, is five miles from the island upon which Atlantic City is built. The little places felt only the faintest ripple on the passing stream of humanity. The legions might thunder past and go on their way, but why should they care? For years the mainland towns were hardly affected by the increasing rush to Atlantic City. They slept in dull contentment in things as they were. Life was for the most part even and uneventful, as they planted either their seed for garden produce, or oyster beds in the bay for market. The cosmopolitan spirit mattered nothing to those whose security lay in being undisturbed. It is within the last decade that the ever-widening movements of humanity affected the shore line. As Atlantic City began to grow the demand for labor increased and mechanics came to live where there was transportation and built their homes. For years this state of things continued.

Then came the automobile and state roads. The real awakening followed. Discovery of a nearness of access became a vital factor of progress. The benefits of Atlantic City plus the benefits of pine air mingling with salt breezes, made a visitor become a homemaker in these parts. Year by year the increased traffic because of the automobile has made the people find out places that a few years ago were counted remote from the point of vantage.

Two main arteries lead to Atlantic City. Three years ago the White Horse Pike was opened from Philadelphia. It is a state road and is in first-class condition. It runs to Absecon and thence to Atlantic City over an unpaved (as yet) boulevard, entering beside the City Hall at Atlantic avenue.

The other road is also a state road. Automobiles from the south from Penn's Grove, or Philadelphia go by May's Landing, to Pleasantville and thence by a well-paved boulevard to the city by the sea. Over a thousand autos pass a given point towards the Atlantic City boulevard on the week-ends during summer. For the last three years, winter traffic has been exceedingly heavy. This remarkable growth is seen all the way from Absecon to Somers Point, a distance of eight or nine miles. To get one of the most delightful impressions of Atlantic City, a visitor ought to go along the short line by auto or suburban trolley and see Atlantic City in the golden setting sun across Lake's Bay. The roofs of the Traymore Hotel and the Marlborough-Blenheim gleaming and sparkling in the quiet waters, is a sight the visitor will never forget. Pleasantville is the largest town on the shore road. It has grown from 2,000 inhabitants twenty years ago, to a population of nearly 10,000.

There are homes all the way to Somers Point which are a credit to those who built them.

THOMAS J. CROSS, PASTOR CHELSEA CHURCH

There are three golf clubs on the mainland. Up Absecon way, there is a golf club that is called the Millionaire's Golf Club. Rumor has it they pay the small sum of $1,000 a year for membership. There are two at the other end of the shore line, beautifully situated. One is the Northfield Golf Club, which is considered an excellent course.

The other trip that allows the visitors a view of the inner section of the country and crosses Egg Harbor Bay is to Ocean City. The fast shore electric has a twenty-minute service to Ocean City, the growing sister city of Atlantic. It is a beautiful ride on a summer day or evening. Ocean City is one of the dignified conservative cities that are springing up along the shore. While everything is open in Atlantic, things are decidedly closed in Ocean City. It was originally a great Methodist camp-meeting ground, and it has, despite all attempts otherwise, held to that solid goodness that really makes for character. The Lord's day is a day of rest, and only business that is absolutely necessary for the feeding of the body is allowed permission to open at specific hours.

Ocean City is also undergoing a change as the summer residents are more and more becoming all-the-year home dwellers. This last year the collection of toll was done away with, as the state has taken over the bridge. This should make for greater growth. Many of the city's best buildings were designed by the chairman of the information and registration committee, Vivian B. Smith, architect, Atlantic City, who is a son-in-law of Dr. Thomas Cross, of the Chelsea Church.

The Boy and the Scout Program

The boy is a bundle of possibilities, of inherent tendencies and capabilites—a candidate for character.

By W. F. Bostick

THE boy problem is so big, with so many phases, that in one short article, one can only hit the high spots. Its importance is paramount, for in influencing youth, we are determining the future history of the community, of the nation and of the world. The boy problem is no boy's problem: it is a challenge to the best that is in us, of mental understanding, of sympathetic cooperation, of tact and patience. This difficulty of the problem needs to be appreciated to give us the right sense of values in life. If mothers had spent less mental energy on whist, on styles, and on crochet patterns; less time on the material parts of the house and more on the real spirit of the home; less attention to dust on furniture and more to the germs of moral and social disorder in their children, we would today have a far higher type of citizenship. The father's task of providing food, clothing, and shelter for his family is simple because it is so tangible as compared with providing the right direction to his children's lives. Living for one's children is far easier than living with them. "What does your father do for you?" was asked a certain boy. "I never had a father," said the boy. "Oh, is he dead?" was the kindly inquiry. "No, my father is a Shriner." So with the expansion of motherhood out of the home, and the shrinkage of fatherhood in the home, there are far more orphans than are registered in orphan asylums.

Physical Vigor a Basis

In tackling this problem, the first requisite is a clear understanding of the ideals we want for our boys, that is, the goal of the training. No better boiled-down statement can be found than of the Scouts, "physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight." Physical vigor is a necessary basis for all other kinds of achievement as well as for mere enjoyment of life. The physical examinations for the draft revealed that 35 per cent of the young men of the age who should enjoy the best of health were physically incapacitated by defects or diseases most of which could either have been cured or prevented when they were growing boys. Doctor Evans, of the Chicago Tribune force, in a recent address said that the emphasis today was being put upon positive health, that is, the increasing of immunity to disease by the building up of strong physique and pure blood. Surely no program is any better fitted to do this for the growing boy than that of the Scouts with their out-of-door activities all the year around. Mental awakeness is not a matter of mere school book knowledge: it is a matter of bringing that information effectively into play in a certain situation or crisis or in the continuous problem of earning a living. No better service can one render to the times and to the future than to be a transmitter of pure blood and high ideals.

A certain mother, when invited to a scientific course in child training cynically smiled, and said, "Why, I don't need to attend any course like that. Don't I know what I want my boy to be?" Of course, all there is to the problem is to know what kind of a boy you want yours to be, and tell the boy to go to it, and he goes—only he doesn't. The scripture about "bringing up a child in the way he should go" is still true except that the "bringing up" is far more complicated than it sounds.

There are certain wrong conceptions, which educators and parents in the past have consciously or unconsciously had, that are responsible for wrong methods. They have thought a boy or girl was a blank sheet upon which to write nice moral sentiments. To use that analogy at all, we ought to say that parts of writing in invisible ink are continually showing up. Nor is he an empty cask to be filled. He seems so in the matter of food, but not mentally or morally. Neither is he mere plastic clay or marble to be chiseled upon, which it is necessary only to press long enough, and work hard enough to get results. The boy is not a little man, a vest-pocket edition of one, either mentally, physically, or morally. Nor is he totally depraved as the old Puritans thought.

But he is a bundle of possibilities, of inherent tendencies and capabilities, a candidate for character. With this general conception then, training the boy is a matter of the development and direction given these tendencies. Not surgery is to be used on the various instincts, but hygiene; not impression, but expression. If the fighting instinct, for example, is forcibly crushed, the boy becomes a coward; if allowed to grow wild, the boy becomes a bully; if rightly trained, he becomes a strong self-controlled man of will who uses his fighting instinct against the wrongs and evils of society. A tadpole has a tail which disappears by being absorbed as the wiggler becomes a full grown frog. If this tail were cut off, the frog would not develop properly. So, many a crude trait in the boy, the various forms of his mischief, for instance, are destined to disappear later, being absorbed into his well rounded make-up. But if this trait is forcibly crushed just because we do not see the immediate use of it, we leave the boy deficient in some respect. If a man is made out of the dust of the earth, the boy is made out of the dust plus electricity. The right direction of this electricity is the problem.

These various instincts and tendencies must be anticipated, and given their direction early. Horace Mann said, "Where anything is growing, one former is worth a thousand reformers." The Scout program gives the chance for the expression of many of these boy's instincts which he cannot have an outlet for within the four walls of his home, church or school.

Preoccupation with things wholesome is a big part of the problem of directing these tendencies. A new affection has a strong expulsive power; but the question is, what kind of new affections shall our boys have? This question is well symbolized in the contrast between Ulysses and Orpheus. Ulysses, when he knew he was nearing the sweet singing Sirens, stopped up his sailors' ears and had himself tied to the mast to keep his crew and himself from the fate of other sailors. But Orpheus, as his vessel approached, played such beautiful music that he and his sailors were not tempted to jump overboard. The last battle of civilization is the purposeful employment of leisure time. It is estimated that every boy, after sleeping, eating, attending school and church, and doing home chores, has every year 3,000 leisure hours. Often character is formed more by what he does during those leisure hours than in the time spent in school.

A Blessing or a Curse

The working day is being shortened in all industries, increasing the man's leisure time. If he has been trained as a boy to use this for "re-creation" not for dissipation, this increased leisure will be a blessing, otherwise it may be more of a curse. Then, industry today is so specialized that each man uses at his work only a small proportion of his muscles or his faculties. His recreation should be such as to bring into play these many neglected parts of the body and mind. The Scout organization's plan for the employment of a boy's leisure time is enticing, varied and purposeful. It includes study and practice in order to attain skill and pass tests in many branches; week-end hikes, weekly troop meetings and summer camping periods. "It is wonderful the way my boy digs into his Scout book whenever he has spare time," said a father recently. It is not wonderful at all for the Boy Scout manual is the most popular boys' book in the world.

The Withered Hand

ONE Sabbath day, long years ago.
The Master taught both friend and foe.
A certain man was in that band
Who labored with a withered hand.
The Master said to him at length,
"Stretch forth thy hand, receive thy strength."
He stretched it forth; in glad surprise,
The hand was healed before their eyes.

Though many years have passed since then
This tragic bane is still with men.
Through lack of use, the hand hangs down
That should have won the giver's crown.
The cry for help from mission lands
Comes loud and clear for willing hands
To furnish gold with which to send
The "gift of love" from end to end
Of this old world, whose souls are lost
For lack of funds to pay the cost.

Oh, church of God, why suffer still
With withered hands against God's will?
For he would have you strong and brave
To meet the task, the world to save.
The Master speaks yet once again,
"Stretch forth thy hands," ye sons of men,
Give of your best; give of your gold.
The gospel story must be told
To all the peoples of the earth
Of God's great love, its boundless worth."
Ye sons of God, list to his voice,
And make the sons of earth rejoice.

While we need to know intimately the boy we are most interested in, we must know the characteristics of boys in general, remembering that there are always some individual differences, and also that development is not always a matter of age.

Before the age of six, many habits of thinking and acting have been formed. Unconsciously the child has absorbed the atmosphere of the home, of courtesy, of unselfishness, of mutual cooperation or perhaps the opposite. A father asked how he could gain the confidence of his fifteen-year-old boy. The reply was, "You are just fifteen years too late." Up to nine, the child is individualistic in his games, as shown in playing tops and marbles. From nine to twelve he memorizes most easily; he is fact-hungry; he is a young packrat as the contents of his pockets show; the reading craze begins with its great opportunities as well as dangers. The danger of the "Diamond Dick" type of stories as well as of many movies is in the identification of immoral conduct with a courageous spirit. He begins to be a hero-worshiper: his hero is a character of a book or a movie, some man whom he knows, or the boy leader of his own gang. The hero is always one who succeeds in doing great things. Fortunate is the boy whose hero is a man who not only can do big things in the physical realm but who has won the biggest battles in the moral realm.

The Problematic Period

But the period of thirteen to sixteen is the most problematic, the most potent for good or ill. This age has the largest number of first committments of crime. During these years, eight out of every ten boys drop out of Sunday school. Two pictures, vivid in contrast and startling in significance, come to me from the Omaha mob riot when a negro was lynched, the court house and its priceless records burned: one picture is that of the fiendish surging mob composed mostly of youths under twenty-two, led by a high-school boy; the other picture is that of a Scout, who noted the absence of the traffic cop and the danger from congestion at Sixteenth and Farnam streets, the busiest intersection in that city, and with whistle clenched between his teeth bravely faced for hours a veritable hurricane of street cars, autos, pedestrians and rioters, taking the place of the most expert traffic conductor of the police force, preventing accidents in that place on that wild bloody night.

This time above all is the gang time. Just as individuals in a mob act differently than when alone, so the boy in his "bunch" can go either to heights or depths he is incapable of alone. The strength of this gang instinct is shown in the 80,000 answers from boys to a certain questionnaire on Sunday-school attendance. The most frequent reason given for not attending Sunday school was that the bunch didn't go there, and the greatest reason for continuing in Sunday school was that the bunch did go. What the parents want a boy to do at this time often counts for very little; it is what the gang thinks and does. So effectively is the Scout program designed to direct rightly the gang spirit of this age, that Judge Ben Lindsey said: "If the Boy Scout movement would be properly supported and managed, it would do away with the Juvenile Court." The Scouts are organized into troops; each troop has four patrols of eight boys. Each patrol has a patrol leader and an assistant leader, thus developing leadership. The Scouts are not arbitrarily divided into patrols, but as far as possible, they are put into patrols with boys with whom they already associate. Thus the patrol system in the organization of Boy Scouts is based on a sound social instinct—the gang spirit. Boys will clique and gang together: to control the boy you must control the gang.

This gang spirit in Scouting is not crushed nor allowed to go wild, but is directed in purposeful activities, giving chance for self-government and for living and working together—and what is this but training in citizenship and democracy?

The lure of adventure and the call of the wild is strong within the young savage. More boys run away from home at this period than at any other. The remedy is periods of camping, hikes, giving them a chance to "rough it."

Our Heritage

By Lyra E. Benedict

I HAVE a heritage over the Range,
In a kingdom I'm striving to seek;
Where the souls of those who have suffered
Are not crushed by the thought of defeat.

Lost trails of strivings and yearnings
Stretch outward for many a mile—
Past Peaceful Valley where conscience has slumbered,
Over abysses where we all fall.

To the first snow of the mountains we struggle,
Knowing each peak that we gain
Brings us closer to God and his kingdom,
Into our heritage over the Range.

His Hobby

The boy's hobby is the key to the choice of a vocation. Here we should put him in touch with a large enough field of endeavor to give him plenty of chance for both a suitable and an early choice of life work. George M. Reynolds, Chicago banker, said that he attributed his success to the early choice of a vocation for which he was fitted. There are fifty-nine different subjects in which Scouts can train for proficiency and receive merit badges. These are designed to help the boy pick out what he is cut out for in life.

Up to the age of twelve, most boys will accept commands. But at fourteen, a boy cannot be commanded. Authority must not be on the perpendicular but on the horizontal. He resents being preached at or down to, but welcomes the one who works with him and says, "Suppose we try this; let's see if we cannot reason this thing out."

The question of whether or not sex instruction should be given at all is out-of-date. The question is when, by whom and how. It should be given all the way from the child's earliest naive inquiries up through the various stages, suiting the instruction to the particular need and age. The parents as the source of life should welcome the opportunity to weave an extra cord of understanding and confidence between themselves and their children by imparting with the personal touch of intimate conversation the secrets of life.

The religious nature of the boy is too big a subject to be more than lightly touched upon here. The fact that the greatest number of conversions and acquisitions to Protestant churches as well as the largest losses from the Sunday school occur in the period from twelve to sixteen proves that right here is the most important fork in the whole road. In general, the fault of the Protestant church and Sunday school is that it has been and still is too largely geared to suit the adults, mostly mature Christians who pay the bills. This is true of the training of the minister, the use of his time as a pastor in "manicuring the fingernails of saints," of the arrangement of the church, and of the trend of the whole program. Then later they waste time, money, and emotional energy trying to reform what ought to have been formed.

The Gang Spirit

Its increasing emphasis on the personality and training of teachers, the material and means of instruction, the equipment and building arrangement needs still the recognition of the gang spirit as the biggest factor in either holding or losing the boy. The Catholic church has a true psychological basis for its long-standing emphasis of forming while the individual is growing, yet it, too, realizes the added hold it has on the boy by using the Boy Scout organization. Yet in all matters of faith, the Scout is under the guidance of his own church. Churches of all denominations have indorsed in word and action the Boy Scout movement. A Scout is taught to be reverent and respect the religious convictions of others just as he wishes his own religious convictions respected.

Lastly, and most emphatically I plead with every father to give more time to be a companion to his boy. A boy of eighteen, whose father was dead, came to visit a certain man, a friend of his father, to ask for money. The man surprised, said, "How is it you have to do this? Why, your father was one of the most esteemed men in the community, interested in very good work."

"Well, you see, my father was always so busy I never really got acquainted with him." Following this, this man took out his check book and instead of writing a liberal check as a Christmas present to his own boys wrote on the back of a check, "I hereby promise from now on to give to you, my son, one hour each day and two hours each Sunday unreservedly for enjoyment and mutual interests."

Orphan asylums or state aid can provide any child with food, clothing, and shelter. Any one can preach at him or down to him. But only the father can, by living and working with his boy, create the contagion of right living and high thinking. Fathers, be chums to your boys!

HE BETTERS IT

In your issue of April 14 I have noticed the criticism of Brother Kappen of my "Missing Cog." In my original manuscript I used the expression "long-horned deacon" instead of "long-haired." Make the most of it! My assistant in re-writing unconsciously changed it. I might, without telling all the truth, say that I did not write it as it appeared. I had supposed further that the reader would recognize those expressions as quotations from the excuses the pastors give for desiring a change of fields. However, I stand by my original statement. It should be noted that no sweeping indictment was made of deacons nor was such intended. I presume I know more deacons than Brother Kappen, and even he does not hold them in higher esteem than do I. But surely none will maintain—not even Brother Kappen—that every deacon is impeccable. Why was he not gallant enough to lift his voice—or dip his pen— in defense of the women mentioned in a similar way? I have been an ordained Baptist minister for thirty years and yet I mentioned as facts far graver charges against some of them than could possibly be inferred against the deacons, yet there was no rushing to their defense by Brother Kappen. Would he have us think that deacons, alone of all, are above criticism?

BRUCE KINNEY.

AMEN AND AMEN

A simple worshiper, loving both prayer and music, thanks the Lord for the plain, true word of G. B. Hopkins in THE BAPTIST of March 24: "Music during prayer is an abomination, and should be abolished." Amen and amen! How our Father, who is "not a God of confusion," musicians who dote on harmony, and plain people who "go up to the temple to pray," have endured the distraction patiently is a mystery. Still more of a puzzle is the report that some ministers, whose mediation at the throne is thus made a mockery, actually like it! Surely God still speaks to us through Paul: "Let all things be done decently and in order."

SIMPLE WORSHIPER.

DRAWING ON THE IMAGINATION

When our Saviour stated that the devil was the father of lies, it is very evident that the vile liquor traffic had not yet been invented. I am induced to make this remark by the wholesale publication of lies made out of whole cloth by the liquor traffic in its efforts to restore the saloon under public authority. In the March number of the Ladies' Home Journal, is an article entitled "Enemies of Prohibition," by Charles Selden, from which I take the following:

"To indicate to what lengths the enemies of prohibition will go in their efforts to show that prohibition is making drunkards out of students, there was a paragraph published in the Sun, of Sydney, Australia, where the liquor crowd is trying to mislead the Australian prohibitionists as to results in the United States. The paragraph said:

> 'The boys and girls at the Prince Alfred public school in Portland, Ore., had a half holiday not long ago. The reason was that in the morning session five of the scholars, between twelve and sixteen years old, appeared carrying bottles of moonshine. The bottles were passed around the school, and the children soon became so riotous that the teacher had to dismiss them for the day. One of the boys boasted that he was independent of bootleggers, as he had his own still!'

"There is no such school in Portland or any other Oregon or Pacific Coast city, and there has been no case of any boy or girl in any school having any liquor. This lie was simply made out of whole cloth. It is no more untrue, however, than are the anti-prohibition stories being circulated in this country about the colleges. But as it was for use abroad no care was taken to make it sound plausible."

JOHN HIPP.

Space on the "America"

Most of the space originally reserved on the steamship "America" for the use of Northern Baptist delegates to the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance has already been booked, but the American Express Company, through special effort, has secured some additional rooms. Delegates who wish to use the "America" should communicate promptly with the American Express Company, whose main office is at 65 Broadway, New York City. One of the large public rooms on the "America" is being transformed into a conference hall, for the exclusive use of Stockholm delegates. The committee to promote attendance is providing an interesting program of addresses, stereopticon lectures and other features, which will help to make life interesting on the voyage and will also give delegates a better acquaintance with Baptist work in Europe. The American Express Company is arranging for Mr. Paul Lennon, a member of its travel department, to sail on the "America" with the Stockholm delegates to render any assistance that may be required. Mr. Lennon will remain in Stockholm through the meeting of the alliance for such service as he may be able to render.

WANTS CENSORSHIP REESTABLISHED

Our attention has been called to an editorial in the February 10 issue of THE BAPTIST entitled "Northern Baptists on the March" in which the following statement is made: "When certain designated gifts for much-needed hospitals, schools, and missionary residences, as called for by the Survey, were made by generous individuals or churches, these have been erected; but failure to complete the general fund has left the upkeep of the new buildings unprovided for, so that it must be taken from the already inadequate funds of the foreign societies or in some instances these much-needed new gifts be left unutilized for lack of means to operate them." I am sure this editorial was well meant, but as a matter of fact the statements contained in this particular part of it are certainly not accurate and are producing embarrassment for us inasmuch as some of our friends through whose generosity the buildings in question were erected, are deeply distressed as they contemplate the possibility that buildings which they themselves may have been the means of erecting are rendered useless by the lack of means to operate them. As a matter of fact our foreign department agrees that there is no single instance of this kind upon any of our fields and we are wondering who is responsible for this statement in the editorial in question.

In a more recent issue of THE BAPTIST also there was published an article from the pen of Mr. Vernon W. Dyer of Rangoon. This, while interesting and picturesque contained statements which in our opinion might better have been left unpublished. I am writing you regarding the matter inasmuch as it seems to me that we should be given the opportunity of scrutinizing the matter which is published regarding the work of our society. Statements which may appear to the casual writer entirely innocuous are perfectly capable of giving rise to very serious misunderstandings of the work and workers. If we could have the privilege of looking over manuscripts having to do with our work before they are published, whether editorials or articles submitted by subscribers, we should be able to avoid at least the worst instances of misunderstanding arising from these articles on the part of our constituency. Formerly it was the custom for the editors of our denominational press to submit all articles written by our missionaries to us for scrutiny. Would it not be possible for you to resume this practise?

Religion an Expensive Luxury

"To Whom It May Concern"

THE spiritual life of an individual rises no higher than the level of his beneficence.

A man said to me not long ago: "Religion is an expensive luxury; but I suppose we must have it," and he gave me a reluctant contribution. Another said: "It seems to me that we are always being 'dunned for money.' It is money! money all the time, and I am getting tired of it."

Let me ask: Do you say this to your landlord when he comes for your monthly rent? Do you say this to your butcher; to your baker; to your clothier; to your dressmaker; or do you make this complaint to your servants and employes; or at the ticket office of the railroad; or at the entrance door of a "movie"; or to the treasurer of your club, lodge, or society; or to the conductor of a trolley car when you drop your fare in the box, and complain that you are not carried free or at half price; or do you turn to some rich man and ask him to pay your fare; or are you so indignant that you refuse to ride at all and walk, rather than be eternally asked for money? "No, because I have to have these things." Well, you don't have to have salvation, or the church, or the things that the grace of God stands for. Why don't you give them all up and save the expense, as the common unbeliever does? You don't have to pay. When I see a thing that is not worth the money I go without it. I don't buy it and then grumble at the price. I don't grumble at my club dues or ask a reduction, or that my fellow members should pay for me.

You can ignore God and the needs of his kingdom, though he asks you to give to him (who gave himself for you) liberally, cheerfully, and regularly, as an expression of your gratitude for temporal and spiritual mercies daily bestowed upon you; and a desire to be a "worker together with God."

Or you can have your church and all its privileges and all it stands for in time and eternity, at the expense of others. You may ease yourself that others may be burdened (2 Cor. 8:13). You may be a "shirk" or a parasite, if you prefer to be.

Or—and this is more Christ-like; more like a child of God—you may take your place among the cheerful givers whom "the Lord loveth" (2 Cor. 8:7).

Now look at this bill of expense which you incur and regularly pay, and compare it item by item with what you give to the Lord and his church and for the spread of the gospel, and then judge how expensive religion is to YOU.

My Monthly Bill of Expense

1. House rent. . . . . .$.....
2. Taxes. . . . . .$.....
3. Repairs and improvements...$.....
4. House expenses: Food, fuel, light, water. . . . . .$.....
5. Servants' wages. . . . . .$.....
6. Clothing, millinery, boots and shoes. . . . . .$.....
7. Education. . . . . .$.....
8. Medical expenses. . . . . .$.....
9. Horses and automobiles.....$.....
10. Travel, vacation expenses...$.....
11. Amusements. . . . . .$.....
12. Entertainment. . . . . .$.....
13. Luxuries: Soda water, ice cream, chewing gum, teas, dinners, lunches, etc.....$.....
14. Lodge, club, society fees and dues. . . . . .$.....
15. Trolley car fares.....$.....

Total.....$.....

Now look at these things item by item; then total them up and compare them with what you give to God; and judge whether religion is so very expensive to YOU.

Profit-sharing with Humanity

WILLIAM P. HARTLEY, manufacturer and Methodist layman of England, says: "Probably the great event of my life occurred on January 1, 1877. On that day my wife and I made a written vow that we would devote a definite share of our income for religious and humanitarian work, and that this should be a first charge. Since that date we have often increased the proportion, so that the original percentage is left far behind. As our income has increased, we have felt that religious and humanitarian work had a greater claim upon us. The distribution of the Lord's portion has been the greatest joy of my life and a real means of grace. It has kept me in constant touch with the promotion of Christ-like work of all kinds, and anything I have been able to do for Christ and humanity (including profit-sharing with my work-people for over twenty years) has grown out of that vow made thirty-three years ago."

When a great church conference rose to do this man reverence, he said: "Of thine own have I given thee, Lord." His proportion has increased in these years from one-tenth to one-third.

Some one is saying, "All this is true and I should follow it if I were rich like my neighbor!" But the entire test of our Christian life is not what we should do with our neighbor's wealth, but what manner of stewards we are in the few dollars we manage each week. Did you ever hear the story of the two converts on a mission field:

"If you had a hundred sheep, would you give fifty of them for the Lord's work?"

"Yes, I would."

"Would you do the same if you had a hundred cows?"

"Yes, I would."

"Would you do the same if you had a hundred horses?"

"Yes, I would."

"If you had two pigs, would you give one of them to God?"

"No, I wouldn't; and you have no right to ask me when you know I have two pigs!"

Note

The Continuation Campaign of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies is drawing to a close. Apr. 30 is the end of the year. Have you been profit-sharing the profits of your religion? You have only a day or two left to do so! It is a warped Christianity which says to its missionaries: "Go into all the world and preach the gospel," but says to its dollars: "Stay home here in my pocketbook." Benjamin Adams once wrote on "The Fun of Giving." (See 2 Cor. 9:7.) How are you wording your title—"The Wrench of Giving?" "The Procrastination of Giving?" "Beauty of Giving?"

THERE IS STILL TIME—DO IT NOW!

The Brown Lamb's Gift

By Ruth L. Scudder

THE white lady with the loving blue eyes smiled at little Gopal as he sat on the floor in the very first row of the Sunday school. And indeed, if you had seen him sitting there so solemnly, with his round little face and round gilt cap and round little tummy swelling out beneath his torn coat like a kewpie's, you, too, would have smiled.

It was Gopal's first visit to the Christian Sunday school. His big brother had been told to look after him and, hearing the singing from the school verandah, had brought him over and left him there, very much frightened at the strangeness of it all but curious to know why they were singing these songs to "Jyesu." (That is the way they say Jesus.) Was Jyesu a new god, and did they have an image of him and put butter and flower-garlands on it. And who was the white lady who smiled and spoke so gently? Listen—she was speaking now.

"You know that when we love any one, we want to give something to show our love, don't we?"

Gopal considered. Yes, it was true. Only this morning he had picked a scarlet Flame-of-the-forest flower and tucked it in his mother's black hair, and she had turned quickly and cuddled him in her arms, crooning, "Thank you, wee Prince of my heart."

"And so," went on the Lady-of-the-Loving-Eyes," "we want to give something to Jesus to show our love. Think how much he has given us—our homes, our mothers, (Gopal started. Had this Jyesu given him his mother? He was indeed a good god!) our food—and most of all—he gave us his life, to show his love! Next Sunday is his birthday; Christmas, we call it. Now the only way we can give anything to him to show our love is to bring something that we can sell and so help the poor. Every one who loves Jesus and wants to show his love may bring something to sell next week."

After that they sang another song and then another teacher took the little children under a tree and told them a story about a shepherd who lost one of his sheep. Little Gopal listened very hard, for he understood just how it might have happened. Was not his big brother, Rama, a herder of sheep and goats, and was he not very, very unhappy when the brown goat was missing? And then the teacher said that he, Gopal, was one of Jyesu's lambs and that Jyesu was his shepherd and loved him!

"And if I fell and hurt my leg, would he carry me home as my brother did his sheep?" asked the little boy.

"He would send some one to help you, for he loves all his lambs," she answered.

Rama came to take him back to the village soon afterwards, and all the while that Gopal's little bare brown feet trotted over the hot, dusty road, he was thinking, wondering what he could give this shepherd-god Jyesu who loved him so. He did not ask Rama's advice, for although he admired the strong older brother, who could throw a rock so far you could hardly see where it landed, and who was not afraid even of the buffaloes with their long horns, yet Rama was very apt to laugh at Gopal's fancies and the little boy could not bear this. He would wait and ask mother.

Mother was late that evening. It was nearly seven before she came in from the rice fields, where she had been carrying bundles of cut rice plants on her head all day long. She looked very tired and worn as she began to get the evening meal of rice and a few vegetables. Little Gopal pattered about after her, trying to help, and she let him stir the curry stew in the big red earthen pot over the smoky fire that made his eyes smart.

After they had eaten she felt a little hand pull at the folds of her sari. "Mother! Can you let me have a pie (a coin worth one-sixth of a cent) for myself?"

She looked down at Gopal's earnest little face and shook her head, "Why do you ask, foolish little son of mine? You know that since your father died, Rama must herd goats all day and I must work in the fields from morn to night in order to get enough food to live!"

"Then could I have a handful of rice?"

"See," she tipped the pot so he could look in. "Not a grain wasted, and we are still hungry. Why do you want it, son of my heart?"

"I—" he hesitated. "It is for a new swami-god, a shepherd, whose name is Jyesu. He loves me and—and—I wanted to give him something."

His mother frowned. "Only yesterday the priest came and said if I did not give him something the smallpox goddess, Gangamma, would send the plague upon us! So I gave, for though I care not for myself, you and Rama are the light of my eyes! But I will not give more! If this Jyesu-god wishes to punish us, let him!"

She looked so tired and angry that Gopal crept away and went to sleep on his little mat in the corner of the dark, one-roomed hut. But next morning he began wondering again what he could give. There was nothing in the hut but the four mud walls and two or three pots and the three mats they used for beds. He had nothing of his own but the little cap and ragged little coat. What could he give?

That noon he went out with Rama and the two lay on the ground and watched the brown and white goats and sheep and the cunning kids that frisked about. Suddenly Rama took something from beneath his coat. It was a cocoanut shell which he had scraped out and over which he had fastened tightly some threads of skin, so that when he scraped on them with a piece of wood they made a little tune.

"Oh, Rama!" cried the little boy. "How very fine that is! You could make another, you know! Would you give it to me?"

"Why should I?" asked Rama lazily.

"I—I—," Gopal swallowed hard. He did hope that Rama wouldn't laugh. "I want to give it to the Jyesu—shepherd," he faltered.

"Silly one! He is only a god for white people, not for you! He does not care for brown people!"

"Oh, but he does! They said so! Look, Rama!" Gopal pointed in his eagerness. "They said he is a shepherd and we are all his lambs. Now you, you love the brown ones as much as the white ones, don't you? It is like that with him—he loves us all the same!"

Rama was trying to hit the old crow comfortably perched on a goat's back, and was not interested in shepherd-gods.

"What will you give me for my wonderful fiddle?" he asked, teasingly.

"I, what have I? You could make another! Oh, please, Rama! The next time I find a mango fruit I will bring it all to you, without even biting of it!"

"What do I care for your mangoes! Listen, will you take the goats home alone and let me go swimming!"

"Oh, but Rama!" (the little boy shivered). "It will be dark and I shall have to go past that margossa tree where the priest says a devil lives!"

"Why should you fear?" scornfully. "If you give the fiddle-thing to your Jyesu, will he not protect you?"

The little boy hesitated, then held out his hand resolutely for the cocoanut shell. It was quite true. Jyesu would take care of him. Had not the shepherd gone far out in the wilderness to find his lamb, and was not he, Gopal, his lamb, even though a little black one?

The next Sunday Gopal was there before all the others, something tightly clasped in his hand. And as the children went singing, one by one, to place their gifts in the box that represented the manger, suddenly they began to laugh. For there, amidst the piles of rice and fruit and honey, lay a hollow cocoanut shell with some strings tied to it. They could not see all the terror of that long walk that the little boy had gone through alone in order to win the shell. They could not know the torture of leading the sheep past the devil-tree, or the gasping little prayer, "O Shepherd, I am your lamb," that the little boy had made in the darkness.

Then the Lady-of-the-Loving Eyes held up her hand for quiet and lifted up the shell to see what had been scratched on it. And as she read, her eyes misted a little and she held little Gopal close for a minute, saying, "Children, I think Jesus will love this gift best of all!"

For in sprawling Tamil letters, the inscription ran: "To the Shepherd Jyesu from his brown lamb Gopal."

The Crusade Up Dollar Hill

If Gopal could give a gift that was so hard to give, what have you given that was equally difficult to earn for our Baptist children's Crusade Up Dollar Hill? If you haven't yet done one single solitary little thing, the very least you can do now is to send a dollar to Miss Mary Noble, 218 Lancaster Ave., Buffalo, New York; for if she receives it before the thirtieth of April she will see that it is counted in her crusader's campaign fund. So please sit right down and write to her!

The vacation season will soon be here. Many of you pastors perhaps would like to have vacation schools but for some reason are not able to undertake it yourself. However, there are, in different sections of the country, pastors who are trained in this work and who would be glad to do supply service and at the same time conduct a vacation school. The Church Vacation School division of the Publication Society, 1703 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, offers itself as a clearing house for this purpose without expense to either party. There are four experienced men already on the list ready for such work.

Laymen's Educational League

The enclosed objective of the Laymen's Educational League, which has been organized in the Immanuel Baptist Church of Scranton, Pa., by Rev. Charles H. Rust, teacher, and in the Washington Heights Baptist Church of New York City, by Mr. N. G. Lennington, teacher, is a movement toward the culturing of our laymen in the historical background and development of Christianity, and we are sure that it will mean much to the efficiency and development of the church and the kingdom of God on earth, if the laymen in all our churches will take time to study along these lines.

The fact that many laymen think that they have outgrown the Sunday school may imply that the curriculum has not been arranged to grip their minds as it should. We are certain that the laymen who are to lead our churches need the knowledge that this study will give, and we believe that there are hosts of such laymen now in our organized men's classes, both young and old, as well as another host of laymen that never stays to Sunday school, who will be intellectually and spiritually gripped by a study of this kind.

We do not need to make this a new organization with cumbersome machinery; we are simply to use this curriculum in regular organized classes of young men at the Sunday-school hour, and stimulate larger attendance by the appeal of such a course of study.

Prof. Conrad H. Moehleman of the church history department at Rochester Theological Seminary, has been asked to arrange and complete a curriculum for a five-year course of study, as follows, he having been thinking along the same line:

1. Getting Acquainted with the Bible

How was it born? The men who wrote it. What it really is. Its supreme value.

2. Place of Religion in Civilization

What gave birth to religion? Why did certain civilizations produce certain kinds? The history of them. The genius of each. Why Christianity is best. Jesus supreme as religious leader. Etc.

3. Christianity within the Ancient Civilization

Its development through ancient Judaism. Streams that flowed into it. The religions of Greece and Rome. How Christianity was developed. Outside influences. The onward flowing stream. Etc.

4. Christianity within the Medieval Civilization

The church and the empire. The theologies of this period. Forces back of the Reformation. Reformation leaders. Educational backgrounds. Etc.

5. Christianity within the Modern Civilization

Historical investigation. The scientific treatment of religion. The emphasis upon Jesus and his kingdom teaching. The church a factor in civilization. Present-day ideals and duties. Unified programs and projects. Etc.

This gives in brief simply suggestions as to the range of the curriculum. It will be scholarly, practical, inspirational, spiritual and helpful to the highest degree, as Doctor Moehleman outlines it. He will also suggest the books to be studied as the course is taken. It is easy to perceive what this will mean to the church and the kingdom. This curriculum can be reduced to three years of forty weeks each.

Laymen's Educational League

OBJECTIVE

The study of historical Christianity; its book—the Christian Bible; its roots in Judaism; its contact with other religions and their influence upon it; its divine essentials as Jesus taught them; its organization — the church; its beliefs and practices; its historical development through ancient, medieval and modern civilization, the exact place it occupies among the present-day religions of the world: all of this with a view to securing a more intelligent understanding of the teachings of Jesus, a more serious application of those teachings in the daily life, and greater effort toward establishing the spirit and principles of his teachings throughout the peoples and races of the globe.

International Sunday School Lesson for May 13

DAVID, THE POET-KING

Lesson: I Samuel 16:1-13. Golden Text. Psalm: 23:6.

Introductory.

At the will of God, Samuel went down from Ramah to Bethlehem—a twelve-mile journey southward across rough hill country. We know how Ruth became a Bethlehemite through faithfulness to Naomi. The sons of Jesse who passed before Samuel in review were the great-grandsons of Ruth and Boaz. David lived about a thousand years before Christ. He is a beloved and important character in the Old Testament. Sixty-one chapters are devoted to his life.

The Lesson.

Samuel was bitterly disappointed in Saul as king of Israel, who was not pleasing to Jehovah. But there were difficulties in replacing him; such an attempt on the part of Samuel would endanger his very life. Jehovah called him to go to Bethlehem where he would find a king for Israel among the sons of Jesse. Fearing Saul, Samuel did not wish the object of his mission to be known, so he took with him a heifer of which to make a sacrifice. When the elders of the city met him to ask fearfully whether he came peaceably he replied, "Peaceably. I come to sacrifice unto Jehovah: sanctify yourselves and come with me to the sacrifice. "He sanctified Jesse and Jesse's sons and bade them come to the sacrifice. This gave him the desired opportunity to observe the sons of Jesse. There was Eliab, whom Samuel surveyed with approval until he was warned by Jehovah that he was not the chosen king. Seven sons of Jesse passed before Samuel, and to each one Samuel said, "The Lord hath not chosen thee." Then the boy, David, was summoned from the sheep herding. Samuel knew that the boy, "ruddy, and withal of a beautiful countenance," was the chosen king. He anointed him "and the spirit of Jehovah came mightily upon David from that day forward." The duty which had brought him thither accomplished, Samuel returned to Ramah. Thus was David made king. He was a many-sided man—musician, poet, a shining example of friendship. He was chosen a man of God, but he sinned and he reaped the bitter fruits of his sins.

Leading Thoughts.

1. "He who is least shall be greatest." 2. "He was a friend"—one of the most beautiful things to be. 3. The qualities that crowned David king among men should be the qualities of every Christian.

After listening to an address in favor of law observance by Rev. R. H. Harper, pastor of the First Methodist Church, New Orleans, fifty men and women members took the following oath administered by Mr. Harper: "In the future, as long as I drive a motor car, I solemnly swear to obey the traffic laws of the state and of the city, and I will endeavor to induce others to do the same." Mr. Harper said, among other things, "Thousands of good citizens who would not think of committing any kind of intentional violence and who would shrink from murder as from a plague, drive cars at a breakneck speed. They are murderers whenever their carelessness takes a human life."

Topic for May 13

WHY DO WE BELIEVE THAT JESUS CHRIST IS THE SON OF GOD?
John 20:24-31

"Who do men say that the Son of man is? Who say ye that I am?" Matt. 16:13, 15.

"It was near the city of Caesarea Philippi, in the northern part of Palestine, in the midst of a pagan population, in some secluded spot far removed from the curious eyes of the scribes and the hostile ears of the Pharisees that Jesus propounded to the twelve men who had been with him from the beginning this surprising question, 'Who do men say that I am?' Simon Peter, who always acted as spokesman for his brethren, gave in substance this reply, 'Men are not agreed in their opinion concerning you; some say one thing and some say another. But they are all agreed on one point, they all say you are a great man, worthy to be ranked among the very greatest of prophets.' And the answer fell like a shadow across the Master's face. And then, looking earnestly into the eyes of the twelve he put this question, 'Who say ye that I am?' And again it was Simon Peter who made reply, 'Thou art the Messiah, the Son of the living God.' And the answer fell like a sunbeam across the Master's face. 'Blessed art thou, Simon, out of men like you I will build my church, and the forces of destruction will never overcome it.'

"From the day of this conference at Caesarea Philippi down to the present day there have never been in this world but two opinions concerning Jesus of Nazareth. It seems, I know, that there have been hundreds of different conceptions of his person, but all these hundreds can be reduced to two. According to one opinion, Jesus is a man, a great man, truly wonderful, but only a man, a bright and shining light like John the Baptist, a sensitive and tender-hearted patriot and martyr like Jeremiah, an intrepid messenger from the courts of heaven like Elijah, a beautiful Heraclitus or Socrates, a noble Seneca or Epictetus, a Palestinian Confucius or Buddha, very great and very wonderful, but still a man. According to the other opinion he is the Messiah, the desire of the nations, the consummator of history, the one who was to come, the Son of the Eternal, the only Son of God, unparalleled, unapproached, unapproachable, unique, unlike any person that has ever been or that will ever be.

"From the beginning the Christian church took the higher of these two conceptions, and she has steadfastly held it to the present hour. The lower conception is easier to grasp than the higher, it requires less thought; it lays a tax less severe upon the intellect. The lower conception is easier; but in this world we are not after easy conceptions, we are after the truth. The lower conception requires less spiritual preparedness than does the higher.

"The first fact (in favor of the Sonship of Christ) is the New Testament. There is no doubt it exists, nor is there any doubt that it has existed for nearly two thousand years. . . . Jesus placed himself in a class by himself, 'I am from above.' The man who laid the foundations of the Christian church in Asia Minor and in Europe, took Jesus Christ at his word and believed that he was all that he said he was.

"The New Testament portrait is not sufficient. It does not look as though the apostles felt that the sole defence of the Christian religion must be a book. Only a living institution is sufficient for great things. The Christian church is the argument which the Christian man must present to unbelievers, and the defenders of our faith who have best known how to present their cause have, from the first century downward, dwelt not upon isolated texts written down in a book, but have pointed with confidence to a mighty institution, an indubitable monument to the greatness of our Lord. Christianity is not altogether dependent upon a book. The religion of Christ is not to be proved by the dexterous manipulation of scattered sentences. Whenever you become bewildered by the conflicting voices of printed books, throw the books away and get out under God's great broad sky, and let your eyes sweep across the centuries. Jesus cuts a large figure in the New Testament. . . . but he cuts a still larger figure in human history."—From "Things Fundamental," by Charles Edward Jefferson, Pastor Broadway Tabernacle, New York City.

World Kindred Week

A vast machinery and organization, involving all of the young people's organizations, and representing a combined constituency of 16,000 young people, has been set up and put into working order for one purpose. And that purpose is to develop a greater missionary interest.

During World Kindred Week, May 14-18, we will present at Medinah Temple two dramatic expositions of the mission fields. The first one, given on Monday and Tuesday evenings, May 14-15, is "Finger-Prints" and will portray the home mission field. This year the negro has been the topic studied in the home mission study classes. In Chicago this subject is peculiarly significant. "Finger-Prints" will have an unusual interest because the participants have been selected from the church folks of both races. Moreover, it will not be a heavy problem-play but one which all of us will enjoy and understand. It will picture the humorous and occasionally tragic situations which arise through misunderstandings between the two races. But the conclusion is a satisfactory one brought about through Christian cooperation.

On Thursday and Friday evenings, May 17-18, "Tides of India" will portray the foreign mission field. This pageant play tells the story of a rajah who, after threatening to turn a tiger loose on the Christians near his place, finds, in the end, that Christ is the leader he has sought and, renouncing his own kingdom, enlists in the service of the King of kings. This production will be featured by the participation of over 500 of young people from the various churches and will be a living picture full of color and action.

There is wide-spread criticism directed at movies and theaters in general. Consequently, we Christian young people who are the managers and participants of these Christian dramas, rejoice at the opportunity of giving these enterprises personifying the Lord's work.

This is not a scheme to make money. This undertaking has the moral support of the Chicago Church Federation, proper, and of the following young people's organizations: A. M. E. Young People's Union, Baptist Young People's Union, Chicago Christian Endeavor Union, Congregational Young People's Societies, Epworth League, Evangelical League, Interdenominational Young People's Union, Luther League and Presbyterian Young People's Federation.

Furthermore, this project is guaranteed financially by a group of individuals. If there be any net profits they will be used for promoting religious educational work in the various organizations and will be divided as follows: 50 per cent to the Young People's Commission of the Chicago Church Federation and 50 per cent to the young people's organizations cooperating.

We are confident that these Christian dramas are worthy of the support of the people of Chicago, since they will be enlightening and interesting spiritually, to both the young and old.

Memorial to F. Wayland Ayer

By Geo. E. Burlingame

Men eminent in the spheres of American business, culture, and religion, united in witnessing to the nobleness and greatness of the late F. Wayland Ayer, in a memorial service held Apr. 14, at the North Baptist Church, Camden, N. J., where for fifty years Mr. Ayer was active as a Christian worker and leader. The occasion was no less a testimonial to the beauty and worth of noble and life-long friendships grounded in a common Christian faith and in a common purpose to render service.

The names of the speakers at the memorial service are sufficient evidence of its significance. They include Mr. Earl D. Babst of New York, president of the American Sugar Refining Co., Dean Harry Hayward, formerly of Delaware College, Mr. Cyrus H. K. Curtis of the Curtis Publishing Co., Mr. James C. Colgate, of New York, and Mr. John R. Mott, general secretary of the International Y. M. C. A. Secretary C. E. Goodall of the New Jersey Convention and Pastor James Dalton Morrison of the North Camden Church also took part in the service.

The report which follows undertakes only to reflect in a few citations the spirit and content of the tributes offered by the men who knew Mr. Ayer most intimately in business and in Christian service. The chairman was Mr. Wilfred W. Fry, of Camden, who is chairman of the board of trustees of the church and the present head of the firm of N. W. Ayer and Son. "We are gathered here as a great family," he said, "in memory of our great friend and leader, in the place where he served his Lord for half a century."

The Business Pioneer

Mr. Babst related the story of a business relationship and warm personal friendship continuing through twenty-five years. His theme was "Mr. Ayer, the Business Pioneer," and he startled some of his hearers with the statement that when Mr. Ayer began his career in 1869, the advertising business was a discredited and outcast enterprise. "Since Mr. Ayer established the great firm which bears his name, advertising has become a dynamic social force working for the benefit of all, and in this development Mr. Ayer has been the outstanding pioneer. In the early days a friend said to him, 'I wish you were in a business I could respect as much as I respect you.' The time came when that friend confessed that he did respect the business to which Mr. Ayer had imparted respectability and honor, even as he had long respected the man himself."

Dean Hayward, now the head of the agricultural division of N. W. Ayer and Son, spoke of "Mr. Ayer, the Farmer." He affirmed that his great friend was "one of the men who laid the foundation for the modern conception of agriculture. He could not have helped being a farmer, devout, loving, passionately in love with nature. His farm 'Meridale,' in Delaware County, New York, represents thirty-five years of continuous effort on his part to develop methods of soil and stock culture, and to improve methods of marketing farm and dairy products; and it involves a business of several hundred thousand dollars per year. As many people knew Mr. Ayer as a breeder of fine Jersey cattle, as all others together knew him in other relations. He possessed, with one exception, the largest herd of pure-bred Jerseys in the world. As a farmer, just as in everything else, he was content only when he had put his utmost into every effort."

The Friend

Mr. Jarvis Wood, a member of the Ayer firm, introduced Mr. Curtis, whose theme was "Mr. Ayer, the Friend." Few men in America, perhaps, are better qualified to deal with that topic than the founder of the Curtis Publishing Company, whose fate in his great adventure hung on Mr. Ayer's confidence and support at a critical moment in the history of the Curtis Company. During the years 1882-1892 Mr. Curtis lived in Camden, and during that time an intimate friendship with Mr. Ayer developed. Early in the history of the Curtis Company, Mr. Curtis asked Mr. Ayer for $400 credit, which was extended on condition that the Ayer firm should place the advertising at its own discretion. Under this arrangement the $400 was spent on three periodicals, two of which paid no commissions. The results were so satisfactory that Mr. Curtis was encouraged to go ahead with his enterprise; and the time came when he had to ask Mr. Ayer for a credit of $200,000, for the development of the Saturday Evening Post, which he had just purchased. The story is familiar to those who have read Mr. Bok's narrative recently published; but the interest was intense as Mr. Curtis himself related the details of this crucial experience in his career as a publisher. Mr. Ayer gave him the $200,000 credit desired, but reminded him that arangements must be made with the paper mills also for credit to carry him through the advertising venture. The paper men were asked to come for an interview; but when the request was made they flatly refused credit. After long discussion Mr. Ayer asked Mr. Curtis to allow him to confer with the paper men alone, and in a short time they returned, saying to Mr. Curtis, with outstretched hands, "You win!" It was long afterward that Mr. Curtis learned that Mr. Ayer had himself guaranteed Mr. Curtis' account with the paper men, at the risk of his own business, believing that his friend was worthy of that confidence.

Mr. James C. Colgate, who served as treasurer in the Baptist Laymen's Movement of which Mr. Ayer was chairman, told the story, familiar to readers of The Baptist, of the tremendous contribution made by Mr. Ayer to the progress of the Baptist denomination in recent years. "He received every honor that his denomination could bestow. The origin of the New World Movement and the reorganization of the denomination for higher efficiency may be traced to Mr. Ayer. Of him as a Baptist leader we may say, as Kipling said of Cecil Rhodes,

> 'Living, he was the Land,
> And, being dead,
> His soul shall be her soul.'"

Mr. John R. Mott, himself a Christian statesman of world fame, gave the final address, on "Mr. Ayer, the Christian Statesman," in which he set forth and illustrated the qualities which revealed Mr. Ayer as a true statesman of the kingdom of God. A mere summary is here given of an unreportable tribute from one of God's noblemen to a colleague translated to glory. "He had principles which were like the North Star—unswerving, unerring. He was not satisfied merely with following examples: he was willing to set precedents. One of his most enduring principles was that of service, and he often quoted the words of his Master: 'Whosoever would be first among you, shall be servant of all.' How often in anxious moments of conference concerning great Christian enterprises, has he raised the question, 'What policy can we follow that will render the service to our day and generation?' He claimed all realms for Christ; he believed that Christ must one day be Lord of all, or he could not accept him as Lord at all. He claimed for his Lord not only the kingdoms of organized government, but the kingdom of business, the kingdom of wealth, the kingdom of culture, the kingdom of the movies, the kingdom of labor, the kingdom of education, the kingdom of society. Mr. Ayer was profoundly interested in work for the oncoming generation, as was evidenced by his gifts and his service for preparatory schools and for the Boys' Work Department of the Y. M. C. A. What men will live longer than those who pour their lives into the oncoming generation! Another quality of his Christian statesmanship was revealed in his interest to secure moral leadership for the nation, through the colleges and seminaries and otherwise. His capacity for releasing spiritual forces was an aspect of his character impossible to overstate. Often in conferences where the atmosphere was pessimistic, he would break up the gloom and depression by saying with hearty confidence, 'Now let us take counsel with our faith.' The minute adopted by the board of directors of the First National Bank of Philadelphia on the occasion of his death, concludes with this significant sentence: 'Above all he was a clean, reverent, earnest Christian man.'"

A Christian Man

One of the speakers quoted an early saying of Mr. Ayer to the effect that he had put his hand to the plow and intended to go to the end of the furrow; and added this comment on the long and fruitful life now ended: "Mr. Ayer lived long enough to come to the end of the furrow he began, and to see a splendid harvest come from his labor." This impressive memorial service, attended by men so eminent and successful in their pursuit of the higher values of life, provides a most illuminating commentary on the promise of our Lord: "I came that they may have life, and may have it abundantly." It seems fitting that a record of the testimonies given by these men concerning the fidelity, the friendship, the faith and courage and vision and service of F. Wayland Ayer, be secured to our readers, for the encouragement of Christian workers and for the inspiring of youth who must make their choice of ideals and principles in their earnest quest of success in life. "Remember them that had the rule over you, men that spake unto you the word of God; and, considering the issue of their life, imitate their faith."

Milwaukee in 1924

Milwaukee formally became a candidate for the meeting place of the Northern Baptist Convention in 1924, when, at a recent meeting of the Baptist Union, it was voted to extend an invitation at the Atlantic City Convention. This city has never entertained the convention, but the greatest meeting of the B. Y. P. U. A. was held in this city twenty-five or thirty years ago. We have all the attractions that other cities have, and we have two things which many cities do not have, namely, an adequate auditorium in which to meet, and—climate. No convention swelters in Milwaukee. This city is becoming one of the great gathering places for commercial organizations, and in the past years several religious bodies have had conventions here. There are many reasons why the convention should come to the middle states in 1924, and our Baptist work in Wisconsin and Milwaukee would be helped tremendously by having the convention here next year. Our hat is in the ring, brethren!

Mrs. Long Resigns

Mrs. Ann Dorward Long, who for the past six or eight years has had charge of the woman's work in this state, has resigned her position to take effect May 15. She has been elected as associate foreign secretary for the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Mrs. Long's service has been of an unusually high order, and our women will miss her leadership in this state. The best wishes of the whole state go with her to this new task, for which she is so admirably fitted by training and experience.

Board Meeting

The state board meeting was held Apr. 2. Only routine business was transacted. One of the most important things considered was the report of a special committee on the rearrangement of associational boundaries. The committee has spent considerable time on this task, and if the churches will follow their plans, a more efficient system of associational work will result in this state. One of the outstanding features of the committee's work was that the representatives of the German, Swedish and Norwegian groups requested that their churches be invited to join the new groups, and that no differences of race or language divide us in our associations. This was so heartening that the board passed a resolution inviting all Baptist churches in the state to join the English-speaking associations. Already many of the German-speaking churches have done so, and there is a growing conviction among the other groups that they should do so. The Danish-Norwegian group has indicated that it will soon follow the lead of the German brethren. It was also voted to send the superintendent, Dr. A. LeGrand, to Stockholm.

Evangelism

It will be too difficult a task to report all the Easter and pre-Easter evangelistic efforts. The Berlin, Green Bay, Grace of Milwaukee, and a large number of other churches received members by baptism as a result of these meetings. R. L. Kelley, of Delavan, assisted the church at Green Bay, and W. L. Harms assisted Pastor Phelps and the Grace Church. Rollo C. Speer, who began his ministry at the Tabernacle Church in Milwaukee on Easter Day, had the pleasure of baptizing seven converts his first Sunday, and the Sunday following he baptized two Chinese women. These were the fruits of persistent personal work on the part of the good people of that church during the period they were without a pastor.

Other News

J. Sherman Wallace will soon close his work at Madison where he has been the pastor for two years. He is to succeed Doctor Erb on the Publication Society's staff. His associate, Joseph Gleason, the university pastor, will also close his work to enter one of our seminaries, probably Rochester.

Pastor V. N. Robbins has resigned at Hudson. He finds it necessary to take his family to a less rigorous climate. They will remove to California.

Among the recent resignations are Christ Petersen, of Union Grove; N. A. Goransen, of Falun; J. P. Nasby of Camp Douglas; Ray Rasmussen, of Hillsdale; and H. E. Foresberg, of Winneconne.

A. R. Wakeland, who has been doing Y. M. C. A. work in Milwaukee for the past few years, has become the pastor of the Silver Lake Church. He will do some of his educational work while serving these people.

The rural church conference at the University of Wisconsin will be held June 26-July 6. Last year about sixty men of all denominations took the work offered in this course. This year many more are expected. Our Baptist brethren were in evidence last year and will be again this year.

The First Church of Evansville, with A. W. Stephens as minister, is engaged in evangelistic meetings under the leadership of A. W. Miller, the lawyer-evangelist of Indianapolis.

The Soldiers' Meeting

The last two meetings of the Ministers' Conference were of unusual interest. On April 9 it was the annual "Soldiers' Meeting." Then the program is given to the Ministerial G. A. R., and the American Legion. Rev. Geo. W. Need of Norwood, gave a careful soldier's impression of the Civil War. Dr. P. H. MacDowell of Melrose, who was in the army Y. M. C. A. at the front in France, gave a remarkably realistic and impressive recital of personal observations and experiences there. Many called it our best Soldiers' Meeting.

A Live Oriental

On April 16 we heard the "Teddy Roosevelt of China." We found that the was well named. Dr. Teyhi Hsieh, consul in Boston of the Chinese republic, and Chinese delegate at the great conference in Washington for the limitation of armaments; trained in America, yet seeing us through oriental eyes, he gave us an address of much fullness, comprehensiveness, insight and power. Certainly he has the Roosevelt conviction, energy, and omniverous information that made our American leader so remarkable. Dr. Hsieh gave us a swift outline of the long Chinese development, accounted for their great changes, their deep antagonisms, their friendship for America and their fundamental love of peace. His treatment of our deep fears or suspicions of the Chinese was particularly able and convincing. He named them the moral, psychological, economic and administrative fears, and showed how even the things that we feared were but preparations closely to bind together in harmony and understanding the great western and the great eastern republics. Interesting, informing, inspiring and satisfying. Dr. Hsieh made this meeting. Occidental wine seemed almost to endanger the oriental bottle, so amazing was the Chinese energy.

New Administration

Rev. W. Harry Freda, pastor of the Clarendon Street Church, is the new president of the conference, and with him, and a new program committee, we go into the shorter term. The vacation cuts two months out of the six. The last administration was so efficient, and brought on such a succession of brilliant meetings, that our new guides are put consciously on their mettle. With interest and confidence we shall watch results. Chief Freda is one of the best of us, and has named a strong committee for his programs. What we lack most is brisk and bristling discussion. Is it one of the lost arts? How would it do to have once a month a day for that, and for nothing else? It might relieve the accumulated pressure on some burning practical questions. The fear of differences has come to be quite a bogy. We used to thrive by free discussion. There are a lot of things we are saying behind the door, that would sound fine and baptistic from the floor. And their variant expression would make us stronger, more brotherly, more united and more alive.

Notable Addresses

Dr. W. Edward Raffety, editor in chief of our Publication Society, delivered an address of marked acceptability and helpfulness on April 17 at the spring convocation of the Boston University School of Religious Education. He was the principal speaker. He spoke of the "Four-fold Objective of Religious Education." The whole tone of the address was highly spiritual—the manner conversational and persuasive, and the substance impressively Christo-centric, and insistent upon interior values of consecrated character, in the service of Christian instruction and leadership.

A recent address by Dr. Frank W. Padelford, our educational secretary, before the Roger Williams Club, at the First Church, Boston, on "General Education in China" is spoken of as a masterpiece in delineating the remarkable development in Christian education in the great eastern republic. The club is made up of Baptist students in the schools of religious education about Boston.

President Geo. E. Horr, of Newton, gave his Ingersoll Lecture on immortality at Harvard University before an unusually appreciative and discriminating convocation. It came at a time when about 200 ministers were there assembled to consider matters pertaining to present religious conditions. Of course the discourse upon such a subject as Dr. Horr's was weighty, carefully wrought out and nobly expressed, and many will enjoy it when, according to the terms of the Ingersoll Foundation, it will take its place in book form with the lectures of John Fiske, and other illustrious teachers.

Startling Results of a Special Study

At the annual convocation of the Boston University School of Religious Education, Dean Walter S. Althearn gave out the surprising figures of a study which he has made during the past year, concerning the average age of conversion and joining the church in five of the principal evangelical denominations—Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist and Disciples. In forty-three states in a given calendar year, 6,194 persons were traced by exact methods. It was shown that the median age of joining the church was about 14 years.

There are as many below this median age as above it. One-fourth of those joining the church are under twelve, one-half are between eleven and twenty-one. Therefore, the chances are 3 to 1 that the person who has not joined by the time the legal age of twenty-one is reached, never will join at all. Earlier studies made in 1900 made the average period of conversion between sixteen and seventeen. These later studies show the surprising shift to a much earlier period.

Results of other similar studies at the university will be released from time to time. The School of Religions, under leadership remarkably competent, is pursuing research work in church statistics and measurements that is practically new. A large number of college graduates are drawn to its valuable and practical courses. These studies give us a hint of the scope of their processes.

"Honor to Whom Honor!"

His honor, our mayor, now and then compels our unqualified endorsement. He has just come down hard on the crazy fad that we call the "endurance dance." Silly women have exceeded in it thus far, but when a silly man made his arrangements to go deeper, the mayor denied him a hall. How can folly be at its utmost when it is impossible to "hire a hall?"

District of Columbia

By H. W. O. Millington

The Woman's Missionary Society of Calvary Church held its April meeting on the second Tuesday of the month at 11 a. m., the president, Mrs. Kendrick, presiding. Mrs. William A. Wilbur led the devotional exercises. After a short business meeting the president invited to the platform the speakers of the day—fifteen ladies, each a representative of a different denomination. Each speaker in a three minute talk answered the question "What is the most worth-while thing that your denomination is doing for humanity?" Mrs. William S. Abernethy, before making her address as a representative of the Baptists, extended a gracious welcome to the speakers and strangers in the audience. Then followed addresses by representatives of the following denominations: Catholic, Christian, Congregational, Episcopal, Friends, Jewish, Methodist, North, Methodist, South, Presbyterian, North, Presbyterian, South, Reform, United Brethren, Unitarian, Universalist. The keynote of every address was the work among the young people, training them to be the leaders of the future. This was an exceptionally fine meeting in every way. There was a large attendance and the spirit was thoroughly good. The great desire as felt by the people and voiced by the different speakers was a closer union with God, and a greater usefulness in his kingdom. The meeting closed with prayer by Dr. Anderson.

We have recently had a visit from the Colgate University Glee Club in a concert given in the auditorium of the Central high school for the benefit of the Baptist Home for the aged. A great audience gathered, and the concert was of a very high order.

J. W. BAILEY

Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D. for thirty-four years pastor of the Temple Church and now chaplain of the United States Senate has had a unique experience as a Baptist minister. He had the privilege of baptizing his mother, who had been for over fifty years a devout Episcopalian and through whose prayers he himself was converted. He also baptized his only sister, his five children, his two daughters-in-law, and nine grandchildren, making in all nineteen. Perhaps some minister may be able to match this record, but I do not imagine that there are many who can.

Each week since the return of Doctor Tupper, pastor of the First Church, from the Near East last October, there have been additions to the church and last Sunday after addresses by Doctor Millington, Mr. E. H. Jackson and the pastor, the quota suggested by the Columbia District Association for this church, $10,500, was fully subscribed; and because of this fact and of the grace of God in leading many new members into the church of late the large congregation sang the doxology most heartily.

On Thursday evening April 12, as Doctor Henry Allen Tupper was about to leave his study for the platform from which he was to lecture at the prayer meeting service, Mr. Yui, a member of the Old North Baptist Church, Shanghai, China, presented a letter of introduction from the Chinese pastor of that church and from Miss Kelley our missionary, stating Mr. Yui was a consecrated Baptist and that he was sent to America by his government on important official business. In conversation, Doctor Tupper asked him how long he had been in Washington and to his surprise our Chinese brother said "One hour and a half." Mr. Yui explained that he had never visited America before and on his arrival in the capital city he did not desire to call first at the embassy of his government to pay his respects or station and immediately after leaving his baggage at the Cosmos Club he came to the prayer meeting service of the First Church. He remained during the entire service and next day called at the Chinese Embassy, at the White House and took the train for New Orleans where he is to attend a convention of mechanical and electrical engineers. Is this not a fine illustration of Christian loyalty presented by one of our Chinese converts?

Dr. Bailey Resigns Presidency

Rev. J. W. Bailey has resigned the presidency of the Colorado Woman's College that he may accept the chair of New Testament interpretation in the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School. In taking this step Dr. Bailey is doing what he has always wanted to do—give himself exclusively to the teaching of the New Testament. His work at the Colorado Woman's College has been of the highest type.

Dr. Bailey was graduated from Franklin College, class of '98, A. B.; University of Chicago, D. B., 1901; University of Chicago, Ph. D.; New Testament major, and Old Testament minor, 1904. He has held pastorates in Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa. He was a member of the University of Chicago Extension staff in New Testament, 1902-1914; professor of Bibical literature in Central College, Iowa, 1910-1917; president of Central College, 1914-17, and president of Colorado Woman's College for the past five years. For more than five years he was a member of the executive committee of the Northern Baptist Convention and numerous other boards and committees in both denominational and general religious activities.

Hotel Accommodations at Stockholm

The committee to promote attendance upon the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance has reserved a substantial number of rooms at hotels at Stockholm which will be held until delegates have had time to communicate with the committee. About half of the accommodations secured are single rooms. The rates at the more expensive hotels will be $2.50 or $2.75 a day per person (meals not included). At more modest but comfortable hotels the rates will be about $1.50 a day, or perhaps a trifle lower. Not many of the rooms have private baths, such accommodations being less characteristic of European than American hotels, and where such accommodations are available a higher rate will be charged. Sweden is one of the few countries in Europe where the currency has not depreciated in value since the war, but hotel rates in Stockholm are moderate in comparison with charges in American cities for similar accommodations. Delegates desiring hotel accommodations should communicate immediately with the Baptist World Alliance Committee, 276 Fifth Ave., Room 824, New York City, indicating the character of the accommodations desired and the date of their arrival in Stockholm. It is exceedingly important that this information be included.

MRS. MILLIE S. WELLS, aged 73, mother of Rev. John Maston Wells, president of Grand Island College, Neb., died at Battle Creek, Mich., Thursday, April 5, while visiting her daughter, Miss Anna Wells, who has charge of the social work of the sanitarium. Mrs. Wells was a member of the Second Church of Palmer, Mass., having united with it by letter in 1886. For thirty-seven years she had been active in every effort for the advancement of the cause of Christ. The funeral service was held in Palmer, Rev. F. C. A. Jones officiating. The interment took place at Adams, Mass., the former family home.

REV. B. G. EWALD, PASTOR of the Beth Eden Church, Fitchburg, will begin his new work with the church at Sunnyvale, Cal., May 1.

THERE WERE THIRTY-TWO ADDITIONS to the First Church, Arlington, on Easter, twenty-three by baptism.

WITHOUT ANY SPECIAL MEETINGS except the week of pre-Easter services at which the pastor, Rev. Arthur T. Brooks, preached every noon and evening, over 100 new members were added to the Dudley Street Church, Boston, between Christmas and Easter. Sixty persons received the hand of fellowship at the morning service.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

AS THE RESULT OF SPECIAL meetings in March, the church at Peterboro received nine additions on Easter, six by baptism.

PORTSMOUTH: THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN, Court Street Christian, Methodist and Baptist churches recently held a series of meetings in which all cooperated. Rev. Isaac Higginbotham, pastor of the Middle Street Baptist Church, was chairman of the local committee and had charge of the plans for the meetings. The four ministers did all the preaching. The meetings were held from March 4-25 and were followed immediately by union Passion week services in which eight of the local churches participated. A number of decisions were made and the work is being carried on in several of the churches. A splendid spirit of fellowship was evidenced and plans are being made for union evangelistic services of the four churches next fall. All the expenses were paid by free-will offerings and enough money was received so that it was possible to send $20 to the treasurer of each church at the close of the meetings.

BECAUSE OF THE SPIRIT AROUSED by the union services, the attendance at the Middle Street Church on Easter was more than 1,000. Sixteen candidates were baptized in the evening by the pastor.

CONNECTICUT

THE PACKERVILLE CHURCH of which Rev. J. W. Higgins is pastor, was eighty years old last St. Patrick's day. Although the adult resident membership only numbers six, the entire obligation to the New World Movement, of $1,000, will be paid by the end of the period. This means an increase in benevolence of 300 per cent and in the pastor's salary of 50 per cent.

THE NEW HOPE CHURCH, (negro), Danbury, accepted its quota of $1,000 to the New World Movement. This will be paid the end of this month. In addition, the church has gathered $12,000 for a new church building.

MAINE

REV. H. F. HUSE, pastor of the church at Dover-Foxcroft, reports that two persons were baptized on Easter.

THE NEW IMMANUEL CHURCH, Portland, which will carry forward the traditions and the work of the Free Street Baptist and the Congress Street Free Baptist churches is laying broad foundations for its future. A special Easter offering of over $48 was taken. Dr. Woodman Bradbury, of Newton Theological Institution, was the preacher on a recent Sunday.

Colby College

The trustees of Colby College held their spring meeting in Portland, April 14. Chief Justice Cornish presided. He paid a special tribute to the loyalty of the trustees, and also to the devotion and ability of President Roberts. The report of the finance committee showed that the college, although spending more than ever before, is still living within its income.

The report of the president showed that the largest enrolment of students ever reported is in attendance, and that the second century fund of $150,000 has now been subscribed, and over $60,000 of it has already been paid in. This in addition to the centennial fund of $500,000, reported last year, greatly increases the endowment of the college.

Justice Cornish referred in terms of appreciation to the work of President Roberts, who, in a very quiet way, without professional boosters, screaming publicity, or heartrending appeals, has secured these great funds. All had been done in a way to increase, rather than diminish the loyalty of the people to the college. It was proposed that instead of the usual votes of thanks, the appreciation of the trustees should be shown by giving President and Mrs. Roberts a trip through Europe the coming summer at the expense of the college.

Prof. Charles J. Chipman, librarian, has prepared a Blue Book filled with information that will be of interest to every friend of the college.

VERMONT

THE FIRST CHURCH, BRATTLEBORO, Dr. Clark T. Brownell, pastor, held its eighty-third annual supper and business meeting April 11, with more than 200 members present. During the year forty-four new names were added to the membership, and a sum exceeding $16,000 raised for all purposes. A teacher-training class with forty members and a school of missions have been held with enthusiasm. The trustees reported the sum of $8,000 now in hand toward the construction of a parish house. The budget adopted and subscribed for the coming year reached the highest amount in the history of the church, and fully covers all regular expenses. The salary of the pastor, Dr. Clark T. Brownell, was increased for the third time during his pastorate of five years.

THE LUDLOW CHURCH, Rev. W. Chase, pastor, gave the morning service Easter Sunday over to the Bible school, and all ages had a part in the Easter program. The observance of the Lord's Supper was made the occasion of a "fellowship service" of unusual significance. The thought of keeping the home ties unbroken was made prominent, and then the hand of fellowship was given to fourteen, welcoming them separately and personally into the church home where all interests are shared. In the evening three were baptized—two young people and a man in mature life, whose wife comes into the church by experience.

REV. R. G. GREENGRASS, pastor of the Randolph Church, has just closed his first year of labor on this field. A boy's club has been organized with fourteen members. A woman's missionary society has been organized and is doing good work.

REV. ELBERT J. SMITH, pastor of the churches at Fair Haven and Hydeville, had a great day Easter Sabbath, with full houses. Twelve were received into the church membership at Fair Haven; five others were to have been received and were ill, but will come later. At the communion service which followed the preaching, twenty-two were extended the right hand of fellowship. Some of the oldest members of the church declared it was the largest communion they had seen in thirty years. The prayer meetings are well attended. The young people's society is aggressive, having interesting meetings with an average attendance of sixty-five. At Hydeville, Mr. Smith's other preaching station, two were baptized and five await the ordinance there. Pastor Smith and his leaders in each church are putting forth every effort to raise the full allotment for the New World Movement.

REV. E. B. TREFETHREN, who has been pastor of the Baptist and Congregational churches at South Windham and Windham Center for the past year, will close his labors on those fields May 1 and remove to his home in the West.

THE ST. ALBANS CHURCH GAVE Rev. and Mrs. S. Walter Schurman a reception on Friday evening, April 6, which was largely attended and full of enthusiasm.

THE WORK AT THE ITALIAN Mission, Barre, which is now in charge of Rev. B. J. Lehigh, pastor of the First Church, with Miss Katherine Aldrich as missionary, is progressing well. The average attendance each Sunday is now between ninety and one hundred.

THE FIRST CHURCH, BURLINGTON, Dr. William J. Ford, pastor, has had a very successful year. Forty new members have been received into the church, 200 chairs have been bought for the Sunday-school room and a new piano has been installed, which speaks well for the cooperation of the people with Dr. Ford during the first year of his pastorate and which promises much for the future as Dr. Ford already has a splendid hold on the church and congregation and also on the entire community. Deacon Arthur G. Crane, an active worker in all departments of the church and an efficient officer of the state convention, has been laid aside for three months and confined to the hospital, but is now back home and able to get about and see his friends and attend to some business.

Rev. C. E. Gould, pastor of the church at North Troy, has been ill, and has been ordered by his physician to rest for a month. This he is doing, while the church edifice is being rebuilt after having been destroyed by a recent fire.

Rev. E. Werner Church, who has been missionary pastor for the state convention for the past year, will close his labors May 1 to take up the pastorate of the churches at Websterville and Washington. He is now laboring at Websterville, and on Easter Sunday in the presence of a large audience received six into the church by baptism.

RHODE ISLAND

The Mount Pleasant Church has won a remarkable spiritual victory. For some time past it has been facing the need of enlarged accommodations. The second unit of its proposed plant was imperatively needed and to erect it from $12,000 to $14,000 was required. Many difficulties stood in the way, but the leaders got a vision of the "All Power" and began planning their pledge-raising campaign in faith, praying as they planned. On Easter Sunday they asked the members for $14,000 in pledges, payable in two years. God honored their faith even beyond their expectations and when the congregation sang the Doxology at the close of the evening service, the thermometer registered pledges for $15,800.

Dr. Joseph Taylor, of west China, has closed a successful missionary itinerary in Rhode Island. In twelve days he visited sixteen churches, and made eighteen missionary addresses. Dr. Taylor is a missionary statesman. He sees Christianity in action transforming empires. His description of the Christian movement in China is fascinating and thrilling. He has set forward the cause of missions in Rhode Island.

The Woodlawn Church, Pawtucket, is passing through hallowed days. God has rewarded the labors of a faithful minister and people with a gracious revival. Seventy-five persons of varying ages have made the great decision and entered the fellowship of Jesus. Pastor Greene baptized thirty-four of them on Easter Sunday. Twenty more will follow soon, while a number of juniors have been gathered into an instruction class and will receive Christian baptism. The Woodlawn Church is making preparations to entertain the state convention.

The Pawtucket Church is rejoicing in the cordial acceptance by Rev. Raymond Cooper, of Millinocket, Me., a unanimous invitation to become its pastor. He will greet the Pawtucket people as pastor on the first Sunday in June. Meanwhile Rev. E. M. Lake, formerly of the First Church, Springfield, Mass., is the acceptable supply.

Calvary Church, Providence, has recently added to its diaconate by electing seventy-two junior deacons and deaconesses. The entire church membership is being assigned to these deacons and deaconesses for constant spiritual watch-care. A deacon and deaconess together is responsible for a unit composed of about thirty-five members. In addition to these junior deacons and deaconesses there are seventeen life deacons in the church. It is planned that all of these will meet together frequently, make reports on the work and discuss plans for the fuller spiritual development of the church membership.

Those who think that the rural church problem is an unsoluble one, should study the work of Donald B. Strout in three of Rhode Island's country fields. Brother Strout is a sturdily-built, energetic young minister, of resourceful mind, and generous heart who has adopted Paul's rule of being all things to all men that he might win some. He conducts Boy Scouts, men's brotherhoods, daily vacation Bible schools, promotes health betterment and food production, as well as preaching services and prayer meetings. The consequence is that rural churches believed to be dead and ready for burial have been resurrected and are now throbbing with spiritual life.

NEW YORK

The New York District Women's Foreign and Home Mission Societies will hold their annual meeting May 8-10 in the Tabernacle Church, Utica. Dr. Eleanor Campbell, Miss Ruth Howard, Miss Jessie Burrall, Mrs. J. M. Baker, Miss Bessie Traber, Mrs. T. E. Adams, Dr. Robert B. Longwell and Mrs. H. B. Montgomery will be the speakers. On May 8 there will be a W. W. G. banquet at the Park Church. The headquarters will be the Hotel Utica. Mrs. F. E. Swancott, Whitesboro, N. Y., is general chairman. The entertainment chairman is Mrs. W. C. Bromley, 1663 Neilson St., Utica, N. Y. Delegates will be entertained. Application should be made in advance.

Keuka College

This college for women opened in 1921. The enrolment each year has been of capacity size and the entering class for September is already registered.

The standard for admission and of scholarship has been set high. Fully one-fifth of the students are of state honor or scholarship grade. The summer school opens July 2 and continues to Aug. 11.

After the summer school the World Wide Guild will hold a house party, at which there will be an attendance of nearly 300. The Baptist pastors' summer conference will follow the house party, Aug. 20-26. There is a course in Christian leadership which prepares pupils for definite Christian service. Thus the college is making a real contribution to Christian education.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Rev. Richard W. Wickes, pastor of the Tabernacle Church, Harrisburg, has presented his resignation because of ill health. He had been pastor for three years. During that time the old building was sold and a new lot had been purchased. Work on the new edifice will begin shortly.

First Church, Pittston: At the annual business meeting, it was found that despite unfavorable labor conditions, the last mortgage note on the property had been paid. A fund has been started for a new parsonage. There have been twelve additions to the membership, eight by baptism. The present pastor, Rev. M. H. Jones, is in his eighth year of service.

Rev. Frank A. Stanton, pastor of the Berean Church, Carbondale, recently closed a two weeks' evangelistic campaign. He preached every evening. Thirty-five persons confessed conversion, and of these, twenty-three were baptized on Easter, and six on the following Sunday. The church closed its fiscal year March 31 and in spite of business depression and the extensive improvements made on the building, all bills have been paid and there is a small balance in the treasury. The pastor is now in his second year of service.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Rev. G. Morton Walker, pastor of the First Church, Meadville, baptized twenty-eight persons on Easter. The offering for the day was over $1,000.

St. John's Church (negro), of Meadville, of which Rev. E. H. Hamblin is pastor, is planning extensive improvements on the building. The membership now numbers over 200. Eleven candidates were recently baptized.

Thirty candidates were recently baptized at the church at Wilkinsburg of which Rev. F. L. Carr is pastor. There were thirty-five additions by letter and experience.

Mississippi Valley

ILLINOIS

Rev. C. W. Webb closed his work at Woodriner the first of the month. He has accepted the pastorate of the Tremont Church.

Rev. J. A. Wilson resigned recently at Hartford to become pastor of the newly organized church at Milton Heights, Alton.

The Morning Star class of the Freeport Church of which Rev. G. B. Hopkins is pastor, has The Baptist and Missions in the public library where they can be read by all who desire. This class was started two years ago with about a dozen members. The membership has increased until now they have three times as many as when it started.

The winter term graduation exercises of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, were held April 19. The fifty-eight graduates of the day classes, together with 209 graduates from the correspondence department, represent forty states of the Union, Canada, Panama, England, Scotland, Denmark, Egypt, India, and the Philippines. The enrolment in the day classes is now the largest in the history of the institute. The graduation address was given by Rev. R. E. Vale, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Oak Park.

Elliott Avenue Church, Springfield: Mrs. R. B. Favoright of Jerseyville assisted Pastor Drussel in a two weeks' meeting. There were sixty conversions.

INDIANA

It had been the objective of the church at Sullivan, of which Rev. A. A. Cohn is pastor, to have the Easter attendance reach 1,000. However, this mark was passed for 1106 persons were present at the services on that day. The goal set for the near future is a new church building.

MICHIGAN

Two of the members of the Michigan Avenue Church, Saginaw, are making it possible for the pastor, Rev. Andrew H. Harnly, a former pastor, Dr. Howard Chapman, now student pastor at the University of Michigan, and Mrs. Crissie Giesel, an active worker in the church, to attend the World Alliance at Stockholm. Mrs. Harnly and Mrs. Chapman are expecting to accompany their husbands on the trip.

The union evangelistic meeting of the Bethel Baptist and North Presbyterian churches of Kalamazoo, conducted by A. W. Littrell and D. L. Moody, were a success. As a result, there have been eighteen additions to the membership of the Bethel Church, and twenty-five to the North Church.

The State Convention

To be held with the College Church, Hillsdale, the First Church cooperating, May 14-17.

Monday, May 14, 7:30 p. m., Michigan ministers' conference, address by Prof. W. H. Davis, Louisville, Ky.

Tuesday, May 15, 8:30: conference continued; 9:30 a. m., Woman's Mission Society, reports on city missions; Christian Americanization, college counsellor, literature, missionary education, continuation campaign. Address by Mrs. John Nuveen, Chicago; 1:30 p. m., Michigan Convention. Welcome by Dr. W. G. Spencer, president Hillsdale College. Address by the convention president, Mr. Ralph E. Jennings. ## OHIO

Rev. M. R. Sheldon, pastor of the First Church, Bucyrus, resigned April 15 to accept a call to the Immanuel Church, Erie, Pa. The resignation will become effective the latter part of May. During his pastorate of a little over three years, there have been 140 additions to the church membership, ninety-nine by baptism.

At the annual meeting of the Bethany Church, Wooster, it was found that the financial resources of the church amount to $4,500 with no unpaid bills or other obligations. The trustees were directed to obtain bids for the improvement of the building with stucco finish. A substantial fund for this undertaking is already on hand. Rev. W. Leo Brown is pastor.

MINNESOTA

Twenty persons were baptized on Easter at the Elim Swedish Baptist Church, Minneapolis. The pastor, Rev. R. A. Arlander, has been granted a three months' vacation to attend the Stockholm meeting.

IOWA

Rev. H. O. Meyer, of Des Moines, recently closed a series of meetings with the church at Chariton of which Rev. J. A. Pettit is pastor. As a result, seven persons have been baptized. The church is working hard to complete its pledge to the N. W. M.

Rev. R. B. Davidson, pastor of the First Church at Ames, is leading his forces triumphantly. Ames, the seat of the state agricultural college, is a strategic point. The evening services of the church are being conducted by a number of leading Christian laymen who are presenting scientific facts in a sane Christian manner. The subjects considered are: April 15, "Chemistry and Evolution," by Prof. F. E. Brown; April 22, Physics, by Prof. J. W. Woodrow; April 29, Botany, by Prof. J. N. Martin; May 6, Geology, by Prof. S. L. Galpin; May 13, Bacteriology, by Dean R. E. Buchanan; May 20, Embryology, by Prof. J. E. Guthrie, and Religion, by Rev. R. B. Davidson. During the morning services Mr. Davidson gives a series of sermons on "Great Movements in Church History."

Rev. J. H. Woodsum, pastor at Creston, reports encouragement along many lines in his church program.

Rev. W. H. Hoge, pastor at Independence, says things are moving along nicely on his field. He is busy rounding up the New World Movement funds at this time.

Rev. Lewis Jacobson is leading his church at Sioux City in a constructive program along all lines. Although one of the younger pastors, yet he is proving himself a leader of the Baptist hosts in Iowa.

Rev. J. O. White, pastor of the church at Indianola, is doing constructive work. Simpson College gives the Methodists a leading position in that city, yet Mr. White is attending to the interests of Baptists as well.

Rev. H. R. Best, pastor of the Forest Avenue Church of Des Moines, is preaching a series of evening sermons on the general subject of building a new world. These sermons deal with the task of the churches in social reconstruction.

The University Church of Des Moines united with the Forest Avenue Church in a baptismal service Sunday evening April 15. Ten candidates were baptized for membership in the University Church, among them two students of the university. One of the students is a senior and expects to go to the mission field after further study in another institution. University Church is getting hold of the student life of Des Moines University, especially through its evening program, which is entirely a student organization. Chaplain J. Orrin Gould is the aggressive pastor of this growing church. The church voted unanimously to request Mr. Bernard W. Armstrong, and Miss Rhoda C. Broholm, soon to be married, represent the church in Africa. They will be the first missionaries going out from the University Church.

Training schools for workers in church vacation and week-day schools are being held in four sections of the state. These schools are being promoted by the department of religious education of the convention with Rev. Victor N. Witter as director. Other instructors are Rev. C. A. Carmen of Grinnell, Rev. J. O. Browne of Indianola, Rev. C. C. Browne of Dunkerton. The meetings are as follows: Ottumwa, April 23-25; Creston, 25-27; Rockwell City, 30-May 2; Waterloo, 2-4.

The board of the Iowa summer assembly held a session at headquarters, Des Moines, on April 18. A complete program was arranged for the assembly which meets at Iowa Falls July 18-29. Director Victor N. Witter has been able to secure the services of a number of leaders of young people's work for this assembly.

President John W. Million of Des Moines University recently delivered the sermon when George C. Conrad, a senior of the university, was ordained to the gospel ministry.

NEBRASKA

The Olivet Church of Omaha dedicated the social and educational unit of its new building on Nov. 5, 1922. The church was organized Oct. 15, 1889, and erected a little frame building. The section of the city where it was located did not develop as it was expected, and the church needed the help of the state convention for thirty years. On the thirtieth anniversary of its organization, it voted to assume self-support. It soon outgrew the little building. A fund was started, and the pastor was sent to the N. B. C. at Des Moines to see Mr. Geo. Merrill, the Home Mission Society architect. Mr. Merrill visited Omaha and suggested plans for the building adapted to the lot and location at Thirty-eighth and Ames Ave. That part of the city where growth was retarded for so many years is now growing by leaps and bounds. A new high school to cost three-quarters of a million dollars is being erected in the adjoining block. During the week of special services closing on Easter, more than forty persons confessed Christ. Rev. George Van Winkle is pastor.

NORTH DAKOTA

The Red River Valley Association will meet with the Grand Forks Church, May 10-11; the Norwegian Conference, with the Valley City Church, June 7-10; Northwestern Association, with the Roseglen Church, June 15-17; North Dakota German Conference, with the Hebron Church, June 19-24; state Sunday school Convention, at Jamestown, June 20-22; the Russian Conference, with the Dogden Church, June 22-24; North Dakota Association, with the Page Church, June 26-27; Swedish Conference, with the Fargo Swedish Church, June 28-July 1; Young People's Summer Assembly, at Jamestown College, July 9-15; the state convention, with the First Church, Fargo, Oct. 3-7.

Sunday, May 13, will be Elijah Terry day in North Dakota. On this day the churches and Sunday schools will make their contributions for the oil portrait of Elijah Terry, the first Baptist missionary in Dakota Territory, who was massacred by Indians at Walhalla in 1852.

Rev. H. H. Gunderson, for many years pastor of the First Church of Pierre, S. D., came to North Dakota on April 1. He will serve the state convention as pastor-at-large with headquarters at Minot. Mr. Gunderson's missionary and evangelistic spirit qualify him for the work.

Rev. P. O. Ekstrom began work as pastor at Drayton, N. D., and Eagle Point, Minn., on Easter. The pastor will lead the Drayton Church in the erection of an edifice this summer.

Several student pastors from various Baptist schools have been engaged for work during their vacations.

Rev. O. S. Jacobson, pastor-at-large, will attend the Congress at Stockholm. He will also visit several of his brothers and relatives in Sweden, whom he has not seen for many years.

Revival Meetings

The churches have enjoyed a spirit of evangelism throughout the year.

Rev. J. E. Naylor completes an eight-months' engagement as state evangelist, May 1. Each of his meetings have resulted in several additions to the churches.

Rev. W. G. McNaughton of St. Paul, has assisted Pastor Thorlakson at Crystal and Grafton.

Rev. E. E. Hall, evangelist of the Swedish General Conference, helped in a series of meetings at Kenmare.

Miss Minnie Nelson of Henning, Minn., has conducted two successful series of meetings at Kulm.

Evangelist Erick Anderson of St. Paul, conducted a series of meetings in the Fargo Swedish church, of which Rev. W. G. Holmberg is pastor.

Rev. W. A. Daniel, pastor at Minot, conducted a series of meetings at Rutland for Pastor J. R. Spiller.

Missionary Ole Larson conducted a series of meetings at Guthrie with telling results.

Colporter-missionary C. J. Hill assisted Pastor Anderson at Sawyer.

Rev. Earl D. Sims of Chicago is to begin a three-months' period of service in this state about May 1. He will have his first engagement with the Fairmount Church.

Major Chaplain E. W. White, Omaha, Neb., will spend three months in North Dakota, beginning the last of April with the Jamestown Church, of which Rev. J. M. Hupp is pastor.

Rocky Mountain States

COLORADO

EASTER WAS THE MOST SUCCESSFUL day the First Church, Denver, has ever known. The attendance of the Bible school surpassed all previous records and the pastor, Rev. A. H. C. Morse, baptized thirty-two persons. There have been baptisms every Sunday since last October.

IDAHO

REV. J. B. WAKEN, pastor of the church at Eagle, baptized twenty-nine candidates on Easter, and there are nine awaiting the ordinance.

MONTANA

REV. R. O. SHANNON closed his work at Laurel on March 1 and has taken up special work with the white churches on the Crow Indian reservation. He has four churches at present and lives at Lodge Grass.

MR. JOHN S. PARK, principal of the high school at Whitehall, is acting as supply pastor at the First Church, Anaconda. At the close of the school year he will give his full time to this work.

MONTANA WILL EMPLOY SEVERAL seminary students in summer work this year. These are first or second year men and they will serve needy fields for a period of thirteen weeks.

REV. J. A. HOFFMAN, who has been the pastor at large, evangelist and director of religious work in the convention for the past eight years, will close his work May 1. He expects to devote his entire time to evangelistic work in which he will be assisted by two of his daughters who are musicians and personal workers.

AN ACTIVE PROGRAM of service is being inaugurated in the Swedish Baptist church of Butte by the Finn Baptist organization. As most of the Finnish people use the Swedish language it is hoped that both groups can work together and a strong work be accomplished.

REV. HENRY VAN ENGELEN, pastor of the Emmanuel church of Missoula, is taking a brief vacation with members of his family at Portland, Ore. He will return early in May.

UNDER THE ABLE LEADERSHIP of Rev. D. McMasters of Great Falls, the First Church and the Swedish Church have joined their forces for a forward program of service. Most of the meetings are being held in the Swedish meeting house and both groups are well pleased with the arrangement.

REV. D. L. MCGRIFF, pastor of the Ebenezer Church at Helena, on April 8 launched a building campaign for a new plant to have basement, auditorium and parsonage combined. The plan calls for the completion of the entire edifice by autumn.

Good Samaritan Hospital

FOR NEGRO PATIENTS

SELMA ALABAMA

Established one year ago as a result of the 75 Million Campaign of Southern white Baptists, for Negro patients exclusively.

It is operated solely as a Christian ministry to the poor and needy colored people of this section.

The Government has provided at Tuskegee a splendid hospital for colored soldiers, costing more than two million dollars. The white Baptists of Alabama are endeavoring to supply worthy and adequate hospital facilities to Negroes other than soldiers, regardless of their ability to pay.

The appeals for aid far exceed our bed capacity and financial ability. We solicit the help of all friends of the colored people.

LOUIS J. BRISTOW,
Superintendent.

WESTERN WASHINGTON

FIVE PERSONS WERE baptized on Easter Sunday at the First Church of Edmonds, Rev. Thomas Howland, pastor. This brings the total membership to twenty-six.

OREGON

ON APRIL 8, THE MT. OLIVET CHURCH, (negro), Portland, entered its new building. Rev. J. W. Anderson is pastor.

EASTER PROVED TO BE A DAY of real harvesting among nearly all of the Oregon churches: 101 were welcomed into the East Side Church by Dr. W. B. Hinson; 15 into the First Swedish Church by Pastor T. J. Sjolander; 24 into the Arleta Church by Pastor Owen T. Day; 32 into the Second German Church by Pastor Frederick T. Hoffman; 3 into the Mt. Olivet Church by Rev. J. W. Anderson; while Grace, J. F. Huckleberry, pastor; Lents, E. A. Smith, pastor; Shellwood, C. S. Tunnell, pastor; Glencoe, W. B. Stewart, pastor; First German, Rev. Jacob Kratt, pastor; University Park, Rev. E. R. Schlauch, pastor, report baptisms and accessions by letter. Pastor C. E. Dunham at Eugene baptized 32; Daniel Bryant at Corvallis baptized 26, thus adding to the large number already received during the past weeks. Forty-nine welcomed by W. T. Milliken at Salem, among them two Japanese and three Chinese. Pastor C. L. Trawin, of McMinnville baptized 5 and received others by letter. Twelve were baptized by Rev. F. R. Leach at Medford, and others received by letter. In fact from all sections of the state encouraging reports are coming from the churches. Superintendent of Evangelism, Dr. S. J. Reid, has been one of the chief agents in promoting this spirit of evangelism throughout the state.

TWO YEARS AGO THE CONVENTION purchased a beautiful assembly site thirty miles below Portland with a water frontage of 1,000 feet on the Columbia River. These grounds face the river which is a mile wide at this place. During the war these grounds were used for ship building purposes, and consequently Baptists came into possession of numerous buildings. Sewers had been laid, water pipes from the nearest city water system, electric wiring for the buildings, and many conveniences that would have cost many thousands of dollars were placed upon the grounds. The grounds are accessible by water, the hard surface Columbia River Highway, and by train. The state convention will be held here for the third time, July 24-27. This will be followed by the Young People's Assembly.

Church Building

Church building is going on in many parts of the state. The Medford Church has let its contract for the new edifice which will cost over $40,000.

The Arleta Church, Portland, began the construction of the first unit of an $80,000 building early in the year. The plan involves the utilization of the old structure. The church re-entered its remodeled building on Easter.

In North Portland, on the peninsula, two churches have united, St. John and University Park. The new work will be located midway between their present locations in a rapidly growing section of the city. Rev. M. W. Coates of Coalings, Cal., has accepted the call to the church formed by the combination of the two above mentioned.

In a section of North Portland known as the Kenton District, a new church was recently organized with forty members. A tabernacle building will soon be erected. Rev. T. S. Winey is pastor.

The church building at Bend is rapidly nearing completion. It will cost approximately $30,000. Rev. F. H. Beard is pastor.

The church at Hillsboro will be dedicated early in May. Rev. Robert Kay is pastor.

NORTH CALIFORNIA

WORK HAS BEGUN ON THE NEW building of the Selma Church. The new structure will cost $85,000. It is planned to install a $10,000 pipe organ, over $5,000 of which has already been donated. Rev. F. Carl Truex, the present pastor, came to the field in 1916 from Pueblo, Colo., where he was pastor of the Second Church. During his pastorate the membership has increased from 350 to 750. The church budget for 1916 for all purposes was $3,000, while that for 1922 was six times that amount.

THIRTY-TWO PERSONS WERE BAPTIZED on Easter at the First Church, Oakland, by Pastor John Snape. Forty-two received the hand of fellowship at the communion service on April 8. The church has voted to send its pastor as a delegate to the World Alliance meeting. For this reason he will not be able to deliver an address on the opening night of the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention. The women's auxiliary held its annual business meeting April 10. It was reported that $3,045 had been raised for all purposes. Mrs. J. M. Davis was re-elected president.

No Hindrance to Travel in Europe

The committee to promote attendance at the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm has taken pains to make inquiry of Baptist representatives in Europe regarding conditions which might affect the travel plans of some of the American delegates. Dr. J. H. Shakespeare, secretary of the alliance, and Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, who has intimate knowledge of conditions on the continent, have advised the committee in America that political conditions in Europe need not interfere at all with plans for the trip to Stockholm. A communication has just been received from Dr. C. E. Benander of Stockholm to the effect that Americans need not be disturbed as to the possibility of making tours on the continent of Europe. He adds that, outside of the small occupied areas, travel is as usual. The committee to promote attendance has secured a large number of hotel rooms in Stockholm for the use of Northern Baptist delegates, regarding which announcement has been made elsewhere. All who have not secured their hotel accommodations at Stockholm should communicate promptly with the Baptist World Alliance Committee, Room 824, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Evangelism in New England

By York A. King, Supt. Evang. for New England District

As New York has sometimes been spoken of as the "graveyard of ministers," so New England has for a long time been regarded an unattractive field for the "professional evangelist." Many an enthusiast has launched his "campaign" here only to find that ministers and laymen alike were slow to respond to their appeal. And, not having met with the success they had visualized, sought other fields for their consecrated energies.

We are pretty well persuaded that no amount of slang and bluster can substitute for soul saving passion and Holy Spirit power. So that only a few of the more cultured and conservative evangelists have been operating in these six eastern states during the past few years. And even these have not had full-time engagements. The question of remuneration, which of necessity must be made prominent in such meetings, has played no small part in turning our churches against that kind of evangelistic meetings. I frequently receive letters from pastors of prominent churches who deprecate the financial methods used and ask for assistance from our department where that phase of the question is reduced to a minimum.

For more than three years we have been calling the attention of our churches to the New Testament plan of church evangelism. And this has met with such universal approval that we have yet to hear of any unfavorable criticism of the methods used or the workability of the plan, while unsolicited words of commendation are constantly being received. All the churches in some associations and all the associations in some of the states have been cooperating beyond our fondest anticipation.

This plan calls special attention to the importance of

1. Prayer. Not saying prayers, for one can go to hell saying prayers (Matt. 7:21-23). But individuals and small groups holding onto God in behalf of those for whom they are concerned, until, led by the Holy Spirit to do so, they go to them presenting Jesus Christ as he is.
2. Preaching. With our sermons full of the joy of salvation, bathed with tears and born up by a passion for the revival of the church and the salvation of the lost.
3. Personal work, which, in the best sense, is just witnessing for God and introducing folk to Christ.
4. Bible study—for it furnishes the basis for all our religious convictions. Only those who have a personal experience which is rooted and grounded in the Word can withstand all the fiery darts of the enemy.
5. The Holy Spirit uses the church as the chosen channel through which he is pleased to operate in accomplishing the purposes of God in the world.

All of our New England state secretaries are thoroughly alive to the importance of evangelism. With their staff of assistants, they have been emphasizing its primary importance by placing the responsibility, as far as possible, upon the local church and every member of that church.

Our Book Shelf

Christmas in Many Lands. Boston: Page Co.

This is more than a mere story book, and it is more than simply a Christmas book. Nothing reveals a people more than their holiday customs. So in these tales of Christmas in many lands there is packed a vast amount of information in most delightful form. Stories of Christmas in America, Canada, Denmark, Japan, Norway, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland are told by different authors. The books is attractively illustrated.

The Boy Scouts at Camp Lowell, by Brewer Corcoran. Boston: Page Co.

Published with the approval of the Boy Scouts of America, which sets its own seal upon the book as being a fit, helpful and interesting one to place in the hands of any boy. The boys at Camp Lowell also appeared in "The Boy Scouts of Kendallville" and "The Boy Scouts of the Wolf Patrol," so that many boy readers are already familiar with them. If not, an early introduction will give new zest to reading hours.

The Master's Slave, by Miles Mark Fisher. Philadelphia. Judson Press. $1.50.

This a biography of the author's father, Elijah John Fisher, a notable Negro Baptist pastor and leader in the South and North, who was pastor of the Olivet Church, Chicago, from 1903 until his death in 1915. It is a remarkable life-story and is followed by a brief account of the Olivet Church, now the largest Baptist Church in the world, with 10,000 members. The promising young author has done his work well. He received his A. B. from Morehouse College, Atlanta, his B. D. from the Northern Baptist Seminary and his A. M. from the University of Chicago, and is now of the faculty of Virginia University. The book would be valuable collateral reading in connection with the home mission study book for this year, "The Trend of the Races."

Within the Gateways of the Far East, by Charles R. Erdman. New York: Fleming H. Revell. $1.25.

The author, Professor Erdman of Princeton, wields a facile pen and is a keen observer. In his visit to China, Korea and Japan he sensed the present missionary situation in the impact Christianity is making in the Orient and lucidly depicts its achievements and problems. He sees sympathetically the lives of the people within whose countries he is guest and catches the charm of the changing Orient as it blends with its own antiquity. In subtile humor he often tucks in a lot of philosophy, for example: "First of all, the writer brought back with him a confirmed conviction that many persons who remain at home are better informed as to the Orient than are some who have caught casual glimpses of the Far East."

Church Street, by Jean Carter Cochran. Philadelphia: The Westminster Press. $1.50.

The God of things-as-they-ought-to-be breathed a special inspiration into the soul of the author when she wrote the series of reminiscent essays grouped together in "Church Street." Obviously, the collection is intended as an antidote to Main Street, but the only reminder of Sinclair Lewis is on page 160: "You must know my cousins, the Babbitts," remarks one of the characters. The scenes were laid about two-thirds of a generation ago in a pre-revolutionary village of New Jersey; none of the numerous characters were ever guilty of playing with mud patties. One is impressed with the veracity of the pastor who is reported to have called it "A most unusual village." And, mirabile dictu, this country parson, though having a family of six children, employs a man-servant and a maid-servant and keeps a driving horse! But in spite of the halos hung on the heads of those whom the author loved in the golden age of her childhood, the book, penned in a charming style, is delightful reading and will well repay a leisurely perusal to lift a tired soul from the flatness of actuality to the rarified atmosphere of idealistic heights.

"It Is to Laugh"

Frederick was sitting on the curb, crying, when Billy came along and asked what was the matter.

"Oh, I feel so bad 'cause Major's dead —my nice old collie!" sobbed Frederick.

"Shucks!" said Billy. "My grandmother's been dead a week and you don't catch me crying."

Frederick gave his eyes and nose a swipe with his hand and, looking up at Billy, sobbed despairingly:

"Yes, but you didn't raise your grandmother from a pup."—Harper's Magazine.

After much excitement the Smiths had at last managed to catch the boat train and were well on their way to Switzerland for the winter sports.

Now, when they could sit quietly for a while, they began to wonder if they had left anything behind.

"No," said Mr. Smith, with great satisfaction, "I think we have remembered everything.

Mrs Smith gave a shriek.

"Oh, Harry," she gasped, "I forgot to turn off the electric iron!"

"Don't worry, darling," he replied, "nothing will burn. I forgot to turn off the shower bath."

A NEW ORGAN FOR WILMETTE

From the thriving Wilmette Baptist Church, Francis Carr Stifler, minister, comes announcement of the purchase of a fine Austin organ, three manuals and pedal organ, of some thirty stops. Nothing so aids the service-morale of the church as does an adequate organ: and this new instrument will certainly come under that head! After a careful estimate of the specifications and a study of the tonal possibilities therein, I am glad to be able to congratulate the committee on a difficult job well done. The range of coloring and volumes provided, and the balanced distribution of the stops, are to be highly commended. Worthy of especial praise is the pedal organ—it avoids that common fault of a stinted bottom in order to get a few "stunt" stops on a manual. Evidently, the instrument is not primarily designed as a concert organ. Its solidity of tone and conservatism of coloring make it an ideal organ for church use. This does not mean that it will not be an excellent instrument for recital work—for it will meet all needs along that line. What I am stressing, however, is that it was conceived as a genuine "church" organ, not an imitation of a movie trick-mechanism. The value of a good organ to a church and to a community is something beyond measurement. With a fine new edifice, and an organ to match, the Baptist church of Wilmette, Ill., may well be pardoned for a sudden accession of pride and enthusiasm!

Detailed specifications of this instrument follow. Intending purchasers of organs will do well to preserve them for reference:

REVIEWS

From The Judson Press, Philadelphia.

Living Hymns (The Small Hymnal) 30 cents.

This is a splendid collection of hymns and sacred choruses for use where a merely compact and a somewhat lighter type of hymnal is desired. It is destined for the use of young people's meetings, vacation schools, Sunday schools and similar occasions. The material provided is highly varied, almost any particular need will find appropriate selections at hand. Many of the tried and true old favorites are present, and there is a fine stock of interesting new numbers. We can highly recommend this book for price, for contents, for format and for editorial achievement.

Reed Miller, the tenor, whose extended work in the oratorio field makes him somewhat of an authority on the subject, fears that oratorio is on the wane in this country, according to the Vancouver Daily World.

"After all," he said, in a recent interview, "we are only 300 years old here. We have not the same appreciation for choral music as in the older countries. Nearly all our great choral society conductors are English. No sooner does an English choral enthusiast come over to this country, than he casts about to form a choral society—and there you are! Oratorio, however, appears to be on the wane; in fact, in the United States it must be given new impetus at once if it is to be kept alive. Love of popular, catchy music and the like is killing it. All we seem to care about is flocking to hear some great operatic singer or some artist with a big name to flare on the billboards. The fundamental fault is that we do not give proper support to community music, the local conductor gets rebuffed, his performances do not draw the audiences, the society runs into debt. What is going to be the future of oratorio in America?"

The goal for every singer has been described by C. M. Tremain, director of the National Bureau for the Advancement of Music, who says:

"A song is more than the pleasing combination of words and music. It is a picture. It is a thought or a story with a clear and distinct outline, and unless the interpretation is given to it so as to transfer to the mind of the listener every graduation of feeling which the song was intended to depict, then to that extent the song has failed of its purpose and the listener loses.

"In literature we have been accustomed to look for the master word-painter who can command our emotions by the vividness of his descriptions, yet the entire burden of conveying the writer's thoughts is placed upon language alone. But music is itself the interpreter of the emotions, and so the song has infinitely greater possibilities if we will but blend the words and the music into a complete entity."

To the singer who can thus "blend words and music" success is assured.

Evangelism in New England

Rev. E. E. Gates, pastor-at-large for Connecticut, writes: "Three years ago, as a result of your first visit to our convention, we appointed a state committee on evangelism, of which Dr. McGee of New Haven is chairman, who outlined a program which met with such good response that we had the largest number of baptisms that year of many years. Last year they outlined a program and teamed up the ministers asking them to prepare sermons on certain subjects and be ready to respond to invitations from the churches to assist in special meetings. This was done with gratifying results. This year, upon the recommendation of that committee, the convention endorsed the following resolution:

1. That the local church should give serious attention to the matter of evangelism.
2. That the local church be asked to work out a program of evangelism adapted to its own possibilities and needs.
3. That the local church be organized in all its departments in the interest of a continuous program of personal evangelism.
4. That the state evangelistic committee be ready to cooperate with the local church in the promotion of any special evangelistic effort.
5. That the local church be urged to make the largest possible use of denominational agencies in the promotion of evangelism.
6. That wherever possible teams of lay workers be organized for special evangelistic services.

Secretary William Reid has taken to Rhode Island with him that splendid enthusiasm for evangelism he used to such good advantage in Massachusetts last year. And his state committee has had an unusually good year in their special meetings.

After enumerating the various agencies at work in Massachusetts along the line of evangelism, Dr. Hugh A. Heath, the state secretary, says: "In general there is a stronger and more widely spread evangelistic spirit in our churches than has been for years. The outlook is good for a larger ingathering than usual."

New Hampshire and Vermont each have one man who, as field secretary, devotes part of his time to evangelism. Maine has three "pastor evangelists" who are engaged for the most part with missionary work and conducting evangelistic meetings in rural communities. But Maine has more Baptist churches than any other state in New England, there being fifty-four more churches in that state than in Massachusetts. Upon the state secretary's invitation I am to visit all the associations in Vermont in October. And much of our time during the summer and autumn months will be devoted to assisting the brethren in setting up and conducting a ten-day or two weeks' meeting in every Baptist church in those two states.

Owing to unprecedented fall of snow, shortage of coal and consequent prevailing sickness, the progress of the kingdom has been greatly impeded in all the departments of church activities during the past winter. The work of evangelism has suffered accordingly. But, with the exception of one state, we shall probably report larger ingatherings than in any recent year. The growing custom on the part of many churches to postpone baptisms till Easter makes it difficult to report accurately. But April and May will show that we have been enjoying harvest times in many churches throughout the entire territory of the New England states. I have personally conducted special meetings in more than a dozen groups of churches, in five states, from which the accessions to church membership will reach several hundred. But the revived church and the burden of soul that has been laid upon the hearts of the multitudes is our greatest cause for rejoicing.

Recently when several hundred tourists arrived in New York from a 131 day cruise around the world, they were interviewed by reporters representing the leading newspapers and press associations. Of all the interviews only two were printed. The first had to deal with world conditions as seen through the eyes of an official of one of the greatest business organizations in the world. It gave the reader an insight as to how one of the most used commodities was merchandised to the extreme limits of civilization. The second interview was with a westerner, a man, in statue and thought, typical of the country he has helped develop. When asked by the reporter what he considered the most impressive sight he had witnessed on the entire trip around the world on the American Express cruise he said: "When I stood on the Mount of Olives at sunset and looked out over the River Jordan and the Dead Sea, I saw the most beautiful sight of the entire cruise. It seemed that time had turned back nearly 2,000 years and I realized the beauty and the immortality of the scene."

Breaking the Missionary's Heart

In ten months the Treasurer of the Woman's American Baptist Foreign Mission Society received only one-half of the funds needed to provide for the needs of the entire year. This is a problem. How would you solve it?

A similar situation confronted the Society a year ago, and reductions had to be made. It breaks a missionary's heart when schools have to be closed and missionary work abandoned because of lack of funds.

Here is an extract from a missionary's letter showing what had to be done:

> The new school for mothers was making a deep impression on the community. The educated men of the city were sending their wives to learn the arts and privileges of Christian homemaking. Then came the falling off in missionary gifts. Retrenchment had to be made. The Mothercraft School was the newest project. The situation was studied but no other solution seemed possible. This fine school, with finer prospects, was closed.

Shall the Board close other schools, send children in kindergartens back to their jungle villages, cast off orphans now being provided for, discharge Bible women carrying the message of hope, discontinue dispensaries and hospital work and retain missionaries at home? Some of these things may have to be done if the needed funds are not receved.

You can solve this problem. Pay the balance of your pledge to the New World Movement before the close of the fiscal year, April 30.

Fresh from the Field

Evangelist C. F. Taylor recently closed a three weeks' series of meetings with the First Church, Shreveport, La., Rev. M. E. Dodd, pastor.

Rev. P. L. Cosman, who has been pastor of the Grand Avenue Church, New Haven, Conn., for the past four years, has resigned. On May 1 he took up the work of the pastorate of the Baptist church at Pascoag, R. I.

Rev. A. Watson Brown, pastor of the Calvary Church, Sacramento, Calif., is making up a party to Europe this summer in connection with the Baptist World Alliance. His tour is under the management of the Bennett Travel Bureau. Full information may be secured by writing Mr. Brown as above.

Rev. J. L. MacLeod is the chairman of the pulpit committee charged with the responsibility of supplying all the pulpits of Atlantic City and vicinity Convention Sunday. He calls for about seventy volunteers. Write him if you are to be available.

The Old South Church, Boston, has inaugurated a special movement for a serious study of the Bible. More than 100 persons registered for the course and have met each Sunday after the morning service in the chapel. The work has consisted of a careful and thorough examination of the life and writings of John the evangelist and has been in charge of Dr. William F. Slocum. So successful has this undertaking been that it will be continued in the fall.

Many of our churches should seriously consider whether they could not arrange to be represented at the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm. Already some are preparing to assist their pastors to attend, but many of our laymen and active women should also plan to attend the meeting of the alliance. They would carry a blessing to their brothers and sisters in Europe, and would return to their own churches with a larger interest in our denominational life and in kingdom movements in general throughout the world.

On the last day of the year 1872, Rev. and Mrs. Benjamin P. Cross, received their appointment to the Burman field. Mr. Cross was born in Burma, Oct. 16, 1845, the son of Dr. E. B. Cross, a pioneer missionary to Burma. In care of the captain of a ship bound for America he was sent to this country when but five years of age, and here he received his education, graduating as a civil engineer from Union College. For a time he devoted himself to his profession, but the burden of Burma and the Karens was continually upon his heart. After a period of special preparation for his life work, he sailed for Rangoon and began at Schwegyin his remarkable career. Mr. and Mrs. Cross have performed valiant service in the educational work of our Burma mission, both at Judson College and the Karen Theological Seminary, but their greatest work has been in giving Jesus Christ to the Karen people; 178,000 native Christians bear eloquent testimony to the faithful work done on this field by Mr. and Mrs. Cross and their coworkers. We congratulate them on this the fiftieth anniversary of the beginning of their work, and pray that God's favor may be their portion continually.

The tenth annual convention of the International Union of Gospel Missions will be held in Minneapolis, May 20-24. For particulars write Rev. W. E. Paul, Union City Mission in that city.

The American Bible Socitey has furnished the press with a list of 770 languages into which the Bible has been translated in whole or in part.

It is reported that Rev. Gabriel R. Maguire, pastor of the First Church, Vancouver, B. C. and formerly pastor of Ruggles Street Church, Boston, has accepted the call of the Westmount Church in Eastern Canada. He will begin his new work in the early fall.

On April 22 the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., conducted its annual every-member canvass, and at the evening service the canvassers reported pledges amounting to $81,600, with quite a large number of people yet to see. The budget for the ensuing year is $85,000, $35,200 for current expense and $49,800 for beneficences of the church. The fiscal year begins May 1. The publicity in connection with the canvass is educational in character and clearly indicates the objects to which the church contributes.

Viewpoints

By Anna Nelson Reed

THAT there is no such thing as pain;
That evil's good, and loss is gain;
That we can't sin, whate'er we do;
Since God is All and All is true—
I can't believe—can you?

But that in some way, through our pain,
God's grace may bring us greater gain;
And evil, all the wide world through,
May somehow serve his purpose too—
This I believe—don't you?

The inscription on a memorial tablet which was recently placed in the First Church, Ithaca, N. Y. reads: "As a memorial to the Rev. Robert T. Jones, thirty-five years pastor of this church, this window was given by the clergyment of Ithaca, by citizens not members of his congregation, and by the architect and master workmen, in recognition of his efforts through which this house was built, and in appreciation of him as a clergyman and citizen." The tablet giving the facts about the memorial window was unveiled Easter Sunday.

The ministers and churches of the country are warned against a negro who claims to be Rev. Ralph Paul Russell, and who has been speaking in churches of various denominations in Pennsylvania and New York and receiving money for Covington Orphans' Home at Bowling Green, Ky. Russell claims to be the superintendent and financial agent for the home. Investigation has revealed that no such institution exists at Bowling Green and that Russell has been obtaining money under false pretenses. A warrant is out for his arrest and the police of Elmira, N. Y., and Towanda, Pa., would appreciate information as to his whereabouts. Russell is about sixty years of age, weighs around 250 pounds and has conspicuous gold fillings in his teeth. This information was forwarded to us by Rev. H. C. Burr of the First Church, Elmira.

Evangelist J. W. Kramer is assisting Rev. L. L. Henson, pastor of the First Church, Covington, Ky. There have been twenty-five conversions thus far.

The winter term graduation exercises of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, were held April 19. Fifty-eight graduates of the day classes, together with 209 from the correspondence department, represent forty states of the Union, Canada, Panama, England, Scotland, Denmark, Egypt, India and the Philippines.

The annual meeting of the West Central District of the Woman's Home and Foreign Societies will be held in Hastings, Nebr., May 8-10. Representatives from each department of the work will be present on the program. Those desiring entertainment should communicate with Mrs. D. M. Linder, 1605 W. 5th St.

The Pastors' Conference of the N. B. C. will hold its annual session Tuesday evening, May 22, in the First Church, Atlantic City. Dr. Franklin W. Sweet of the Church of the Master, Cleveland, will speak on "The Kingdom of God is at Hand," and Dr. W. H. Geistweit of Dayton will speak on "Evangelism." The regular business will be transacted.

The Christian Endeavor Union of Ireland has arranged to rent Rock Castle at Portstewart, Ireland, as a place in which British Endeavorers may spend their summer vacations. Rock Castle is the birthplace of Sir George White, the hero of Ladysmith in the South African War. The castle stands close to the sea and gives extensive views of the sea and of the Derry Mountains. There is a bathing beach and a nearby golf course, while motor busses run daily to the Giant's Causeway at Portrush, one of the most interesting pieces of scenery in all Ireland. There are eight or ten such holiday homes in Great Britain, but this is the first opened by the Irish Christian Endeavor Union.

It will be of interest to all delegates to Stockholm sailing on the "America" to learn that the Baptists of Canada have made reservations on this same steamship for their delegates. Thus with Northern Baptists and a number of Southern Baptists and now with Canadian Baptists on the "America" this ship will prove to be a real American ship of fellowship to Europe. The Canadian Baptists some time ago appointed a transportation manager, who made careful inquiries concerning rates to Stockholm. In view of the character of the accommodations on this ship and particularly because of the delightful fellowship which would be possible on the voyage, this committee expressed the judgment that Canadian Baptists should likewise make their journey across the Atlantic on the "America." Accordingly, reservations have been made and a good delegation is anticipated. This indicates again the urgent importance of having Northern Baptists, who have not yet made reservations, do so immediately. Further delay may result in serious disappointment at finding that accommodations especially at the lower rates are no longer available.

He Is One of Thousands

"I wish to express my appreciation of your efforts to get out a live paper. It is of great interest to go through it every week." And yet some folks still have the idea that only preachers have time for a denominational paper. The writer of the above word is P. F. Petersen, the proprietor of a furniture store in Albert Lea, Minn. We are not very well acquainted with the gentleman but would be willing to guarantee on general principles that he has an interest in the work in Albert Lea as well as that reported in other parts of the world. It is still generally true that "the light that shines farthest shines brightest at home."

Killam's Kollum

Brevity the Soul of Business

"The brevity of your call was remarkable; the pointedness of it commendable; may the results of all such calls be bountiful," writes Mrs. J. E. Whipple of Lansing. She refers to the "knock" on the door reminding her that she is a year older and asking for a renewal of her subscription to THE BAPTIST. Our calls are short for we make a number of them every day.

"Delighted"

Associate General Secretary of the Publication Society Wm. H. Main writes: "I am greatly delighted with the editorial on 'What Came Out of a Hat' found in THE BAPTIST the week before last. It is a fine presentation of Publication matters.

"I am having 30,000 copies made entitled, 'Editorial from THE BAPTIST, March 17,' for distribution throughout the country. This will also bring the attention of a great many people to the merits of THE BAPTIST."

Keep Right on Asking Them

"I have delayed the sending of my own subscription until I could get another to send with it. The first person I asked subscribed willingly, so I asked four and every one of them came across."—E. A. Weston, Aurora, Ill. Of course they did! And they will do it in practically every church in the Northern Baptist Convention if a man or a woman will put the proposition squarely before them. What can you do which will mean more than just that kind of personal work with church members?

It Would Pay Big Dividends

"How I do wish that THE BAPTIST might be endowed; liberally endowed. Think of the millions that the people of the denomination have set apart for the endowment of its many institutions of learning; and this one instrumentality that is most informing, inspiring and helpful of all the means controlled by the denomination is without one dollar of endowment. Should our paper have an endowment of two or three millions, the subscription could be placed at 50 cents, or at $1 at the most; and thus it could be placed in three families where it is now in only one. And thus the very best talent available could be employed as contributors to its contents. I wish I might live to see the day when this change might be brought about."

This is the dream—we cannot see why it should not materialize—of Dr. George R. Holt of Hilton, N. Y., who, while eighty years of age, is one of the most enthusiastic club managers in the country. He is not only enthusiastic—he gets results.

Fresh from the Field

The fifty-fifth anniversary of its organization was recently celebrated by the First Church of Marlborough, Mass. An address was given by Robert S. Johnson, of Boston.

The speaker at the Ministers' Conference, May 7, will be Mr. Frank McClure. His subject will be church advertising. The conference will be held at the Missionary Training School, Chicago.

A decided loss has come to the Baptist Institute of Philadelphia in the death of Mrs. Wilbur, wife of Rev. J. Milnor Wilbur. She was devoted in her service to others and had a wide circle of influence. The last services were conducted by President Milton G. Evans, of Crozer, in the absence of Mrs. Wilbur's pastor, Carter Helm Jones.

Mrs. L. Jesse P. Bishop has severed her connection with the field activities of the General Board of Promotion which she has served for several years. This step was considered best because of the heavy responsibilities which she has carried and which made a rest necessary. Rev. W. H. Bowler has been appointed Mrs. Bishop's successor.

Rev. J. Sherman Wallace, pastor of the First Church, Madison, Wis., has been chosen to succeed Rev. F. O. Erb, as editor of the young people's publications for the Publication Society. Wisconsin expresses the deepest regret at his going for in the short time that he has been in the state he has been able to render valuable service outside the bounds of his own parish. Mr. Wallace begins his new work May 10.

Rev. G. B. Hopkins, of Freeport, Ill., writes to say that he is not pastor of the Freeport Church as recently stated in a church news item referring to the good work of the Morning Star Class, of which Mr. Hopkins is teacher, in placing THE BAPTIST and Missions in the public library. He says, "A very popular man, Rev. F. G. Sayres, is pastor of the church." Honor to whom honor is due.

Dr. Asa Q. Burns, director of religious education at Hardin College, Mo., since March 1920, has been notified by the president of the University of Chicago of his appointment to a Fellowship in that institution for the school year 1923-24. This appointment carries a generous stipend besides the privilege of doing graduate study work and is awarded upon the basis of general ability to do graduate work. Doctor Burns has accepted the appointment and will take a year's leave of absence from his teaching to begin special studies.

Announcement that chapels for prayer and meditation would be placed in all hotels with which he is connected was made yesterday by John M. Bowman, proprietor of the Biltmore, Commodore and Belmont hotels in New York City and other hotels throughout the country, known as the Bowman group. The suggestion was made to Mr. Bowman several weeks ago by Joseph E. Wilson, a lawyer of Philadelphia.

"There shall be a chapel in every hotel of which I am president or may be connected with during my lifetime," Mr. Bowman said. "We shall commence at once to install these chapels for the use of our guests.

"We have already engaged the Gorham Company of this city to design chapels suitable for all of our hotels, including the Biltmore in Los Angeles, now in progress of construction, the Biltmore in Atlanta, Ga., and the Sevilla-Biltmore in Havana, Cuba. The chapels will vary in size according to the needs of the different hotels. Each one will contain a beautiful stained glass window to suggest an air of sacredness. There will also be an altar, cathedral chairs and appropriate lighting. It is the intention always to keep fresh flowers on the altars, and the doors of the chapels will be open day and night as a perpetual invitation to enter for those who desire to meditate in prayer."

A Letter from Stockholm

Stockholm, Den., March 23, 1923.

To the Northern Baptist Convention,
President Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, D.D.

Dear and honored brethren:

The sad news of the sudden death of the president of the Baptist World Alliance, Rev. Robert Stuart MacArthur, D.D., LL.D., has reached us, and as members of the large Baptist family we mournfully share with our brethren their regret at the departure of the great leader which means an immense loss to the different organizations of which he was such a singularly eminent member, leader, counselor and servant.

We expected to see our venerable brother and servant of the Lord in the presidential chair at the third Baptist World Convention in our city of Stockholm next July, and we know he was preparing to fill his place and execute his duties as president on that great occasion. But the Lord had other plans, and for us it remains to say in all humility: Yea, Father, for so it was well-pleasing in thy sight. And we cannot but thank God for the long and fruitful life in righteousness and benignant activity his faithful servant lived here below as a citizen of heaven.

Allow us, dear and honored brethren, to follow the promptings of our hearts and express our sincere sympathy with you in your grief at the sudden departure of Doctor MacArthur from the scenes of active work and personal presence among you. He was, we understand, of untold help and blessing to your Convention through the influence of his sterling Christian personality, his wise counsel and his efficient activities in the Lord's service.

With cordial Christian greetings,
Yours fraternally,

C. E. Benander, Pres. Bethel Theological Seminary.
J. Bystrom, Pres. Swedish Baptist Union.

Militarism in Japan

BY JESSE R. WILSON

Two things have happened recently which show the decline of Japan's militaristic attitude. One is the revision of school textbooks, especially the sixth grade national reader and the sixth grade history, from which "imperialistic and warlike writings based on a patriotism wrongly directed have been removed in order that peace and international cooperation" may be stressed. In both of these books instead of eulogizing famous generals as has been the custom in the past, national heroes are set before the pupils as exemplifying some noble trait of character which leads to success. Moreover a broad spirit of internationalism is inculcated by bringing in stories of great men of other lands. This has been done to some extent even before. Now about one in every eight stories is of a hero of some foreign country. Among these are the names of Washington, Lincoln, Edison, Marconi and Watt. It is significant that statesmen, artists, inventors, and men of similar callings are given places alongside the military heroes. America has not yet gone as far as it might in this direction. Mr. Taira Shidehara, librarian of the educational department, in explaining these things to a representative of the Japan Advertiser, said: "Our change, while abrupt, is in keeping with the spirit of the times throughout the world, and I trust we shall be able to carry these ideas even further."

The other incident, though a detached individual case, is yet not without great significance. It shows that Japanese young men, in common with the students of America, England and other countries, are re-reading their New Testaments in the light of the great war and are, in increasing numbers, to their own satisfaction at least, discovering that Christ's way of love is contrary to war and as a way out of international difficulties and problems is far superior to war. However, it was not the futility but the evil of war that led this young man to take the stand he did. I shall give the incident as reported on the front page of a recent issue of the Advertiser.

"Mr. Yujiro Tokita, a new recruit who entered the Sendai division, January 10, has taken the oath of military service after refusing to do so for a week because he believed it was against Christianity, in which he is an ardent believer, to serve in an army whose business it is to butcher their fellowmen. His attitude caused the division authorities considerable worry. Wednesday he intimated his willingness to take the oath after officers had preached and admonished him almost incessantly for a week.

"A reporter of the Nichi Nichi interviewed the new conscript in the presence of the captain of his company after the oath had been taken. He said that his refusal was not necessarily unqualified. He asked the commander of the regiment to excuse him for taking the oath until he knew the true object of Japanese armaments, he declared. If aggression and butchery, which are incompatible with all ideas of love, are the objects, he, being a Christian, could not serve in the army.

"From the explanation of the officers of his regiment, Mr. Tokita said he understood the object of the Japanese army is to safeguard national existence and to protect the Japanese people from all dangers. He said he was told also that the final goal of the government authorities is to complete abolition of the country's armaments.

"This assurance satisfied the young conscript, he told the reporter, and he took the oath of service. He stated emphatically, however, that he consented to serve in the army on condition that when he saw anything in the army not in accord with what the officers had told him he would revert to his original attitude, even under penalty of death."

The State Convention

WITHIN our Baptist ranks the basic unit is an individual who has professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and has then witnessed for the faith by an act of obedience called baptism. This act is generally understood to be the door into the local church which is the second unit in our communion.

The local church is supposed to be a group of baptized believers who are voluntarily associated together to build up the kingdom of God through the operation of a local church with a world vision.

Our local churches are voluntarily associated together in associations for local purposes, and this grouping forms the third unit in our Baptist life. The local church is supposed to be an independent body, but that is more or less of a fiction because interdependence takes the place of independence whenever a local church joins an association of Baptist churches. A limited interdependence! Yes; but also a limited independence. We should very much like to see our associations put upon a really workable basis with very definite cooperative objectives and located responsibilities. Such a thing is possible and practicable.

Our local churches also merge their independence into interdependent obligations under a form of cooperation called the state convention. This unit has had a growing sense of responsibility in the past few years, a greatly needed growth. It has now come, however, to the place where, in the minds of some, the viewpoints and objectives of the state convention unit are forcibly and sometimes unwisely presented as against the objectives of all the individual Baptist members sent by our local churches to represent them in the sessions of the Northern Baptist Convention.

No action, either of state convention or the Northern Baptist Convention, is binding upon any local church or upon any individual Baptist unless the action commends itself to the majority of the churches and individuals.

In the interests of unity and progress we therefore draw attention to the following facts:

State convention interests are not separate from any other part of our work except as to the areas in which they operate. To uphold a piece of state work as against some other piece of work is quite unwise. It is like favoring the dead at the expense of the whole body. There is no room anywhere for preferential treatment but there is room everywhere for just and balanced treatment of any part of the whole.

The several pieces of work must all be closely related in the minds of the individual members and in the practice of the local churches, and one piece of work should never be disproportionately supported at the expense of any other. We must not develop state convention Baptists instead of world or local Baptists. The reverse of this is equally to be insisted upon. Emphatically so, we say.

The fact that the state convention organization is compact, well sustained and in quite close relation to its constituency must not make its leaders or members forget that its constituency is after all composed of local churches represented by delegates and that those same local churches have similarly sent delegates to a larger group meeting for inclusive but far wider purposes. The local church has done this because it or some of its members are vitally interested in both the state convention and the Northern Baptist Convention objectives. In reality it is the same individual Baptist at work in both groups. No one surely will quarrel with himself or work against his own interests in one area by doing unwise things in a larger or smaller area. The fact, already mentioned, that the state convention is closer to its constituency should cause it to be unusually careful of the other interests beyond, which belong to that same people. On the other hand the so-called wider denominational interests must cultivate the utmost trust in the fairness and magnanimity of the state conventions and their leaders.

As a group of leaders our state convention secretaries are a high-minded, noble, self-sacrificing set of men, but in their official capacities it must never be forgotten that they are representatives. They represent those same individuals in those same local churches at work in other areas of service.

There must be no sense of rivalry or jealousy but splendid Christian cooperation all along the line and also adequate official representation on every hand.

WE feel sure that it is unwise to raise any cry for "state rights" in a piece of Christian cooperation even if those rights are present. On the other hand is it just or wise for the seate conventions to assume to have an inner track for their concerns and expect to handle the wider interests of the denomination without giving the delegates of the Northern Baptist Convention an opportunity to be concerned in the appointment of the leaders and the conduct of the whole task in every area? We believe not.

We draw attention, however, to the fact that in the appointment of officials, state or those working in wider spheres, the selection is virtually made by the delegates of the local churches acting in a representative capacity.

Our various secretaries are all appointed for specific tasks, but in the performance of their duties they must help the whole line of march while they operate their own particular charge.

If the duties of a state secretary are not clearly defined that lack can be adjusted quite speedily, we are sure. If the state convention is to become the permanent agent for all denominational forms of service in which the constituency is interested, it must not be upon any basis of preferential treatment but upon the basis of a just and balanced community of interests and under a well-regulated supervision by all the cooperating organizations called the Northern Baptist Convention. For any state convention to force itself into a preferential position would be just as unjust and unwise as to threaten not to cooperate unless all of its demands were met.

The task is a unit. The constituency is a unit. The organization must be unified and the leadership must be united for the purpose of doing the whole task; and then the state convention will be a fine servant of all its constituency without impairing its functions in that part of its task that is close at hand.

After all "The Task" is to produce every church member as a well-rounded, wide-visioned, stewarding Christian.

That task well done will mean glory enough, opportunity enough and money enough to do all the work, all the time, everywhere, to the honor of our Lord and Master.

Democracy and Discussion

OCCASIONALLY we meet some one who belongs to a democracy but does not believe in its underlying principles or its practices. For instance, a short time ago we heard a Baptist lay leader say, "In our church we do not believe in letting the membership know very much about the business of the church, so about three of us handle it as quietly as possible; it avoids discussion."

Discussion is the dynamic of any democracy and part of the foundation on which it is to build its future; it constitutes one of the great educational forces in any sphere where the participation of all the people, all the time, forms an essential element of growth. The lay brother referred to above was part of a bad autocracy and not part of a good and safe democracy.

In every local church we need to cultivate a wise and prayerful measure of free discussion, devoid of personalities. A wise, well-trained presiding officer is a blessing in any local church and we should be training men and women in local circles capably to fill that position.

By all means trust the local church members with every bit of information that concerns the conduct of the church and its business. Encourage discussion and do not be afraid of differences of opinion openly expressed. There is always hope for a change of opinion after some expression has been forthcoming, but there is little hope for it and great danger whenever discussion is lacking and people get the idea—maybe slowly—that some one is "putting something over on them."

We feel that we need much more discussion in the realms of our Northern Baptist Convention. On the floor of the convention some business matter of vast import is presented, debate is limited and then a snap judgment is taken. We vote in haste and repent at leisure and thereby becloud our future. In time to come we shall avoid much of evil if we can have the discussion in local areas before the centralized action is taken, for in that way it is helpful in reaching a decision while a discussion after the decision always provides opposition and creates dissension.

We are expressing a widespread feeling when we say that the purposes of our convention sessions are not doctrinal discussions and great speeches primarily, but are for the opportunity of full and frank discussion concerning the plans and programs upon which we are to base our work for the Lord in the local church and around the world.

By all means let us have every fact obtainable upon any situation of import and then let us discuss it so fully and so freely that every delegate present will know just what action is to be taken and afterward can tell why it was taken.

Many matters to be acted upon at our annual convention should be detailed to the constituency months before the meeting so that when delegates are called upon to vote they may be able to represent the group which sent them as delegates.

No committee, however wise, can safely allow itself to confine discussion within a limited circle and then count upon securing afterwards from the democracy at large a continuous united and whole-hearted support for its project.

We believe in democracy. We believe also in discussions devoid of all personalities. We believe very strongly in discussion and prayer intermingled. Many of our failures in past and present days have come from the fact that we all believe in the theory of a democracy but some desire to and do practice a form of autocracy. More free discussion will make us a greater power as a democracy.

Just Suppose

IN the days of happy childhood we used to play a glorious game with other children. It was sometimes called "Make Believe," and sometimes it was named, "Just Suppose."

The game consisted in pretending that one of us was some person whom we admired or envied. Then we children would try to act and do as he acted or did. A foolish game? Yes; but it was great fun, and good for our imagination, and it taught us some good lessons.

Readers, let us all be children again for a few minutes and together play the old game.

Just suppose you start on a journey to Haven. Now make believe you board a train scheduled to stop at that station, but instead of paying your fare you "beat the conductor out of it." Let us make believe that to your great surprise and indignation the train rushes by Haven and you are carried beyond your destination and have a disagreeable time getting back to your station. Just suppose that when you investigate why the train did not make its scheduled stop at Haven you are blandly told "Well, the engineer does not like the agent at that station and the conductor dislikes the name of Haven so they have agreed between the two of them that their train will not stop there." "How absurd!" you remark. "There is no engineer, conductor or decent passenger who would act in such a foolish or dishonest manner." Well, we hope you are right.

Now, just suppose you are engineering and conducting an enterprise for God. Let us for instance make believe you are a church member. But you do not like the pastor so you break up the progress of the local church. Or let us suppose that you dislike the cause of world salvation or missions or the name of the organization that gathers the funds so you refuse to support it. Or let's make believe that you beat God out of his share of your money and use all of your resources for worldly purposes. Or just suppose —"Now hold on here, that is too absurd!" you remark. "There is no one so foolish or dishonest as to act in such a manner and if any one did do so it would be proof that they were ———."

Well let's end the game right here and now because —well, just because it is best not to play the game any longer or some one might say we were getting too realistic.

First Century Christians

DIVINE grace does not put into quarantine one who enters the kingdom of God. It transforms the newcomer by the new birth and with heart purified, he becomes a citizen of heaven and enters into the heritage of his Lord. There is no long process by which he becomes naturalized. He becomes supernaturalized and this is the work of a moment. He was not a Christian; he seeks God through penitence; he is henceforth a Christian.

Then the renewed heart is placed by the Lord's hand in contact with the poor and needy. The germicide of sin is love—God's love in Christ and Christ's love in his servant. The water of life runs down hill. Love reaches the lowly. Sunlight is not contaminated when it touches the mud. It cleans the spot it reaches. The Christian is not harmed by the sinful heart he lifts. The ancients knew how to temper copper and make it cut granite. Men cannot do it now. Early Christians went everywhere making disciples. Merchants were missionaries. Soldiers became teachers. Slaves were transformed into prophets. Have modern Christians lost the power to propagate their faith? Are their tools soft, their weapons broken, their message meaningless?

Agree on Purpose of Christ's First Coming

TO interpret world conditions to American Baptists and to show the relation of these conditions to the immediate extension of Christianity is the annual burden of the reports of our missionary societies. Since the days when the first Christians faced a world alien to principles of Christ's teachings, the followers of our Lord have seldom had such difficulties to overcome, such testings to endure, such problems to solve and such conflicting phenomena to interpret. The fire of war helped to destroy the hay, wood and stubble, which are the non-essentials that have grown up about the true foundation. But, as in the first centuries, the gold, silver and precious stones will again remain. Many growths in the gardens which Protestant churches have cultivated may be safely lost, for weeds are plants whose medicinal values have not yet been discovered. Philosophic vines that cling to the denominational walls into which enter the birds of gay plumage and light-hearted song, may well be torn down during these days of testing and little, if anything, be lost. Many superstructures too and all scaffolding may go the same way and the world may be the richer spiritually.

For Baptists who have always stood for independence in religion, for the right of private judgment, for each man's full privilege to explain the inspired scriptures as he believes the spirit of God interprets them to him, the present hour is filled with an immense significance. There has always been a consensus of conviction concerning the great spiritual essentials. There has likewise been a variety of opinions held concerning minor matters of faith. Frequently there has been a disagreement as to what is a major and what is a minor point. Always, doubtless, the provincial elements have entered into statements of truth. But for more than a hundred years Baptists have been united in our great missionary task. This has been the cable that has convoyed us safely through many stormy seas. Our discussions have been organizational, and often theological, but we have lived to this day as brethren, knowing that in our individual churches, associations and conventions our most thoughtful and consecrated men and women have never at one time agreed on all doctrinal matters.

As Baptists we have given our primary attention to the extension of our Lord's kingdom. We have men who interpret the scriptures differently in terms of our Lord's second coming, but who are all agreed on the purpose of his first coming and that all must come to the Saviour for salvation. Our one task as a denomination is to preach the gospel to the whole world, and events are giving today fresh meaning to the cross of Christ and shedding new light on our Lord's vicarious sufferings. It would be a sight to make angels weep if in a world writhing in agony, Baptists should fail to do their full part in its redemption.

Divergencies in Baptist Belief in Relation to Fundamental Baptist Principle

A Plea in Behalf of Second Corinthians 3:4-6

By H. F. Huse

BAPTIST beginnings in America go back to the days of Roger Williams, apostle of religious liberty, exile from Massachusetts for the Baptist faith, and who by his settlement in Rhode Island led to the establishment in Providence, 1639, of the first Baptist church in America, now the First Baptist Church of Providence, dedicated to the worship of God, and commencements of Brown University.

The increase of Baptists in the country since the days of Williams is remarkable. The little one has become a thousand. The insignificant and the despised one has become a mighty and an honored host. Baptists today are no longer driven out, except where there is ignorance, superstition, political and ecclesiastical tyranny on the part of those who wish to continue such an order; but Baptists are welcomed by all those who are looking for a new day, seeking salvation, and the realization of our Redeemer's kingdom.

Growth of Baptists

According to the best records and estimates available Baptist growth in America has been as follows:

|---|---|
| 1790 Baptist church members numbered ... | 60,970 |
| 1800 Baptist church members numbered ... | 100,000 |
| 1807 Baptist church members numbered ... | 122,500 |
| 1901 Baptist church members numbered ... | 4,233,226 |
| 1917 Baptist church members numbered ... | 6,442,398 |
| 1921 Baptist church members numbered ... | 7,835,250 |
| 1922 Baptist church members numbered ... | 8,303,824 |

Baptist people have come to represent about one-fourteenth of the population of the country, and, lacking 300,000, about one-fifth of the forty-four million church members of the country. If we should take hold of hands we could well-nigh circle the country. If baptized of the Holy Spirit, together we put our shoulders to the task Christ has given us to do, there is no burden that cannot be lifted, there is nothing impossible for us to accomplish in the realm of evangelism, Christian education, and Christian missions.

Now there must be good reasons for this wonderful growth and present status of our denomination, the achievements that have been ours, our schools and colleges, our great churches, our great missionary and philanthropic activities and accomplishments—and there are. They are to be found first, in the great doctrines we have believed, preached and practised; and also, second, in the great principles of church organization and polity, that we have believed, preached and practised.

A third explanation is the way in which as a denomination we have been able to retain in our membership in the oneness of the Spirit, those who in the letter of many an interpretation are at divergence. The fellowship of our denomination is a great fellowship because it seeks to express and exemplify the principle laid down by Paul in his word to the Corinthians. "And such trust have we through Christ to Godward: not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think anything of ourselves but our sufficiency is of God; who hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter but of the spirit: for the letter killeth but the spirit maketh alive."

That there is divergence among us as Baptists in some phases of our belief is patent to everybody. Evidence of it appears in conversations, conventions, sermons and our religious journals. There are Baptists conservative and Baptists liberal, so-called. There are the middle-of-the-road Baptists. There are the evangelical Baptists and the fundamentalist Baptists. There are the Bible Union Baptists and, perchance, Baptists unclassified. When Baptists in Maine came together one of the newspapers in the effort to state that the Baptists in Maine would henceforth be known as the United Baptists of Maine, announced to the world that we were the "Untied" Baptists!

That there is divergence among us in some matters of belief ought not to surprise us. It is nothing other than what has been true of us all along the years as every informed student of Baptist history knows. It cannot well be otherwise in a denomination that grants to the individual such liberty of mind as Baptist principle accords. If one is a Catholic one believes just what the church hands out or is excommunicated from the church. If, however, one is a Baptist one is privileged to possess and read the Bible for himself, and by prayer for divine guidance, by study and reflection, form his own views, and arrive at his own convictions as to what is the truth in Jesus Christ.

This question arises, and is the point around which our controversy rages, what is that divergence in doctrine, to which, if one feels obliged to go in the exercise of his right of private judgment, he becomes unbaptistic in the denial of evangelical Baptist doctrine?

Submitting Unto the Lord

Our Baptist principles are such that they do not lend themselves readily to the adoption of formal creeds, confessions and traditions. When Roger Williams assembled the Baptists of Rhode Island, they, under his influence, committed themselves first of all in loyalty to Jesus Christ, and second to the Bible. They said, "We whose names are underwritten do here solemnly . . . . submit our persons, lives and estates unto our Lord Jesus Christ . . . and to all those perfect and most absolute laws of his given us in his holy Word to be guided and judged thereby."

Now the situation that seems to prevail among us today is, that some Baptists in their ardor for doctrine seem to be forgetting Baptist principle; and here and there a man perhaps, who, under cover of Baptist principle, has in the adoption of his beliefs gone outside the bounds of what constitutes sound evangelical and baptistic doctrine, if we can know with assurance and agreement just what those bounds are.

In the meantime the genius, the greatness, the glory of our Baptist denomination is the fact that it retains in its membership in the oneness of the spirit, those who in the letter of belief differ, those who though they may differ in many a letter of doctrinal interpretation, in evangelical essentials are one.

"And such trust have we through Christ to Godward; not that we are sufficient of ourselves to think anything of ourselves but our sufficiency—or better our competency is of God; who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament; not of the letter but of the spirit: for the letter killeth but the spirit maketh alive."

Divergencies in our Baptist belief seem for the most part to come first, in our attitude toward the Bible; and second, in our attitude toward the second coming of Christ.

About the Bible

A Baptist pastor in Maine, whom I love and whose faithfulness and success in the work of the church I admire, believes that however long the ages may have been between the time when the earth was "without form and void and darkness was upon the face of the deep," and the time when sun, moon and stars appeared, man and all the other forms of life—when they were brought into existence God spake and these things were instantaneously created. God said—and immediately with the divine word the heavens and the earth came to be, the lower order of animals, trees, flowers, insect and creeping thing, and man. He believes that the real work of creation was accomplished in literally six days of twenty-four hours each.

But this Baptist preacher has a son. He is not a college graduate, nor is he in college. He is, however, a student. He patronizes the public library. He reads books. He is specially interested in geology. He has a small collection of rocks and he can interest any one as he tells their geological story.

Now this son has just been reading Prof. A. W. Grabeau's geology, recently published in two large volumes. From the pages of this scholarly and fascinating masterpiece he has learned of the geologic ages of the past, the glacial periods, the various races of men which the geologist tells us once in the long ago inhabited various parts of the earth. He has read of the Trinal man, who according to the geologist lived at a time antedating our present era by 475,000 years. He reads of the Heidelberg man, the Piltdown man, the Neanderthal man—this latter man, according to the geologist, lived during the third and fourth interglacial period approximating 25,000 to 100,000 years ago. He hears the geologist say "the oldest known man-like creature was not the highly endowed occupant of the traditional garden of Eden but a brute-like man, not far removed from his simian ancestors."

This son tells his father these things. He takes a stone from his collection bearing the fossilized imprint of a bird. He tells the earth period in which that bird must have lived to have had the pressure of its foot thus recorded. "All these things are very interesting," the father answers, "but I find it easier to believe Genesis." But this father doesn't drive this son from the house. He doesn't call him "a theological Bolshevist." He does not call him a denominational wrecker. He knows he is none of these terrible things. The father changes the subject from science to religion, and from geology to the church, and the father's heart leaps with joy as he hears his son tell about his Sunday-school class, and what he is doing to win young people to Christ, and into the Baptist church, of which he is a member.

> WHAT is fundamental depends on what you are talking about. If it is the superstructure of the building, then ridge-poles, cross-beams and flooring are fundamental. But if it is the whole house itself, then it is the underneath foundation, and the all-important question is: "Is the foundation sand or rock?"

Dr. W. W. Keen believes God, and evolution. There are those in the denomination who don't believe evolution, in any phase or interpretation of that word. But nevertheless each and all believe God, and also that back of the processes, whatever they may have been, whereby these things that are have come to be, is God, the Creator and Lord of All, God the Fashioner and Sustainer of the universe, God the Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, God who so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him, might not perish, but have everlasting life. As to evolution as one has said "if it is false it cannot be saved by science. If it is true it cannot be destroyed by theology."

Even though there be divergence in the question of method, and how God has done things, there is mutual agreement in fact that God has done them. Is it not then the genius, the greatness and the glory of our Baptist denomination that it can retain, and does retain in its membership those of such divergence of belief as regards the letter, but of such unity of belief as regards the spirit? Most assuredly it is.

Some in their attitude toward the Bible would seem to say that the gospel is given us to serve the Bible, others prefer to think of the Bible as given us to serve the gospel. Perhaps, however, it is a distinction without a difference, for all Baptists recognize and believe that both gospel and Bible were given us of God to lead us out of darkness into light, to save us from sin to salvation, to lift us from earth to heaven, and to enable us to know God, serve God, and labor for the kingdom and glory of his Son. What greater unity of faith, devotion and service in relation to the Bible do we need then this?

The Second Coming of Christ

This doctrine has always been one to lend itself to confusions and difficulties. But no more so today than in earlier times. The spirit that manifests itself today in millennialism is the same spirit that has broken out again and again in the history of the Christian church. In the early centuries, it found expression in the Montanists and Chiliasts. In the thirteenth century we meet it in the Joachamites and the spiritual Fransciscans. Before the Reformation among some of the Hussites were those who heralded the doctrine, and after the Reformation, groups of Ana-Baptists. In the seventeenth century it created the Fifth Monarchy Men. In more recent times it has been one of the outstanding characteristics of the Irvingites, the Millerites, the Plymouth Brethren, Adventists, Christadelphians. Within the past twenty-five years we have seen Doweism in Illinois, and Sanfordism in Maine with the disillusionments, the disappointments, the failures and tragedies connected with these two religious ventures. The majority attracted to these two religious movements were influenced largely by the premillennial appeals.

Among those who have especially cherished this doctrine in its literal and materialistic phases have been some of the noblest spirits of the church. They have been men of such spiritual power that some of their critics are unworthy to loose the latchet of their shoes.

Becoming to Christians

Ireneus held to the Chiliastic doctrine. He admitted, however, many perplexing questions. Revelation as well as nature to him was full of mysteries. Instead of prying into the inscrutable things of God, Ireneus felt it to be better for us, and more becoming as Christians, to seek to rise to God in a great love, and in a heroic devotion.

Tertullian preached the millennial reign of Christ. He divested it of all its materialistic and Judaistic conceptions. He dwelt on spiritual blessings to be enjoyed when that day should come in which Christ triumphed.

As regards the divergence of views in relation to the second coming of Christ, perhaps there is no word that sets it forth so clearly as the word of Frederick W. Robertson in a sermon that he once preached on "Realizing the Second Advent." "The second advent of Christ is supposed by some to mean an appearance of Jesus in the flesh to reign and triumph visibly. Others who feel that the visual perception of his form would be small blessing, and that the highest and truest presence is always spiritual, and realized by the Spirit, believe his advent will be a coming in power. We will not dispute. Controversy whets the intellect and only starves the heart, or, worse, poisons it. We will take what is certain. Every signal manifestation of the right, and vindication of the truth in judgment, is called in scripture a coming of the Son of Man."

Our Baptist forefather were pointing to the cross more than watching or discussing the clouds. They were busy in laying the foundations of our great educational and missionary organizations that some in our midst today threaten to desert.

Among great scholars Dean Alford is one who has had great influence in the support of the adventism which "looks upon the consummation of the Jewish Age as a type of another infinitely greater catastrophe, when the whole human race will be brought to the judgment seat of Christ, and the earth consumed by a general conflagration." And yet at the close of the 1855 edition of his Greek New Testament, and also of the edition of 1869 Dean Alford expressed his doubt as to the correctness of this view. He said "I think it proper to state that, having now entered upon the deeper study of the prophetic portions of the New Testament, I do not by any means feel that full confidence which once I did in the exigesis, quoad prophetical interpretations, here given. I have no other system to substitute and some points here dwelt upon seem to me as weighty as ever. I very much question whether the thorough study of scripture prophecy will not make me more distrustful of all human systematizing, and less willing to hazard strong assertion on any portion of the subject."

When such a great and devout scholar is thus in doubt—divergency in adventist belief cannot be other than expected—and in accord with fundamental Baptist principle in no way affects membership in a Baptist church.

The Incarnate Risen

A word that another princely scholar has spoken is that of H. B. Swete upon the "Coming and the End." It is a word that many both within and without our denomination might do well to consider, if they would keep their doctrinal balance in the midst of the adventist propaganda of the present time. "As to the nature of Christ's coming—beware of pressing realistic descriptions. It is unnecessary to suppose that he expected them to be literally fulfilled in his own case. Allowance must be made for the use of symbolical and traditional language of this kind in prophecies of an event entirely beyond human experience. Do not expect the details of a bridal procession, or a glorious human form on a great white throne. So I conceive we are not bound to think our Lord expected or taught a visible descent in the clouds. These may belong to the symbolism of the Parousia and not its inner reality. But as Christian teachers we hold fast to the hope of the Lord's coming, and connect it as did Christ with a final judgment of men, and a transition from the present order to the next, the beginnings of a new age. There is a time coming, it may not be far off, God only knows, when there will be a great manifestation of the incarnate risen Lord to the whole world, and the final manifestation of God in man will be the final judgment of the world, just as in a less degree the world was judged when he came in the flesh; whenever it comes there will be a sorting of men, and parting them according to character, which on a small scale goes on now when Christ is preached. In that great flash of spiritual light which the final revelation of Jesus Christ will bring, all men will stand revealed to themselves, and henceforth they will take their places accordingly. We do well to use the words in the gospel leaving it to the event to show all that they mean."

The Abiding Presence

Therefore if we cannot know with definite assurance and detail the manner of his coming, or agree upon its nature and method, if Christ is ours, and we are his, we can enjoy his abiding presence in our hearts by the Holy Spirit, and we can pray and labor for the day when there shall come the glorious outburst of that abiding presence, in the complete revelation of the sons of God, for which mankind in its sins languishes and dies, and the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain.

In the Baptist denomination, there is therefore ample room for a man to move about, in the exercise of the right of his private judgment, and in the divergencies of belief.

The crux of the matter is: At what point in the divergencies of belief does a man not only cease to be baptistic, but evangelical?

I know of no better answer to this question, than the doctrines necessary to meet the situation described by the late Peter T. Forsythe. "What ails us is not limitation, but transgression; not poverty, but alienation. What we need is not cheer, but salvation; not help, but rescue; not stimulus, but change; not tonics, but life. Our one need of God is a moral need in the strictest holiest sense. The bent of our nature can never meet it. It involves a new nature, a new world, a new creation. It is the moral need not to be transfigured, but to be saved. And the inner authority of the Redeemer is the final authority in Christianity —authority of Christ as Redeemer, as our new Creator; the authority of Christ's person as wholly gathered up and completely expressed in the cross, its work and its gospel."

Where then do we discover the dividing line between that which is evangelical and unevangelical? What is that position in doctrine, which if a man takes up with it, he ceases to be either evangelical, or baptistic, and except a man is evangelical, surely that man will not claim to be baptistic in doctrine, however much he may be baptistic in the right of his private judgment?

Doctrines that place us in a naturalistic process, and make us independent of God's redeeming grace in Jesus Christ and his cross, surely are not only unevangelical, but unbaptistic.

"Liberal theology, in all its varieties," says Dr. Forsythe, "is indifferent to the doctrine of the Holy Ghost. It is this doctrine which prevents us from describing the progress of Christianity as mere spiritual process. Any theology which places us in a spiritual process or native movement between the finite and the infinite, depreciates the value of spiritual act, and thus makes us independent of grace. Its movement is processional, spectacular, aesthetic. It is not historic, dramatic, tragic, ethical. Liberal theology is fatal to the old faith."

Sand or Rock

What is fundamental depends on what you are talking about. If it is the superstructure of the building, then ridge-poles, crossbeams and flooring are fundamental. But if it is the whole house itself, then it is the underneath foundation, and the all-important question is: "Is the foundation sand or rock?"

The cross that was set up on Calvary strikes bed rock in the Person who died upon it, his voluntary, vicarious, and victorious death, the atonement effected by that death, the gospel of God's redeeming grace given to the world in that death.

"When I survey the wondrous cross
On which the Prince of Glory died,
My richest gain I count but loss
And pour contempt on all my pride."

In all our deaths, however noble and heroic they may have been, we have simply "the best that men can do." In that death on Calvary we have "the best that God can do."

The Gospel Is One

The faith that saves is one thing. Theological opinion is another thing. The former is immediate, final and complete. The latter is a matter of time, and years, perchance a life-time's study. The majority of those we take into our churches are taken in at a time when the matter of a mature theological opinion is out of the question. Not so a saving faith and sweet trust in Jesus. The gospel is one. Theologies are many. Is our denomination such that we must examine our members every six months, or with every passing decade? Theological opinions are varied and seem subject at times to change. But the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today and forever.

One evening in 1881 Gladstone, Tyndale, Froude and Tennyson were spending the evening together when, as is usually the case with big men and big minds, the subject turned to the subject of religion. The question of the immortality of the soul was introduced, and historical belief in it. Gladstone and Tennyson spoke upon the side of belief. Gladstone ended the discussion by saying, "Let scientific men stick to their science, and leave philosophy and religion to the poets, philosophers and theologians."

Along this same line it might be said that all preachers are not scholars, any more than all scholars are preachers. The Christian scholar has his calling, and likewise the Christian preacher has his. What is needed is confidence each in the other's purpose of heart, and devout cooperation to find out and to herald the truth as it is in Jesus.

Science is and should be the handmaid of religion. A true and reverent science undertakes to find out, if it can, how God has done things. Finding out, it will join in religion in proclaiming the fact, "How marvelous are thy works, O Lord; in wisdom thou hast made them all, the earth is full of thy riches." He who considers science today hears a voice, loud and insistent, heralding a universe no less spiritual than material—and God in the midst of it—an Immanent God.

If a man is drowning and we undertake to rescue him, we do not throw him a suit of clothes before we get him out of the water. First we fish him out of the water, care for him and fit him as best we can with dry clothes. It is one thing to save people in Jesus Christ. It is quite another thing to fit them to the theological clothes we think they ought to wear. It seems to require many theological tailors, much measuring, time and patience.

If a man believes God; if he believes God in Christ was clothed in the flesh of humanity; if he believes that God in Christ hath made atonement for the sin of men, and of the world; if he believes him in whom we have our redemption, the forgiveness of sins and the blessed hope of an endless immortality; if he believes God has spoken to men, and that in an inspired Bible, God has given to us a faithful and true record of his dealings with mankind; the revelation of his divine will and purposes, and in the gospel has made plain the way of life, and invited whosoever will to walk in that way that leads home, to the Father's house of many mansions—I have a feeling that that man is an evangelical Christian.

Belief of a Baptist

Moreover if he is a man with such beliefs, and at the same time believes in being buried with Christ in the waters of baptism to come forth and to walk in newness of life; if he believes in loyalty to Jesus Christ and an inspired Bible; if he believes in soul liberty in Christ; if he believes in the spirit that maketh alive, more than in the letter that kills; if he believes in the independence and democracy of the local church, the separation of church and state, I think that man belongs in the Baptist denomination; and in a Baptist church anywhere in the land he should feel happy and at home and enthusiastic, for the work of that church should dedicate his all to the kingdom of Christ's triumph and glory that it represents.

Sophie and Her God

The Proving of a Child's Faith

AS TOLD BY MARK O. PRENTISS AND RECORDED BY DORA LOUES MILLER

IT was the night of the third day of the fire. We were standing on the quay, a huddled group of Americans, trying to direct the groaning, seething mass of humanity round about us. I had climbed on the chassis of a burned Standard Oil truck to get out of the mass of people who seemed literally pushing us into the sea.

No words can picture the pandemonium, the relentless, hopeless, unremitting effort of the fear-maddened crowd to get somewhere, anywhere out of the pursuing hell of fire and away from the fear of the avenging Turk.

One of the bluejackets beside the truck called out, "Mr. Prentiss, give me your hand! They've caught me; I can't get loose and they're going to break my back." I got down to try to pull him out of the maelstrom of human beings, and as I gave him one hand I felt another small one slip into my other one. After three days and nights of having your clothes clawed, held, torn even, by humans begging for their lives, one more or less didn't mean much. And yet there was something so warm and tender, so intensely alive and human, that I turned to find its owner.

There she stood, not over ten or eleven, and, most remarkable of all in that dread scene, with a smile on her face. I had seen every emotion of sorrow and despair depicted on human features those three days. I was almost stunned. It had been such an eternity of horror that this child's smile seemed like a forgotten bit of joy of life which I could remember only with a struggle. And then she spoke. And in English! It was almost more than I could bear.

A Child's Voice

Trying to direct this crowd of despairing people, everywhere a babel of Turkish, Greek, Armenian, and then this child's voice in my own tongue! It seemed like an angel's. But her words were even more surprising. "I'm so glad you are here. I won't be afraid any more, now. He said you would come."

It took half an hour to worm the thin little figure out of the pressing mass of humans to a place of comparative safety from trampling feet. Shortly after midnight it was possible to get her through a doorway into comparative quiet and safety.

As I carried the child through the crowd her words of two hours before repeated themselves: "I won't be afraid any more. He said you would come."

"So you were expecting me, were you?"

"Oh, yes. He told me."

"He told you? Who did?"

"God did."

In all the mixed emotions of the hour I thought I had not heard aright, and repeated my question, and in that same casual tone, reporting the conversation of a beloved and intimate comrade, the answer came, "God did."

"You see," she explained, "after I lost mother and baby sister I began to be afraid. There were so many people, and if any one fell they walked on him, and it was cold and dark and I was hungry, and I was scared. So I prayed to God, and asked him to come quickly and help me. But he told me he was awfully busy. There were so many people in trouble who wanted to talk to him that he couldn't get away he was so busy. But then he told me he would send somebody, and here you are, and so now I know it's all right!"

It gave me an indescribable thrill.

To a plain business man, used to the ordinary experiences of every-day life, this friendly familiarity with the Divine seemed like a glimpse back into the unrealities of "Alice in Wonderland." The poise and quiet assurance of all being well, in the face of uncontrolled fear and anguish all about, made the whole incident more amazing. If a man hasn't got a God, he has to respect a little child who has one.

She said her name was Sophie Serafim, and that she had been born in America. A year before, with her family, she had gone back to the little town in Asia Minor and her migration had changed many things for Sophie, but not her God nor her faith in the "Americano."

As I left her I promised to be back in a few minutes to take her to a place to sleep, but it was near daylight before the course of events permitted my return. Coming back I wondered if Sophie would be there or if she would have wandered away. Snuggled up in the door she waited.

The sailors who had been assigned to shore duty had just brought a pot of coffee and some food from the destroyer for mess. After having had her breakfast, Sophie asked me if I was ready to start to find her mother. The father, a rich Greek from the interior, had brought his family to Smyrna with the retreating Greek army. Five days before he had been seized by the Turks. Then the fire had started, and two days later the mother, Sophie, and baby sister had been driven down to the quay for safety. In the crowd they had become separated, and the child had been wandering alone for two days and nights.

The calm assurance with which Sophie spoke of finding them, as if we had only to walk half way down the block of a quiet street, brought a choke in my throat, even though I may be considered a fairly hardened realist.

Sophie with her good English and perfect Greek could act as interpreter. It was only reasonable to take the child with me. She would be of real assistance to me and there was no need to bring to her before it was necessary the realization that she would probably never see her family again. I tried to tell her as we walked along of the number of people that were wandering about, and of how difficult it would be, but she only smiled sweetly and said, "But God said you would find them. Don't worry about it. You and God can do anything."

I had never thought of myself coupled with Divinity, but I was to hear the phrase many times in the next week, and to remember it for the rest of my life.

During the morning we covered a mile along the quay through such a mess of desolate humanity as you never saw. Shortly before noon I was amazed to have Sophie pull my sleeve. "There they are, my mother and sister!" And coming toward us I saw a grief-crazed woman carrying a baby, hysterical with joy at this miracle of her regained daughter, and the intimate guardianship of an "Americano." It was Sophie who calmed her mother, who explained that God had promised her that he would bring them all together again.

Sophie's Father

When we had the family with several hundred women and children safely conveyed to a building which was to serve as a refuge until such time as we were able to evacuate them, I prepared for Sophie's suggestion that her father was next.

I took his name, and at my next interview with Haaki Bey, the Turkish commander, who was cooperating with us in delivering into our hands his enemy, I asked for the man. His name and record were looked up, and with a guide and page who called out his name I was taken down into the bull-pen where about 5,000 prisoners were confined. There was no answer to our paging, and I went back with disappointed heart to tell Sophie that our efforts had been in vain. For the next three days this was a regular part of my schedule, but to no avail.

Then Sophie came to me with a simple logical explanation of our failure, which in the stress of events had not occurred to me. She said, "My father may be afraid to answer. He may not know that God has sent you to deliver him. Let me go with you." So down into that mass of humanity we went. They put her up on a platform where she could look over the prisoners and by some small miracle, considering the number of them and the sameness of their misery, she recognized him.

He was conducted to the commandant's office. There we were shown his record and the sentence of death by

Faith

By M. P. Comer

I CAN'T be an infidel because I can see
The handwork of God on each bush and tree;
The mountains and valleys and birds of the air
Were all planned by some one, some time and somewhere.
The sun, moon and stars, and the darkness and light,
Could not be perfected by man in his might.

I can't be an infidel, because I believe
That for all of my sins, I shall pardon receive.
I've learned of redemption in the Book that I cherish,
And know it's not God's will that any should perish.
And when through the valley of death I must go, court martial. He had not been executed, merely because his turn had not come. Knowing the answer in advance, I begged the commandant to deliver this condemned man to me. It was with every appearance of regret that he refused my request. My heart was heavy as I went out to the automobile to report my failure to Sophie. Instead of the despair I had anticipated, Sophie, putting her hand in mine with her usual smile, said, "Don't you worry. Don't you know that the Turks can't hurt my father? Why, God is bigger than all of the Turks! They can't hurt him." And so, ashamed before her faith, I was quiet.
I'll cling to the faith I have kept here below.

When the military governor arrived I made another unsuccessful attempt. Finally Nour-ed-din, the most powerful man of his country next to Mustapha Kemal, arrived in Smyrna. I prayed an audience and was received by this great man. I asked him for the prisoner. "Is he an American? A naturalized citizen? Has he any claim upon you?" I could only answer in the negative. "He is a Greek, the father of a little child who has a God, a real God, your excellency. He is not your God, nor is he my God, but he has promised this child that her father shall be saved. Can you arrange it?"

Sentence of Death

Then Nour-ed-din, by skillfully questioning, brought out the whole story. With his hand on his heart he said: "You break my heart. There is no other thing I would refuse you. But this is not an affair of the heart. This is war. I have many thousands of Turkish children who will never again see their fathers. It is with a breaking heart that I must refuse you. Sentence of death has been passed on this man, who will be executed tomorrow morning."

"Is that final, your excellency?"

"I regret that it must be so."

"I cannot blame you. I have seen the records of the case. You may have executed 10,000 Greeks, and will probably kill another 50,000 before this is over. This one Greek will mean little to you, but it is everything in the faith of this child. Powerful as you are, your excellency, and humble as I am, the time might come when you would need a friend in America. If you can find clemency possible, I can assure you of my appreciation, little as it may mean."

"I must tell you no, though my heart breaks."

So I left him, attempting to comfort Sophie. It was a chance; it was playing dramatics if you will. But I had nothing to lose, and I was desperate. He said he would see what could be done.

The next morning a captain of Turkish infantry with half a dozen soldiers brought John Serafim down to the American refugee house where we were living. At the suggestion of this officer, six sailors of the United States destroyer, "Edsall," under command of Capt. Haley Powell, formed a hollow square around Sophie, her mother and father and the baby sister, and escorted them to the quay. Here Turks and Americans stood at full salute as the naval launch carried the party out to the boat which was to take them away. The story had spread among our group, and as the boat left shore we were caught up in the rush of a good American cheer from the ship for Sophie, and the proving of her faith.

I thought, naturally, that I had seen the last of Sophie, but coincidence had one more trick up its sleeve. I stayed there about three weeks, then went to Constantinople, and thence to Athens, where we had settled thousands of refugees. The Greek officials there wanted to show some appreciation to America for what had been done. Accordingly they singled me out for a little ceremony. We went out to one of the camps where there were some 30,000 or 40,000 refugees. When I got out of the automobile, who should run up to me out of the crowd but Sophie! She came up, stood on her tiptoes, and threw her arms around my neck.

I confess I cried. Out of all those weeks of horror it was the first time, but I blubbered. As her arms went round my neck she said, "I knew you'd come today—God said you would!"

"Sophie, what did you say?"

"Why, last night I prayed to God because we haven't had much to eat for three or four days and the people were getting very hungry and unhappy. They all know about you and asked me to pray to God to send you back, so last night I asked him and he said you'd be here today."

Isn't it a paradox that a man must go from a Christian country to Turkey to find a real God—one that functions?

Fortunately, or providentially, American supplies had arrived and I could once more fulfill Sophie's idea and ideal of God's messenger. As she said goodby, she added, "I'll see you in America. I've told God how much I want to go. People are so much happier in America. They think about doing nice things for other people and that makes them happy too."

May God grant her prayer!

A Scientist with the Soul of a Poet

THERE is a tradition that scientists are adamant-souled creatures, with not a poetical fiber in their being. Hard, bony facts are the meat of their mental existence. As if to disprove all that has been heretofore thought of in connection with the scientific mind there comes to the foreground Sir Jagadis Chandra Bose, the Asiatic Indian scientist, who has made the entire world of science sit up and take surprised notice.

Mr. Bose is a University of Cambridge man. For many years he was a teacher in Presidency College at Calcutta. There it was that he began his research work. Busy all day with his class-room work and lectures, doing the tedious round of thesis correcting and after-school duties, he nevertheless made time to give to the work of his heart.

When he was thirty-five years old he vowed a vow that he would devote his life to research work without a thought of personal gain.. He has lived up to that vow. His life has been always one of giving, never of getting—save that with him, as always, must work the immutable law: Only when we give greatly do we gain greatly.

Out of his salary as a teacher and lecturer, Bose began to save—with a purpose. It was a big purpose, and one that was worthy of the strict economies which he enforced upon himself in order that he might accomplish that to which he had set his mind and consecrated his life. It saw its fruition in the Bose Research Institute, which he founded in Calcutta with these savings. This was his country's first institute. But it is his country's only in the sense of location; for the big-souled Bose was laboring for humanity; and by his provision this institute is free to all the world, men and women alike, regardless of race, age, color, nationality or lack of scholarship credentials; and thus it is to be "for all time coming."

Bose's gifts to the scientific world, and through this world to all humanity, do not stop with the institute. They merely begin there. His every discovery is for the use of those who can make use of it. In his research work along practically unchartered lines, it is necessary for him to have instruments which are not to be bought. There is one way out for him—painstakingly he devises the needed instrument. This course has resulted in the making of instruments of high commercial value. He could command a fortune on them were they to be patented. But he refuses to have them patented. He remains true to the decision made at the mid-day of his life: No personal gain must accrue to himself through his research work.

It was in the early nineties that the name of Bose began to bear special significance in the scientific world outside of his own country. His government sent him to lecture in European countries, and he surprised the scientists gathered to hear him by his knowledge of Hertzian waves and his ingenious device for their detection.

His experiments with metals and plants amaze scientists. A metal is not a cold, dead thing to Bose—it is alive. He speaks of it in terms applied to living organisms such as tired, twitching, living, non-living. His instruments have caused metals so to respond to tests usually applied only to living organisms that physiologists have thought the tests were being made on organic matter until otherwise informed. The investigations have thrown them into a maze of wonder, and eagerness for more light.

Perhaps this new knowledge of the vegetable kingdom that Bose is revealing may give some clue to the kinship which seems inherent in most people for trees and plants and flowers. It is more than a sense of their beauty that makes the appeal. Tears have been shed by high-minded persons at seeing a tree, in all the majesty of its prime, wrecked. Neglected flowers cause compunction. Thirsty plants awaken pity. To Bose plants are near-human. With his instruments he has caused them to register numerous sensations which are ordinarily attributed only to the animal world, such as nervousness, weariness, depression. Plants suffer pain; they manifest the flush of death as shown in the glorious autumn colors of falling leaves. By means of his instruments, Bose can tell the exact moment at which a plant ceases to live.

As a scientist, Bose feels that in these investigations, his triumph comes in proving the existing unity that underlies all of the physical world. He calls it "a mark of law," showing "that the responsive processes, seen in life, have been foreshadowed in non-life—that the physiological is related to the physio-chemical."

Baptist World Alliance

Third congress, to be held in Stockholm, Sweden, from Saturday, July 21, to Friday, July 27, 1923.

ALL sessions of the alliance will be held in Immanuelskyrkan (the Congress Church); sectional sessions in Betelkapellet (First Baptist Church). The Baptist exhibition and the center for committee meetings will be in the Hogre Reallaroverket, a building for higher education. The Y. M. C. A. in Stockholm has very kindly placed a part of its splendid building at the disposal of the delegates as their headquarters.

Saturday, July 21

11 a. m. Meeting of the executive committee of the Baptist World Alliance, in Hushallsskolan Margareta, Drottninggat 69.

3 p. m. Reception.

Chairman: Rev. J. Bystrom, D. D., president of the Baptist Union of Sweden.

Reply by Dr. John Clifford, C. H., M. A., of London, deputy president for the Eastern Hemisphere.

A delegation from the Free Churches of Sweden to be received.

4 p. m. Roll Call.

Prayer by the Rev. J. R. Edwards, of London.

Replies, not exceeding three minutes, from representatives of each group, or combined groups.

8 p. m. Sacred concert by Swedish choirs.

Sunday, July 22

11 a. m. Divine worship in the Congress Church (Immanuelskyrkan).
Preacher: The Rev. W. A. Cameron, B. A., of Toronto.

Other services will be conducted as follows:

Betelkapellet, Malmskillnadsgatan 48 D.
Preacher: Rev. A. T. Fowler, D. D., of Brooklyn. Subject: "The Authority of Christ Today and Tomorrow."

Salemkapellet, Folkungagatan 14.
Preacher: A minister from the Northern Convention of America.

Ebeneserkyrkan, Brannkyrkagatan 31.
Preacher: Rev. Lacey K. Williams, D. D., of Chicago.

Tabernaklet, Observatoriegatan 4.
Preacher: To be arranged.
(English service without interpretation.)

Elimkapellet, Storgatan 26.
Preacher: The Rev. John Friborg, of San Francisco.

Betaniakyrkan, Bergsgatan 45.
Preacher: Rev. J. Kallestad, of Trondhjem.

Saron, Birgerjarlsgatan 99.
Preacher: A Danish minister.

Betelseminariet, Engelbreklsgatan 18.
Preacher: Rev. Carl Schneider, of Hamburg.
(German service without interpretation.)

Ebeneserkyrkan, Sundyberg.
Preacher: A Chinaman.

Simonkapellet, Hagalund.
Preacher: Rev. Mr. Ransk, of Finland.

Andreaskyrkan, Hagbergsgatan 27 A. (Congregational).
Preacher: Rev. J. W. Ewing, M. A., D. D., of London.

Missionshuset, Kungsgatan 88 (Congregational).
Preacher: Rev. Josef Novotny, of Prague.

Emanskyrkan (Congregational).
Preacher: To be arranged.

Missionssalen Valhalla (Congregational).
Preacher: Rev. Joel Waiz Lall, M. A., M. O. L., of Delhi.

Betesdakyrkan, Floragatan 8 (Congregational).
Preacher: Dr. T. Clagett Skinner, of Columbia.

Trefaldighetskyrkan, Majorsgatan 5 (Methodist).
Preacher: Rev. A. Broda, of Gelsenkirchen.

St. Peterskyrkan, Upplandsgatan (Methodist).
Preacher:

St. Paulskyrkan (Methodist).
Preacher: Rev. D. G. Whittinghill, D. D., of Rome.

Immanuelskyrkan, Upsala.
Preacher: To be arranged.
A Russian Service.

Afternoon—Three meetings, as follows, will be held in Hagaparken, from three platforms; the singing to be led by a great Swedish choir, with bands. Sacred melodies will also be sung by negro choirs and quartettes, and the meetings will be of the nature of a pageant with brief addresses.

Platform No. 1. Chairman: Rev. H. Danielson, of Stockholm. Speakers: Mrs. Kolator, of Czecho-Slovakia; Rev. Adam Podin, of Esthonia; Rev. J. A. Booker, D. D., of Arkansas.

Platform No. 2. Chairman: Rev. J. A. Swedberg, of Sundsvall. Speakers: Rev. B. Weerts, of Berlin; Rev. K. Vaculik, of Bratislava.

Platform No. 3. Chairman: Rev. John Ongman, of Orebro. Speakers: Rev. G. T. Vickman, Th. D., of Spain; Rev. J. W. Weenick, of Holland.

7 p. m. Divine Worship in the Cathedral, by personal invitation of the Archbishop of Upsala.

Preacher: Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, M. A., D. D., of London, European secretary of the Baptist World Alliance.

Evening—Young people's gathering. Chairman: Prof. P. G. Westin, B. D., B. Th., of Stockholm. Speakers: Rev. David J. Evans, D. D., of Kansas City; Rev. M. E. Aubrey, M. A., of Cambridge.

Monday, July 23

9:30 a. m. Devotional service, to be conducted by the Rev. Thomas Woodhouse, of Brighton.

10 a. m. Address by the congress to his majesty the king of Sweden.

Message of greeting to the president of the United States of America—Warren G. Harding.

President's address.

11:15 a. m. Report on the results of the London Conference of 1920, and proposals for further advance.

(a) "Baptist Relief and Mission Work in Europe; Achievements and Suggestions," Rev. J. H. Rushbrooke, M. A., D. D., Baptist Commissioner for Europe.

IMMANUELSKYRKAN—THE CONGRESS CHURCH

(b) Brief speeches from representatives of particular countries:
(1) "Roumania: Persecution and Consolidation," Rev. C. Adorian, of Bukarest.
(2) "Poland: Difficulties and Encouragements," Rev. K. W. Strzelec, of Lodz.
(3) "Hungary: Some Relief Pictures," Mr. A. Csopjak, of Budapest.

(c) Dr. Everett Gill, representative of the Southern Baptist Convention, to be introduced, and to speak on "Roman Catholicism and—Baptist Propaganda."

(d) Conference.
(A report of the work in each country to be circulated among the delegates prior to the congress.)

Burning Bibles

BY H. STRACHAN

THE following incident occurred some months ago on the occasion of an intinerating evangelistic trip undertaken by the Rev. C. A. Douglass, Presbyterian missionary in Medellin, Colombia, S. A. Accompanied by two native helpers, both of whom were with us at the Antioquia conference and described the scene to us in graphic terms, he arrived at an interior town named Ituango, of a few thousand inhabitants, and about four days distant on mule back from Medellin. But we prefer to let Mr. Douglass tell the story in his own words, In a letter describing the incident he says:

"My object on a recent evangelistic trip was to visit a number of towns that had never been visited by a missionary. About mid-day on Wednesday came the most exciting event of the trip. A man known to us to be a traveling merchant came to Don Vicente and wished to buy a number of our Bibles and portions to sell at the farm houses on the mountains round about. This man took stock of all we had with us, and then closed the bargain accepting the whole quantity at the price named. Soon a boy came running in crying, 'They are burning the Bibles.' I snatched up my kodak and ran out to the plaza which was near, and sure enough, there in front of the church they had a pile of straw burning, and they had all of the Bibles we had just sold to the trader, and they were tearing them in pieces and dropping them on the fire. The priest was standing there directing them, and two policemen to see that not a leaf escaped the fire. When they saw the kodak they seemed pleased, and the priest especially, for he pulled his cassock straight and smoothed it out and posed for the picture.

"After I took the picture I tried to get some leaves of the Bibles half burned but they prevented me. I offered to buy them. Then later I secretly offered a boy twenty centavos if he would get me even one leaf half burned. The ever present small boy can generally move a mountain for that price but he failed this time. The policemen watched until the last bit of paper was reduced to ashes. The crowd under the direction of the cura gave a number of 'Vivas' (hurrahs) for the church and for the virgin, for the pope, and for the nuns and one for the cura. The action of the cura was very much disapproved by many of the conservatives, which is the church party. There is much sentiment in our favor there now and many that openly say they would gladly receive us and listen to our message when we return."

As a direct result of the Bible-burning above described another priest, who was assistant to the one responsible for that act of vandalism, felt his soul rebel against the whole proceeding, and to such an extent did the ferment of protest and indignation work within his heart, that he decided to cast off the ties that bound him to such an intolerant system. Accordingly he paid a visit shortly afterwards to Mr. Barber, the missionary in charge of the work in Medellin, and made known his feelings and intention, seeking at the same time counsel as to his future. Mr. Barber suggested that he break loose immediately, and for the time being go out with another ex-priest on a colportage trip. This he did but did not prove much of a success at the job. This contributed to discourage him a good deal. Then on his return from that trip the archbishop and some of the leading clergy got hold of him and persuaded him to return to the church and ministry. With the feeling of disappointment still upon him he yielded to their insinuations and was immediately sent as priest to another district. The now awakened conscience however, would not thus be stilled, and so after a very short interval he was back again in Medellin, having thrown up his charge for good this time. On our return from Antioquia we met him at the church. As a matter of fact he came to attend our meeting that night, but as he was still dressed in his priestly garb, it was thought better, in order not to attract attention, that he should sit in a side room where he could see and hear everything without himself being seen. After the meeting was over I had a talk with him, when he informed me that it was the Bible-burning incident that had decided him to break loose from Rome. I suggested that he come round next day and have a further talk, which he did, and it was on this occasion that I took a picture of him. As the result of counsel from Brother Barber he discarded his clerical garb, and the following night he sat amongst the audience in ordinary attire. Work has been promised him in an interior town as an accountant, and he has gone to this place, where he soon expects to marry, which would most effectually terminate his connection with the Catholic church. As he is still far from understanding experimentally the truth of the new birth, we commend him to the prayers of our readers that God may indeed bring him not only out of Rome, but into the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

"Faithful Unto Death"

BY REV. A. H. MELLEN

It happened in the year of our Lord 1923. He lived in his own little home in a village in the mountains in southern Mexico, and he was killed by a mob of wild fanatics on the night of January 31. A letter from a missionary in the same district says: "His activities had aroused the ire of the fanatics for some time, and his unwise denunciation of the Romanists for having parades in the streets brought matters to a head." Of course we will not forget another man named Stephen who was also unwise. He took the consequences of his deeds and his words, and now we call him a martyr.

On Jan. 30 a priest came from another place and preached on some saint who would deprive the Protestants of all power to resist if they were attacked. Two nuns had also come to stir up the women. On Wednesday night a secret meeting was held, and at eleven o'clock they surrounded the house of the man who had been selling Bibles. When the doors were forced, this man was very calm, and said to his wife: "If they want to kill me I am ready to die for Christ; I will wait for you in heaven." One of his brave friends came to help him, and was also taken off by the mob. Both men were shot at the edge of the village and the bodies terribly mutilated. Neither the head nor the heart of the colporter could be found by faithful friends who went to bury the remains, and the supposition is that they were carried off as trophies. Such a thing does not seem possible. All the people in the village who are known to be in sympathy with the Bible have fled from the place. Eye witnesses of the incident have found their way to the city of Mexico and have visited the office of the American Bible Society and reported the tragedy. The spirit of the native Christians is very fine.

Organizing the Women

By One Who Has Observed How It Is Done.

ABOUT a year ago there appeared in The Baptist two papers that made many good points concerning women's work in the church, "The Gastronomic Appeal" and "The Other Side of the Church Supper."

Why not go back to basic principles and ask those who are organizing or reinvigorating churches to consider what is best in women's organizations so that things can be started right? Is this not a typical report of the results of an evangelistic effort in a field: "A church of —— members was organized also a Sunday school, a B. Y. P. U. and a Ladies Aid."? The writer who "likes the church supper" speaks of the "Women's Union" which gives a totally different idea of organizing from the type quoted above. The "Ladies Aid" while it may do many other things and do them well is organized and everybody understands it—for the phrase has become technical—mainly to raise money for the local church.

This writer submits the proposition that the organizers are not building for the future. The dollar is too close for proper perspective. Perhaps in the fervor of revival, in the timidity of women not wishing to go counter to a favored leader, or in the ignorance of the women, they let this form of organization be "put over" on them. Sometimes for similar reasons they revert from a good workable organization to the ancient type. "Page the organizers" and tell them to be more far-seeing and for the sake of the church of the future to organize more sensibly.

I would suggest: A woman's union or association can do all of the things that women should do in the church and the name does not mean any one thing. Limiting the organization mainly to raising money for local needs is literally "killing the goose." It is not obeying the injunction "Help those women." Whether they realize it or not the women need an organization that will broaden their lives in every way socially, intellectually, spiritually, and that will help the whole church, for the women are two-thirds of the church.

Honest-to-Goodness Pledges

The first element of growth is to subscribe the church budget in "honest-to-goodness" pledges instead of a partial subscription and "The Ladies Aid will do the rest." Then the women cannot evade the duty and privilege of church support under the plea, often a just plea, that they are doing so much in the women's organization.

This observer also notes that very few of the things done to make money in the church really make it. When an efficiency expert studies a church supper (given to make money) or a bazaar, he finds the balance generally on the wrong side. Suppers and bazaars are like the charity ball. People give a lot of money for some things they want to do, and if after the fiddler is paid, there is anything left, devote it to charity. However, even if affairs given to make money were profitable financially, it would not make them desirable. In fact their lack of financial success may keep them from doing as much harm as they otherwise might. It keeps the promoters humble and prevents too much activity of that kind.

No Occupation

Only on the premise that a woman's time is worth nothing can we prove that these things done to make money are financially profitable. The census-taker reports for women "No occupation" but if they are to be "the housekeepers of the church, the hostesses of its social life and the mothers in Israel watching over and caring for the children and young people" they are going to be busy. The Marys and Marthas of the church can be of great mutual service without presuming to have a monopoly of either character. Promoting the works of the kingdom both at home and abroad will have its deepening effect on character.

Continuous growth ought to mark the societies. There should be an increasing number of women who pray and who will know the needs of their church spiritually as well as gastronomically and who have a personal experience of Jesus in their lives. Chasing the dollar will not contribute to this end. If we must "cobble shoes to pay expenses" let us not cobble them in the church.

In these days of the public school and even colleges and universities so largely attended by women, we do not need to hark back to the methods of pioneer days. Our women are devoting energies to many kinds of organizations outside the church which the right kind of a society within the church might utilize. Instead of encouraging the women to keep on in the church with kinds of work with which they are already surfeited, let them organize in a way that would put them in touch with all the life of the world, so that twenty-five years of it may find them at the end, broadly sympathetic women who care profoundly for the better life in every way of all God's creatures. In this caring, their own lives will have unconsciously grown till they are women who are better educated, more loyal to Christ and his kingdom, who have learned to abide in him and so we may look, and not in vain to them for fruitbearing.

Their interests are as wide as the world and need be none the less devoted to every interest of the local church. Large churches are apt to work out an emancipation of their own along these lines, but I plead for the women of the small church or the country church who are kept, or keep themselves, in this treadmill of the "Aid" idea.

There are many wealthy farming communities with their churches in the midst. When the conference or association meets with them, do the women have a chance to hear the fine preachers, the inspirational addresses of specialists in Christian work who have come to talk to them? No indeed! they are toiling over big meals and hear never a word, not even the resolution of thanks the courtesy committee offers for their efforts. The church of the future will amount to more if some of the abundance instead of being saved "to buy more land to raise more corn, to feed more hogs, to buy more land, etc." around the circle, were expended on hiring help enough to let those women "listen in" or later, when inexperience and timidity have worn off, to speak up and take part in the plans and prayers, the songs and discussions.

To learn to give, sacrificially if need be, but at least proportionately, is one of the most necessary, and, under present conditions of organizing, often the most difficult of graces to obtain. From early life, when a child who is given a nickel for Sunday school withholds it entirely or puts in a penny and buys four cents worth of candy or gum, to later life when clothes and amusements and motor cars take the bulk of our money and the women give suppers for the church part, we need constant training in a sense of values and obligations.

How We Organize

To show how we organize. I take at random, the list of women's organizations in thirty-four churches of one of our newer states. There are seventeen churches having both a mission circle and an "Aid." Three churches have a mission circle and no other organization, thirteen (unlucky number) have an "Aid" and nothing else and one church has three "Aid" societies. If a church, a Sunday school, a B. Y. P. U. and an "Aid" are the four essentials in forming a new Baptist church, why not be logical and reorganize clear to the top in the same way? Instead of conferences for prayer and discussion of mission problems, have round-tables at the association for the best ways of holding church suppers and having an honest surplus of profit, exchanging of cake receipts and special lessons in the latest hits for bazaars. Instead of talking about being "fishers of men" have solemn conferences on fishponds, grab bags and quilt lotteries. Women spend a year in hard work to make up the balance of the coal bill. They receive the hearty laudations of the well-to-do church official who should have gone down in his pocket and paid that balance himself. Then, if they should go to the association or convention, which seldom happens, they do not hear a word about their specialties but only a great deal about how to carry the gospel to the ends of the world and they are not interested. Who could expect it with their training? The New World Movement must have keen interest and knowledge back of it, as well as money, to make it an onward sweeping movement.

What Shall It Be?

What shall it be then, ye brethren who organize? Shall we have women's organizations that cover a broad range instead of a narrow one? That link us not only to our local church but to our community, our town, our state, our country, our world for which God gave his only begotten, that none should perish but have everlasting life?

As part of the celebration of Mother's Day on Sunday, May 13, plans will be launched for the erection at Washington D. C. of a "memorial monument to our mothers" according to a bulletin issued by the Federal Council of Churches.

Religious Education

Life Service

By Victor N. Witter

Iowa State Director of Religious Education

Having been asked to write something pertaining to the Life Service League, I shall confine myself to its practical aspects.

First of all, let us think of what the Iowa Baptist Life Service League should signify. In the very name, we discover its distinctive feature, "life service." This is the one big thing. It is the chief corner-stone in the foundation of this splendid organization. It should be the controlling motive in all its activities. There is the word "league." What is its meaning? According to Webster, it is "a union or alliance of individuals, parties or states, voluntarily maintained, for mutual support in the attainment of a common end." Hence, we have commercial leagues, political leagues, the league of nations, etc. If the above definition be correct, how about the Life Service League? It means that here is a group of young people, each of whom has said, "Life service is to be the controlling factor in my life." That they might be of mutual help to one another in realizing this high ideal they have thus banded themselves together in this organization.

The majority of people have become accustomed to think of life service as pertaining to some definite Christian work, such as a missionary or minister. Such as these are looked upon as sacred callings as contrasted with the so-called secular pursuits. Individuals following the former are supposed to be more consecrated and attain to a higher standard of Christian perfection. Is there not a danger in making too great a distinction? Just where does the secular leave off and the sacred begin?

In our complex civilization with its varied activities, is there not a need of consecration and life service all along the line? In other words, a recognition and application of the stewardship principle in every profession and avocation. For example, where is there a greater need and a larger opportunity for life service than in our public schools? Who can do more to mould the Christian character of those alert boys and girls than the teacher who stands before them five days each week? Go to our colleges and universities and study there the young life with all its needs and possibilities, and are we not led to exclaim, "Who is equal unto these things?" And so we might go on, speaking of the physician and surgeon to whom people entrust their lives; the business man, the lawyer, or the mother in the home. In any and all of these, life service should be the impelling motive, until everywhere we would have physicians practicing medicine, business men making money, women teaching school, and mothers rearing their children, and all to the glory of God and the building of the kingdom of our Christ.

Never was there a time when the demand was so great for Christian work, both at home and abroad, as that in which we live. The doors of opportunity are flung wide open. The world is standing with outstretched arms to receive Christian teaching and leadership. In answer to this universal challenge, there is coming forward, from the ranks of youth, a host of volunteers, young men and young women who are willing to give their lives in definite Christian service. I ask, however, is this all that is necessary to supply the great need in this strategic period of the world's history? No! There must of necessity, be a like consecration on the part of those who do not feel drawn to do definite Christian work. We cannot all be ministers and missionaries. We can all be linked together in this great kingdom building enterprise. Let me illustrate it in this way: Two brothers were reared in the same home; they slept in the same bed, ate at the same table, attended the same school. Almost from childhood, one of them felt a drawing toward the foreign mission field; and as the years went by, this became a deep-seated conviction. The other boy, though equally devoted, felt no such tugging at his heart strings. Finally it was decided that each should make his contribution in the following manner: The one to go as a foreign missionary, the other to go into business; however, with this definite understanding, it was to be a partnership affair. The one who remained at home was to devote his life to financing the work of the one who went abroad.

This is the principle on which the kingdom must be built. While there are some who are to do definite, specific Christian work; yet, there must be linked up with them, that larger group, equally consecrated, and to whom they can look for support. It is a cooperative program; and not until every factor in that program has its proper place can we hope to win. "For we are laborers together with God." (I Cor. 3:9.)

International Sunday School Lesson for May 20

ELIJAH, THE BRAVE REFORMER
Lesson: I Kings 18:30-39. Golden Text: Josh. 24:15

Introductory

The scene of the lesson text is Mount Carmel. Elijah was a one-purpose man: He would turn Israel from the worship of Baalim to the worship of the one true God. He was one of the first and greatest of prophets of the early monarchy. He has been styled the Militant Prophet and the Prophet of Fire. Chapters in both books of the Kings are records of the life and work of Elijah. These must be read to get the most good of the lesson text.

The Lesson

"Is it thou, thou troubler of Israel?" These were Ahab's words of greeting for Elijah, when he appeared before the king at the command of the Lord. "Go, shew thyself unto Ahab; and I will send rain upon the earth." But Elijah, the self-made and God-made man, quailed before no earthly king. He neatly returned the innuendo, saying: "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed the Baalim." Then he demanded that all of Israel and the prophets of Baal and the prophets of the Asherah be summoned, and a test be made by building two altars and laying upon them bullocks and each calling upon his God to supply the fire. "And the God that answereth by fire, let him be God," said Elijah to the assembled multitude. The people agreed: "It is well spoken." The prophets of Baal leaped about their altar, begging Baal to hear and answer them, they cut themselves with knives until the blood gushed out, but no fire came beneath their altar. Then Elijah called to the people to come near. He built an altar in the name of Jehovah, made a trench about the altar, and three times had water poured upon the flesh of the burnt offering and the wood. Then he filled the trench with water. Truly he would have the people know there was no chicanery here. Then he called upon Jehovah and "fire fell, and consumed the burnt offering, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench." The people were convinced. They fell on their faces and said, "Jehovah, he is God!"

Leading Thoughts

1. A man who knows God is never afraid of failure. 2. It takes the Elijah spirit and the Elijah faith to turn people from their false gods to the living God. 3. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

The United Baptist Church of Somersworth, N. H., has organized a week-day school of religious education which is to meet each Friday until the beginning of the summer vacation. Classes are arranged for beginners, primary children, juniors and intermediates. Trained teachers have volunteered to take charge of the classes.

Topic for May 20

STEWARDSHIP OF SUPPLICATION

John 14:1-15; Luke 18:1-14.

Materials

Fosdick, "The Meaning of Prayer," price $1.25. "The Stewardship of Prayer," by F. E. Taylor. This leaflet may be secured free from the General Board of Promotion, 276 Fifth Ave., New York City; 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.; 313 West Third St., Los Angeles, Calif.

We have heard of the stewardship of money, of time and of life, but is there a stewardship of prayer? It is easy to believe in the necessity of a stewardship of money, that every Christian should use his money as a sacred trust. We readily see the necessity of organizing our time so that a reasonable part of it shall be spent in the service of the kingdom, and certainly all life should be held as a sacred trust to be used in a way to glorify God. But is it true that prayer is something which God expects us to use not only for communion and the development of our own spiritual lives but also as a force for advancing the kingdom of God? In other words, are we responsible for the use we make of prayer—just as responsible as we are for the way in which we use our time and our money? There are many indications in the word of God that this is true and that there is a stewardship of prayer.

"O that Ishmael might live before Thee"

The Old Testament leaders were all men and women of prayer and any one who studies the history of the people of God must be convinced that prayer had a large place in the development of God's plans for his children. From the first recorded prayer in the Old Testament, "O that Ishmael might live before Thee," to the close of the New Testament with the prayer, "Come, Lord Jesus," the book is filled with illustrations of the use of prayer in the economy of God. Abraham's pleading for the cities of the plain was in reality a passionate prayer for the salvation of his own relatives. Jacob's night of prayer which resulted in his becoming Israel, a prince with God, meant the change in a life that affected the history of the people of God. Elijah prays and the heavens become as brass overhead and the land suffers a drought that causes the king to realize the power of Jehovah, the God of Israel. Elijah faces the heathen hordes on Carmel and by prayer wins the victory over the priests of Baal and reestablishes faith in the hearts of a discouraged people. Daniel, a captive in a heathen land, refuses to be intimidated by the king and kneels in prayer before his God and forever is an example to young men to encourage them to remain true to their religious convictions when surrounded by the forces of evil.

Jesus Prayed

Our Saviour's life was a life of prayer and his teaching on the subject of prayer occupies a large place in the gospels.

All of the great events in Jesus' life were preceded and many of them followed by prayer. We read that at his baptism he was praying. Before choosing the twelve he spent a whole night in prayer and then delivered the wonderful Sermon on the Mount. After his rejection by the favored cities, after he healed a leper, after feeding the 5,000 before leaving the disciples, before the crucifixion, and during the crucifixion Jesus prayed. And when the end came and he was about to leave his disciples he led them out until they were over against Bethany and lifted up his hands and blessed them. "And it came to pass, while he blessed them, he was parted from them and was carried up into heaven." Does not this record of the prayer life of our Lord suggest a stewardship of prayer? If the Son of God found it necessary to seek his Father's counsel in order that his life might succeed in the plan which God had for him, is it not necessary that we should frequently come before our Father lest we fail in the fulfilment of his will? Jesus not only lived a life of prayer but he urged this life upon his disciples. Some one has said that Jesus never taught his disciples to preach but he did teach them to pray. We know that they asked him to teach them how to pray and that he gave them a prayer that comprehends all the needs of the human life individually and collectively, and whatever else they failed to learn they certainly did not fail to learn the value of prayer. As soon as he had ascended they gathered in the little upper room in Jerusalem and began their ministry by praying for wisdom in the selection of an apostle to take the place of the one who had betrayed his Lord.

C. WALLACE PETTY

FRANCIS C. STIFLER

We are pleased to announce that we have secured Rev. C. W. Petty, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Pittsburgh, Pa., and Rev. F. C. Stifler, pastor of the Wilmette, Ill., Church as speakers for the young people's session of the Northern Baptist Convention. Mr. Stifler will speak on "Youth's Obligation;" Mr. Petty on "Youth's Response."

"Behold I see the heavens opened."

Then follows the history recorded in the book of Acts, a book which might just as well be called the book of the Prayer Life of the Apostolic Church, for it is full of stories of the way in which prayer was used to advance the kingdom of God. After the new apostle had been chosen we read that they waited ten days before the Lord and then came the marvelous outpouring of the Spirit of God followed by the conversion of 3,000 souls under the preaching of Peter. Peter and John go to the temple at the hour of prayer and in the name of Jesus heal a cripple, and these apostles now realize that the power of God is with them as the Master had promised. When they are persecuted they pray and another outpouring of the Spirit of God is vouchsafed and they proclaim the gospel in all boldness. When the church begins to expand its work deacons are chosen in order that the apostles may give all of their time to prayer and the ministry of the word. Stephen, the first martyr, yields up his life praying for his murderers. The Spirit of God is poured out on the new church at Samaria in answer to the prayer of Peter and John. Saul of Tarsus is sent to Damascus to persecute the Christians of that city and it is no stretch of imagination to see the believers in Jerusalem and the handful of believers in Damascus waiting on God and pleading that in some way this ter-

"This Modern Generation Has No Manners"

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

YOU have said it! But the delicious part of it is that the best of us would have been unspeakably ill-behaved in the eyes of our grandmothers, judging by the rules laid down in a certain little book of etiquette discussed by Elizabeth A. Drew in the April number of the Atlantic Monthly, from which we quote the following:

Very different in spirit is a small book picked up for twopence a few weeks ago in the market of an English provincial town. "Instructions in Etiquette for the Use of All" is its title; published in 1847 for John Butcher, author of the "Scriptural Pronouncing Dictionary." The book arose from questions asked by the pupils of the authoress at a "considerable school," where she was engaged to give instruction in propriety of behavior; and she hopes that, after a perusal of it, no persons will be at a loss how to conduct themselves in all circumstances.

There is nothing trivial or superficial about its treatment of social problems. The "How to be a Perfect Gentleman" of today is merely practical:

"Do not mop the face with the serviette, but take it between the finger and thumb of both hands, and draw it lightly across the mouth. Should the mouth be too full for speech, lay the finger on the lip and shake the head slowly—" and so on. But here the niceties of table-manners are shown in their proper relation to the moral conduct of life.

"Qt. If at dinner I am asked what part of a bird or joint I prefer, is it polite to make choice of any part which is esteemed a delicacy?

Ans. Young persons are, in general, from bashfulness or timidity, too apt to use that very common but improper phrase, "Any part will do, sir," or "I have no choice, madam"; when, in fact, they have a preference. From false delicacy, or the ridiculous fear of being thought an epicure, they thus violate truth, one of the brightest virtues of the human soul. . . . It is not improper, therefore, to make a choice, though you ought on no account frequently to select the choicest pieces."

The issue in the question of the propriety of shaking hands with gloves on is quite clear:

"Ladies are allowed to keep on their gloves, but I should not advise them to avail themselves of the privilege; for friendship is so sacred, that not even the substance of a glove should interpose between the hands of those who are united by its influence."

One sees the teasing thoughts rising in the young mind that yearns to act with perfect propriety.

"Qt. What movement should be made by a lady who meets a person to whom great respect is due: as, for instance, a bishop?

"Ans. If she have only to make him a passing salute, it must be by an elegant bend of the body, rather low, and with a serious countenance, and, in order to make her respect more obvious, she may, if intimate, kiss her hand at the same time. To other gentlemen it is seldom, if ever, proper to kiss the hand. To an intimate friend, you may wave your hand, but should not kiss it, as a young gentleman might possibly put an improper construction upon your politeness. . . . This mode of salutation is never allowable to a gentleman who is not at once much your elder and your very particular friend."

Naturally, the subject of the proper behavior toward young gentlemen is a fruitful one. It is the only topic with which the talented authoress finds any difficulty. Even she, however, has to confess that no rules of decorum avail with the classes she defines as "coxcombs" and "scoundrels": "for a coxcomb is too full of himself to observe the rules of etiquette, and a scoundrel will break through every rule, to accomplish his design." Safety first is the motto in all affairs of this kind. Never stop and speak to any one in the street (whether you know him or not). Apart from the risk of finding yourself (helpless) in conversation with a coxcomb or a scoundrel, it is highly improper "for you attract the attention of all who pass, and expose yourself to their unfavorable remarks, and perhaps even incur their censure. It must always be highly indecorous to stand and hold a conversation in public."

As to the question whether it is permissible to cross the street to speak to a friend on the other side, a point may be stretched in the case of a lady, but it is never consistent with decorum for a lady to do it to a gentleman whose age does not greatly exceed her own.

Here an inexperienced miss inquires innocently:

"If, in a place of worship, I should observe a friend whom I have not seen for a long time, would it be proper to move to him?"

And the answer comes with merited severity:

"I should consider it highly improper to greet a person in church; yet, should it be an intimate friend, whom you have not seen for some time, it may be allowable to greet him at the door, but not with vivacity."

As a preventive measure to any such problem arising, it is better to take the authoress's own advice.

"For ladies, when attending divine service, I approve those large poke bonnets, inasmuch as they conceal the face, and by confining the view, prevent that distraction of mind which is so unfavorable to the proper performance of religious duties."

In the street or in the drawing-room, the young lady's chief difficulty in deportment, like that of the amateur actress, seems to be the question of what to do with her hands. She keeps coming back to it. First of all, it is when walking that she feels puzzled.

"Qt. How should the arms be placed when walking in the street?

"Ans. Let them hang gracefully by the side, but not dangling. A lady may place one arm across the waist, the hand being open to receive the other arm if necessary. But the propriety of the position much depends upon the dress. If a scarf is worn, let the end of it flow gently over the arm that is raised."

But that does not go far enough, and the next stumblingblock is:

"Qt. In what position should I hold my hands when in company?

"Ans. There are several ways which are equally graceful. You may place both arms across the waist, or, one arm being in that position, the other may hang down easily by the side, or you may place one hand within the other, suffering both to rest upon the lap."

But the question whether you shall let your right arm know what your left arm doeth, or not, is not all. These elementary instructions are only the preparation for the young lady's most suitable social role. In the drawing-room, no less than in church or when bowing to a bishop, vivacity is hardly in place, and the first essential lesson which must be mastered is how to listen.

"To do this with an appearance of unwearied attention, and as far as possible with an expression of interested feeling on the countenance, is a species of amiable politeness to which all are susceptible. It is peculiarly soothing to men of eminent attainments, and is a kind of delicate deference which the young are bound to pay to their superiors in age."

There is, however, a right and a wrong way to do it, and the demeanor of the perfect listener is by no means an easy feat to master. It must need time and practice to bring it to perfection.

"Qt. If in company, a person to whom I owe great deference, accost me, in what position would it be the most graceful, and at the same time the most respectful, to stand?

"Ans. Hold your body perfectly upright, but not stiff. Turn a little to the right or left, with the face completely toward him, looking a little over one shoulder, the arms across the waist, the upper hand open, or the hands clasped and hanging down in front: one foot advanced a little. If the person who speaks is giving directions, incline the body and head gracefully forward. Should the individual present anything, keep the body bent until you have received it, and when you leave him, slide smoothly away, sinking at the same time."

How, one wonders, did the pupils at the considerable school go through the drill necessary to perfect themselves in these evolutions? Perhaps the instructress in decorum impersonated the parts in turn. One day, she would be a bishop walking in the street, while rows of elegantly bended bodies and serious countenances saluted her, and a few intimates combined this with kissing their hands. On another day, she would be a friend, greeted without vivacity at the church-door. Pokebonneted, with arms not dangling, and scarf flowing with perfect propriety, she would "move toward" a relation, or a person sitting in a window, or she would personify an elder person whose seat had been taken, or an eminent character being passed on the stairs, while her young charges demeaned themselves duly before her, and slid and sank, and pointed their toes to the ground.

Did she ever represent a servant being commanded with ease, mildness, and dignity (or without), or (we say it with bated breath) did she ever go so far as to impersonate a coxcomb or a scoundrel—or a gentleman on the other side of the street? We shall never know! Enough that she trained her pupils so excellently in listening that they wished to hear her afterward in print; that John Butcher apparently made enough out of the "Scriptural Pronouncing Dictionary" to stand the expenses of printing; that her book went into at least three editions; and that a copy of the third fell to a twopenny stall in Newark market, where it found a modern listener who had no need at all to simulate unwearied attention, or an expression of interested feeling on her countenance!—From "The Behaviourism of Our Grandmothers," in the Atlantic Monthly.

More Poems

The following poem came from Helen M. Goodwin of Northwood, N. H., before she read in our columns that we were going to keep our "old" name; it is such a sensible little set of verses that surely you will all enjoy reading it:

Our Name

WHAT'S in a name?
I don't see,
The Young Reserves
Is good enough for me.

The more you suggest
The more I'm impressed
That our present name
Beats all the rest.

I've learned a lesson
Good and true;
Contentment brings happiness
Through and through.

Now fuss no more
About a name;
The one we have
Will bring us fame.

Evelyn Williamson, of Porterville, Calif., has sent in a Dollar Hill poem, but unfortunately it reached the Chimney Corner ten days after the other verses had been judged and sent to press. But you will want to read it, I know:

Our Climb

WE'RE climbing up on Dollar Hill,
Our steeds are fresh and strong,
For they have only started,
And they travel right along.

The hill is very steep, you see,
But we will climb on up,
For there are springs in crevices
Where we will stop to sup.

We get a little weary,
Climbing up that winding road,
But we never stop to grumble
For we'll soon reach our abode.

We are getting nearer, nearer,
To the blissful mountain air,
Come on, we're getting closer,
And then, Presto! We are there.

Evelyn is ten years old, and she writes how very, very sorry she is to be so late sending in her verses; she does hope she is not too late. She is going to be so disappointed at learning the facts in the case that I am wondering if some of you would not like to write her that you liked her poem! Her street address in Porterville is 518 Henrahan Avenue.

Some Characters from Shakespeare

WHEN I was nine years old somebody gave me a copy of "Lamb's Tales of Shakespeare" and from it I learned the stories of Shakespeare's plays long before I was old enough to read the plays themselves. Perhaps you own a copy of "Lamb's Tales" also, and will enjoy picking out these puzzles the answers of which are the best-known characters in his principal plays. The correct answers will be given next week:

1. My first is a good meat, with eggs, a good dish;
   My second's allow, or permit, if you wish.
2. My first is so modest and bashful, withal;
   My second's a tuft of your hair, that is all.
3. My first is the city of Italy's pride;
   My second's a vowel, which you mustn't elide.
4. My first's a girl's name, to your wits put a file;
   My second and third describe her the while,
   If she is well bred—understand—and has style.
5. A name of one syllable here you will see,
   A villainous smile, devoid of all glee.
6. My first you take as a witness before heaven;
   My second some take when an inch they are given;
   My third is a vowel, just one out of seven.
7. It is said that George Washington, even in fun,
   Never told at all, in his life, my one;
   My two you will find by the sea, I am sure;
   My third you will do, be your life e'er so pure.
8. My first is the name of metals combined
   With some other substance, just as they're mined.
   My second's the name of that part of the world
   Which rose solid and firm when in space it was hurled;
   My third is a vowel which endeth this,
   And I'm very sure you'll none of it miss.
9. My first, you see, is the time of the year
   When all the leaves and the birds disappear;
   My second's a metaphor applied to bread,
   Because it supports one's life, it is said.

rible persecutor may be stopped. Midway between those places God speaks, Saul is converted and the persecutor becomes the preacher and the leader of the early church. Peter, a genuine believer in the gospel for the Jews only, is in prayer on a house-top—Cornelius, a Roman centurion, is in prayer on a house-top. God reveals to Peter in a vision the fact that the Gentiles are not common and unclean but worthy of the gospel and to Cornelius comes the word to send for Peter. They come together and the door of the Gentile world is flung wide open and the gospel has now an opportunity to reach all people. In prayer Peter raises Dorcas from the dead. In prayer the church at Antioch receives its command to release Saul and Barnabas to begin the program of foreign missions. While the church waits in prayer Peter is released from prison by an angel. When Paul and Silas are in prison they organize a prayer meeting which results in their freedom and the conversion of the jailer. Indeed the whole book is filled with the story of the prayers of the Christians of those early days. Nearly every epistle opens and closes with prayer and the Bible closes with the petition, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."—"The Stewardship of Prayer," Taylor.

Our Own Folks

"We Can—We Will"

For many years the membership of the First Church, Oak Park, Illinois, felt the need of a new church home. These hopes were crystallized when the organization voted to extend a call to Dr. Carl D. Case, Jan. 13, 1918, even though his letter previously addressed to the committee almost stipulated a church plant as complete as any in Oak Park as a condition of his coming.

Upon his arrival, March 1, 1918, a site committee went to work and soon recommended the property at the northwest corner of Oak Park Avenue and Ontario Street through to Grove Avenue, the finest site for a public building in Oak Park. On May 15 of that year, by unanimous vote, the church authorized the purchase, and the same date the new church committee was created and fifteen members elected.

As dinner guests of the new church committee, on May 22, 1918, the members of the church pledged sufficient funds for the purchase of the aforesaid property. Before the month was out, the entire purchase price was over-subscribed.

Early in 1919, a sub-committee of the new church committee started work on sketches and plans of an adequate church plant, and in September, 1919, Mr. N. Max Dunning was selected as architect and E. E. Roberts, associate architect. In the fall of the same year another subcommittee was selected to plan the campaign to secure pledges to the building fund. The objective set was $250,000 with the slogan, "We Can—We Will."

The pastor, Dr. Case, opened the drive for building funds with his Sunday morning sermon on Jan. 11, 1920. Dr. F. H. Divine, edifice secretary of the Home Mission Society, assisted the new church committee from Jan. 12 to Jan. 18, when over $300,000 had been subscribed by the church and congregation, the entire amount to be paid prior to February 1, 1925.

The church by vote in November, 1920, instructed the new church committee to proceed at once to let contracts for the erection of the church auditorium and tower on the east end of the property. The frame buildings were moved to the Grove Avenue frontage to be temporarily used as a church house. Wells Brothers Construction Company agreed to build for the committee without profit and the foundations were put down in December, 1920. Since that time, building operations have proceeded as economically as possible while maintaining fair labor conditions.

The Building.

The church building is designed in Gothic and is constructed of a warm-colored brick, with all trimmings and tracery of Bedford stone. It is of fireproof construction, wood being used only in connection with the enclosure of the trusses, and for doors, casings and certain interior embellishments. The windows are all of leaded glass set directly in stone tracery.

The junction between the church and the future church house is effected by means of the large square Gothic tower. The tower contains the principal stairway and an elevator, temporarily walled in, both of which will be used in common by the church house and the church. This main or chimes tower is balanced at the southeast corner of the church by an octagonal cut-stone lantern tower, which is lighted by sixteen 259-watt flood lights which at night bring out the beautiful tracery, making it a distinguishing feature of the building. At the corner of the lot below is a Bedford stone Scripture frame, the light of which is automatically regulated.

The main entrance on Ontario street is into a commodious concourse, beyond which is a large assembly room. The auditorium is reached by stairs in each corner of the building. The auditorium floor seats 630, the balcony 310 and the choir loft 60, making a total seating capacity of 1,000.

The main architectural feature of the front of the auditorium is the choir vault directly back of the platform and pulpit.

The baptistry is treated as an architectural feature at the left of the main choir vault, the baptistry front being carved in Bedford stone and the baptistry tank and its steps and approaches being floored in a colored mosaic. Adequate dressing rooms are provided.

The trusses and roof members are of steel, but are enclosed in oak of massive proportions. The floor is carpeted and the pews are cushioned. The pulpit furniture is chaste and elegant.

Throughout the thought has been to make the interior a place of restfulness and repose, and one that at the same time measures up to the best standards of architectural design.

Musical Equipment.

The belfry of the main tower has been equipped with a set of Deagan tubular chimes. On the tower wall there is a memorial tablet which reads:

The Chimes in This Tower
Are Dedicated to the Memory of George H. Shorney
Modest in Manner
Unselfish in Service
Loyal to Christ and the Church
1864 A. D. 1919

The chimes are the gift of Mr. Shorney's family. Mr. Shorney was a member of this church and had its welfare ever in mind. He was one of the pioneers in the effort to obtain a new church building.

The set of chimes consists of ten tubes made of bell metal weighing over 5,000 pounds. These tubes are hung from a frame-work called the chime rack and are tuned to represent the musical tones F, G, A, B flat, C, D, E flat, E, F and G. Many tunes can be played after they have been arranged to the key represented in these tones. The chimes are operated from a keyboard placed beside the console of the organ. Electric energy for operating the chime action is supplied by a motor-generator. When the weather conditions are favorable the chimes can be heard a distance of two miles.

The contract for a large four-manual organ was awarded to the Skinner Organ Company of Boston. The organ has seven borrowed stops, in addition to forty-three complete sets of pipes. The total number of pipes, bars and tubes is 2,562. There are also thirty couplers and thirty-nine combination pistons.

Five years ago the entire assets of the church were less than $28,000. The present investment is over $450,000 with only a comparatively small balance still to be covered by pledges secured in dedication week. Eventually, with the erection of the second unit, the total investment will amount approximately to $800,000. The success of the five years has been, however, more than a great financial undertaking. Out of the faith in God and supreme consecration of the members came a new devotion to the spiritual interests of the church. Six hundred new members have been received. Missionary contributions have been trebled. Church attendance has been quadrupled.

Twin Cities Letter

By Don Mac

That looks very familiar to me. I had the honor of starting that letter in the last century in writing from these growing towns to the old, and to me always dear, Standard. I have been absent for thirty-two years in a ministry extending from New York to the Middle West. I have been carefully studying the Baptist situation in these Twin Cities for about six months. I am reporting only on part of what should be covered in a comprehensive survey of the Baptist situation. It would make too long a letter to deal with all at this time.

Beginning in the State Capital

I find the Baptist situation in the most promising and prosperous condition of which I have had knowledge. I had the pleasure of speaking to the First Church Doctor Earl, minister, on Wednesday night to a room crowded full of eager listeners. The ministry, which this church with its energetic and capable pastor is rendering, is a superb one. Any one who knows the situation of the urch knows that it is right in the heart the down-town region. Most churches ve run away from such places in most our cities. This church is holding on d rendering what to me seems to be e finest ministry of its great and norable history. I certainly never w in that church a body of such eager, rnest men and women who seem to so thoroughly in sympathy with the al business for which the church should ist. Its pastor, Doctor Earl, I have me to regard as one of our outstand- Baptist ministers. He has recently tained a new vision of the whole gos- l of Jesus Christ in a penetrating and narkable manner. His sermon, which u recently published, is eliciting wide nark and commendation. Doctor rl has himself been stirred by the ine revelation of the gospel, beginning th the very heart of the Cross which interprets more vividly and sincerely, an I have ever heard from anybody.

I have also been delighted with the ogress being made by the Woodland rk Church under the ministry of Dr. hn G. Briggs. The church has a good ilding in a fine part of St. Paul and doing a thorough-going piece of work. I have also been greatly impressed by genial St. Paul Union secretary, v. Mr. Valiant, who is wisely guiding interest of our denomination in that ich has been regarded as a hard field. Rev. Mr. Velte is also attacking with at intelligence and energy the prob- n of the Midway district with the ex- ted coming of the great Ford plant. e denomination should address itself gressively toward getting this expect- inrush of employes in that vicinity.

Minneapolis

Preaching every Sunday myself I have yet seen some of the Minneapolis urches, but I have been delighted with progress being made in the stable urth Church under its minister, Doc- Loucks. Fourth Church has a splen- building and expects to add a social l which will give as fine a plant as y be found in any of our cities.

The University Church, under the dership of Dr. Norman B. Hender- , has accomplished marvels. It is ng a piece of work than which I know none better in a university town. ctor Henderson has put his very life od into the enterprise and is forced a bit of a rest just now but when the at task is completed he will have a ll-equipped plant for the pressing rk in the vicinity of the University of nnesota.

The First Church recently dedicated great hall called Jackson in honor ne of its most generous contributors. is has cost in the neighborhood of 0,000 and is one of the finest buildings its purposes in our denomination. e church is attacking a complete ovation and enlargement of its build- which has served it for a great many rs. Everybody recognizes hereabouts t the First Church is doing a superb ce of aggressive evangelical work.

Dots

The writer hereof has been, since the t of November, 1922, acting pastor of Temple Church. His ministry with vill close with May. The church has ended a call to Rev. R. Wilbur Bab- k of the First Church, Moline, Ill. Babcock has accepted the earnest , and will probably be on the field by first of June. There is a body of elligent, harmonious people in this church and I predict for it, under the energetic leadership of Mr. Babcock, the career of its life.

The Judson Memorial Church is still seeking a suitable minister and finds the task a hard one. This is one of the youngest, most aggressive and prosperous of the Minneapolis churches. It seeks, demands and actually needs to keep up the traditions its two former pastors have accomplished—a strong man of God. It is located in a splendid field.

It is a bit late, but Minneapolis greatly enjoyed the visit and address of Dr. Frederick E. Taylor, president of the Northern Baptist Convention.

The executive secretary of the Minneapolis Union, Rev. Jesse J. Runyan, is planning for aggressive enlargements in the work in this progressive city. To qualify himself he recently made a visit to Chicago and Detroit where the Baptists are doing a superb piece of work. Mr. Runyan is a genial and delightful friend and successful executive. He is aided greatly by a very competent wife, for many years a dean of one of the colleges at Granville, Ohio.

The Central Church of Hartford

By Horace B. Sloat

In the year 1705, the first Baptist church in Connecticut was organized in Groton, and is known today as the Old Mystic or Groton First Church. The progress of Baptist affairs in the state to date presents a most fascinating story replete with incidents of heroic sacrifice, devotion and marked achievement. The formation of the Central Baptist Church, Hartford, may properly be regarded as one of the crowning achievements of the present generation in the state. It bears the earmarks of statesmanship and is significant in its prophetic implications.

In 1789 there was no Baptist church in Hartford—today there are ten—Asylum Avenue, Blue Hills, Central, Memorial, Mt. Calvary, Mt. Olive, Olivet, Shiloh, Swedish and Union, with an enrolment of 5,372.

One hundred and thirty-four years ago there were Baptists living in Hartford, one of whom was John Bolles, who used to walk to Suffield, a distance of eighteen miles, to attend church on Sundays. The historian tells us that Hartford Baptists "held meetings in the court house and in private houses, and on the fifth of August, 1789, the first immersion was administered" in the center that was destined to become the capital of the state. The first regular meeting of the Baptist congregation was held October 18, in the house of John Bolles. On March 23, 1790, nine women and seven men were formally recognized as the First Baptist Church of Hartford. At this time Hartford had a population of 3,500.

As the population grew it was discovered that a church was needed in the southern part of the city. A committee from the First Church secured Franklin Hall and the first meeting was held on the second Sunday in May, 1834. The South Baptist Church was formally organized Oct. 24, 1834, with fifty-five constituent members.

The First and South Baptist churches have served their constituencies 133 and eighty-nine years respectively. In the early days of the First Church, Rev. John Winchell and Rev. Adam Hamilton were acting pastors. Through the years the church has been served by the following regular pastors: Rev. Stephen S. Nelson, Rev. Henry Grew, Rev. Elisha Cushman, Rev. Cyrus P. Grosvenor, (Rev. John E. Weston supplied one year), Rev. Dr. Barnas Sears, Dr. Gustavus F. Davis, Dr. Henry Jackson, (before the coming of Dr. Jackson, Rev. William Bentley was interim supply), Rev. Jeremiah S. Eaton, Dr. Robert Turnbull, Dr. Adoniram Judson Sage, Rev. Lester L. Potter, Rev. John S. James, Rev. Harold Pattison and the Rev. Herbert Judson White, the fourteenth and present pastor.

In the South Baptist Church, the following men have served as pastors: Rev. Henry Stanwood, Rev. Robert Turnbull, Rev. Edmund Turney, Rev. Robert R. Raymond, Rev. J. R. Stone, Dr. J. M. Murdock, Rev. Cephas B. Crane, Rev. H. O. Pentecost, Rev. W. W. Everts, Jr., Rev. Kittredge Wheeler, Rev. Frank Dixon, Rev. Wm. H. Main, Rev. Edwin S. Holloway and Rev. John Newton Lackey, the fourteenth and present pastor.

These two churches grew with the growth of the city. Both had strong and well-manned organizations and when separate institutions occupied large places in the religious life and work of the city and denomination. United in the Central Church, the new organization will take a still more prominent part in all lines of religious work—city, state and national.

Union of Two Churches

Both had been carrying on their work within a few blocks of each other on the main street of the city, heroically meeting the problems of the down-town situation. The inadequacy of equipment for meeting the modern needs of the work was a somewhat serious handicap in the case of each church. Both churches were alive to the fact and were casting about in their minds as to what should be done in the interests of a larger and more efficient ministry, when, a few months ago, the idea of uniting the two churches emerged. The idea caught the imagination of the leaders in these churches, resulting in several meetings in which committees were appointed in both churches to study the whole question with a view to ascertaining the steps necessary to consummate the union. Developments have been rapid. The various committees, looking after preliminaries, have worked with dispatch and utmost concord.

On March 19, the three organizations, known as the Deacons of the Baptist Church of Hartford, Inc., the First Baptist Church of Hartford and the South Baptist Church of Hartford, Inc., held separate meetings and each voted to merge into and to transfer its funds to the new organizations. In each organization, the vote to merge was unanimous. The new church will have a membership of more than 1,600.

Drs. White and Lackey, who led so successfully their respective churches before the merger, are retained in a co-pastorship, greatly to the delight of the new church and all those interested in larger things for the kingdom.

Recently the Central Church, in one evening, elected its entire list of officers and committees to care for the affairs of the new church. The chief officers of the church are: Clerk, Frank E. Tolhurst; assistant clerk, E. Lewis Upton; treasurer, Hartford-Aetna National Bank; assistant treasurer, George H.

Meade; treasurer of benevolences, F. W. Parmelee.

At the present time, the Central Church is worshiping in two sections, north and south, holding their services in the two meeting houses as before the merger, until such time, as what was formerly the South Church building is razed to make room for the new structure, at which time the south section of the new church will begin worshiping in the same building with the north section, at the corner of Talcott and Main streets, formerly the First Church meeting house.

The manifest spirit of the new order of things is an illuminating illustration of Christian courtesy and cooperation that augurs well for the future of the new church. Church calendars for the new church are published in two sections, north and south. Saturday's dailies carry the notices for the Sunday services in two sections, north and south.

The building committee has already received a pencil sketch of the plans for the new edifice, indicating the general layout to meet all the needs of the work of a modern church in a down-town section. Provision is being made in the Central Church building for the offices of the Connecticut Convention.

The Maritime Provinces

By A. C. Chute

Matters of unusual interest and deep concern to the Baptists of the Maritime Provinces of Canada have occurred in recent weeks. On Feb. 15 Rev. F. W. Patterson, brought from Western Canada after more than twenty years of fine service there as superintendent of missions and editor of the Baptist Outlook, was inaugurated the eighth president of Acadia University, as successor of Dr. G. B. Cutten who recently took the headship of Colgate. The time of the inauguration was in the midst of the abounding snow and the intense cold of an unusually severe winter. But attendance at the imposing exercises was not prevented thereby from being large, nor was the warmth of the services in the least impaired. Not only were representatives present from all Maritime colleges, but educationalists came from the United States—Doctor Jeffrey from Harvard, Doctor Conovan from Newton, and President Cutten from Colgate. The occasion was all that could be desired. In the forenoon, at the Wolfville Baptist Church, the formal inauguration took place with addresses in every way felicitous. The inaugural of Doctor Patterson was such as to delight Acadia's friends and supporters, and to foretoken a strong and fruitful administration. The note it sounded was in fullest harmony with the history and traditions of our college. On every side our people feel that our schools are now entering upon another period of prosperity quite worthy of what has preceded.

Advantage was taken of the occasion for conferring some honorary degrees upon distinguished guests. Dinner was served for visitors and friends following the morning's program, after which came the customary speech-making of humorous and interesting sort, mingled with expressions of large expectation. In the evening at the Memorial gymnasium, there was a reception of such a nature as formed a fitting close to a notable day in our annals.

Another memorable day was Apr. 11 at the First Church of Moncton, N. B., to which Dr. J. Austin Huntley has lately come as pastor from the Fifth Avenue Church, Troy, N. Y. Educational leaders in these provinces have for some time been much exercised over the offer made by the Carnegie Corporation of large financial aid in the event of the federation of Maritime colleges in one great central university at Halifax. On account of this Acadia has been held up in the matter of erecting a new administration building to take the place of the one destroyed by fire in December of 1920. The Baptist convention last summer had this question of amalgamation before it, and it was then determined to postpone decision as far as Acadia was concerned, until it should be better understood what the proposals of the Carnegie people were. Immediately after Doctor Patterson's inauguration the governing board of our institutions met and it was decided to call a special convention at Moncton during April to hear and act upon the full report the governors were prepared to make. More than 200 delegates were present from all parts of the territory covered by the convention. The meeting was enthusiastic. The extended report was carefully considered and debated in all its parts. Its last clause was this: "Your board recommends that the convention continue to develop Acadia at Wolfville, and that it authorize the board to take such steps as are consistent with a sound financial policy to enable Acadia to make her future contribution to education even more worthy than that of her past." When the vote was taken this was heartily carried with but four dissenting voices.

Directly succeeding this final action, President Patterson went to Ottawa and Toronto and over into the United States on a mission growing out of this important conclusion. Of course the decision means that we must give ourselves with a zeal and generosity to this educational task such as we have not hitherto displayed. We are receiving the usual reward of good work already done by having a still greater work laid upon us. May the constituency suitably respond to the large plans the president has in mind and to which he has begun to devote himself with characteristic force and promise.

A Living Church

Many a minister of Christ, entrusted with the pastoral care of a church of 200 members, finds that church a task which occupies him full time and taxes to the utmost all his resources.

The creation in three months of a church numbering 200 members would be a notable event in church affairs.

Woodward Avenue Church, Detroit, has witnessed the creation of the equivalent of such a church, and its pastor, Dr. John Wellington Hoag, has assumed pastoral relations with such a flock, through the normal continuous activities of church and pastor during the past three months. On the Sunday following Easter, Dr. Hoag presented to the church where he has ministered for eight years, the largest group of new members ever received at one time during his pastorate. The group included all who have united with the church since Jan. 1.

Following the service of praise and prayer at the morning worship, the new members were formed in a line which completely encircled the auditorium. The pastor greeted by name each of the 200 as the moving line passed him at the communion table. Each was introduced to the church with a few words of comment as to his family relation or the influences which had won him for Christ, or his former church home. To each one was given a flower to be worn during the day as a badge of recognition.

For an hour the congregation sat quiet, intent, with a manifest consciousness of its unity with Christ and its fellowship with the new members in the great circle which surrounded them. The sustained interest during the slow procession was remarkable. Each name uttered by the pastor quickened gratitude and joy in some hearts of those present whose prayers and efforts had here borne fruit. The circle included many children from the junior department, a large group of young women from a single Sunday-school class, schoolboys and girls, young married couples, entire households, and a long line of young men won for Christ in Judge Pliny Marsh's Baraca Bible Class.

Of the 200 in the circles, exactly 100 were men and boys. One hundred of the total number had been received by baptism. Seven nationalities were represented.

This remarkable enlargement of the membership in so short a time is not only an indication of the vitality and efficiency of a noble and historic church; it is also an evidence of the power of pastoral evangelism. The facility with which Pastor Hoag greeted 200 new members by name heartily and without hesitation, was not due to a feat of memory, but a loving personal interest and to a pastoral ministry extending in some cases through months and years. The church has held no special revival campaign during the winter, save for a few extra meetings preceding Easter. The regular Sunday evening services are avowedly and warmly evangelistic; and many of those baptized have been won or awakened in these services. The church now has a membership of 3,044.

Philadelphia Letter

By Arthur C. Baldwin

This great city is going through changes that will profoundly affect the church life. Conditions are anything but "static," that favorite word of recent controversy. Energies are being released at a most violent rate.

For example the Delaware suspension bridge, whose piers are now above the water and which will be finished within three years, promises to open a great stretch of New Jersey territory to Philadelphians. They are going to pour across the river, these folk of our congested portions. In the next ten years many people now resident and active in Philadelphia and its churches will be residents of another state. The churches will miss them sorely.

The opening of the Frankford "L" has started a great building boom in that section which will continue for ten years at least. When the Market Street "L" was opened it promptly changed the territory west of the Schuylkill from a more or less quiet retreat into a great city of over 400,000. Churches in West Philadelphia, built before this in residence districts, now find themselves in boarding-house or apartment or downtown sections while the population they were built to serve has moved far beyond them. Such conditions of increasing and changing populations now face the churches of our northeast area A large virgin tract is opening and apparently limitless numbers of people are ready to pour in. Where do they come from, we wonder. But they come, and real estate values soar and refuse to come down.

A review of our population by the Federation of Churches has given some interesting figures. In a population of 1,823,158 there are 475,088 Catholics and 367,910 in all the rest of the churches. This includes 11,454 Jews. This indicates that 980,160 citizens are not in any church, Catholic, Jew or Protestant. Of this number probably 250,000 are Jews while the rest, it is pretty safe to say, must in the great majority be Protestant, in inclination at least.

From 1910 to 1920 the city grew at the rate of 28,415 a year, whereas the church membership grew among Protestants at the rate of 7,048 a year and among the Catholics at the rate of 9,575. Thus the population seems to have grown at the rate of 11,891 faster than the churches.

This review is given as a peg for the sake of hanging up some remarks about church planning. Such shifting conditions make the problem serious. When people move away from the church neighborhood others move in. They may be Jews or colored or alien. Other races have come where Protestants were strong and filled the whole section. We have large churches now with Sunday schools that never go over 200 and may be nearer 100. The apartments near by do not breed children, though the city gets an increasing revenue from dog licenses. What should churches in such sections do? Hang on for sentiment's sake, as many of them do? Adapt themselves to the changed conditions, as many of them don't? Pick up stakes and go, leaving a hiatus and perhaps be reproached? And then what shall we say to these little churches in the newer places that suddenly face a great population? The people have come; denominational ties are weak; the churches that have fine plants with facilities for community service will get them. I have in mind now a church of West Philadelphia of another denomination that built wisely and well for the future and that has, it is said, over 200 former Baptists in its membership. They came. The Baptists had little for them. The others were ready.

In my judgment we Baptists have been weak in the past in our foresight and planning for a changing city. Our individualism and lack of large resources, which could be put in the place of critical opportunity, have made us miss some possibilities. Even now some wisely directed mergers might make possible a great work in needy sections. It is easy for the outsider to see and say such things. But in the actual operation, such adjustments run against the snag of sentiment. People love the old place. Doubtless some of our churches ought to be closed and the amount received put into promising fields like Overbrook and Argora. In a decade the denomination would receive more than a fair return on the investment.

But who will do these things? Sometimes we wish for a bishop who could rule and direct for the kingdom. And yet—and yet I know one church and pastor who at least would mightily object to having any bishop tell them what to do. So it goes, and for our freedom we pay a price. There are advantages, however, and though we get impatient at times our system has worked and will continue. The fact remains, nevertheless, that our city faces big problems and there is need of a policy of readjustment by the churches.

Reports from the churches indicate a season of spiritual activity that culminated in a great Easter. Pastor Houghton at Norristown baptized sixty-one, which seems to be the greatest number reported. The reports indicate pastoral evangelism. Some attempts at the old revival method have been made but with very little success. For the present, at least, the people do not respond to the professional evangelist.

The Second Church has called Rev. George V. Daniels. Missahickon has called Rev. Samuel E. Smith. Rev. Walter Walker reports a fine spirit and large prayer meetings in his new field at Frankford. Rev. Ralph L. Mayberry soon takes up the work at the Third, Germantown. The Jenkintown Church has just dedicated the Unruh Memorial Chapel. It was erected at a cost of $35,000 and will be used for social purposes and the Sunday and week day educational work of the church. It is a fine addition.

In the death of Mrs. Wilbur, wife of Rev. J. M. Wilbur, the Baptist Institute as well as he has suffered a great loss. A woman of charming personality, able, interested, untiring and devoted in her service for others, her passing comes as a distinct loss to the students of the institute and to many others. In the absence of her pastor, Dr. Carter Helm Jones, the services were conducted by President Milton G. Evans, D. D., of Crozer.

Baptists hereabouts are looking forward to the convention at Atlantic City and gladly anticipate having some of our Baptist "big guns" come over to us and shoot off a few rounds on Convention Sunday. We also desire to remind our friends that the accidental coming to Atlantic City must not be allowed to interfere with the plan of having the convention in Philadelphia next year to celebrate the hundredth anniversary of our Publication Society.

PROPOSED BUILDING OF JUDSON CHURCH, OAK PARK, ILLINOIS.

Proposed New Building for Judson Church, Oak Park, Ill.

A year and a half ago Judson Church was organized with fifty-six charter members, thirty-four of whom came from the Austin Church. A choice lot (99x125) was secured in Oak Park at the southwest corner of Austin Boulevard and Berkshire. It has an outlook all the way east in Chicago through Potomac Avenue. The Executive Council put a portable building on the lot and gave the services of Rev. A. H. Gage for a few months until the church called Rev. Joseph Croft Dent as pastor. For ten years he had been pastor of Pilgrim Temple Church and more recently district superintendent of the Illinois Baptist Convention.

The new organization was self-supporting from the beginning, and probably expended nearly $6,000 for general expenses and benevolences in 1922. The congregation and Sunday school soon began to fill the portable, and the membership has steadily grown until now it enrolls 128. A building committee was appointed, Mr. E. E. Roberts of Oak Park secured as architect, and plans drawn for a well-equipped English Gothic building which will cost probably $125,000. It is estimated that the first unit will cost $50,000.

Sunday, April 15, was the day set apart to begin the campaign for funds with Rev. Benjamin Otto, superintendent of the Baptist Executive Council as the wise and winning leader. With great cheerfulness and sacrifice the members went to the task and when the day was over pledges to the amount of $30,000 were recorded. The effort is to be continued until enough funds are secured to entirely provide for the first unit.

Chicago—Iowa Letter

By J. W. Weddell

Selah

There is devotional significance in the word, even though it be but a musical pause and a direction to the singers. B. F. Jacobs used to render it suggestively; "Stop and think," as in Ps. 3:8: "Salvation belongeth unto the Lord: thy blessing is upon thy people," i. e., salvation—that is the Lord's blessing—that is mine, mine to be saved. Then follows "Selah": "Stop and think."

But an even more striking translation (Is it A. C. Dixons?) is, "Think of that!" So we may read the fourth verse in the same Psalm. "I cried unto the Lord with my voice and he heard me out of his holy hill. Selah." All the way from heaven he hears, or as John McNeill says, "That's my bairn Davy crying to me down there and I must answer." Selah—Think of that!

Peripatetic

I have been out among the flock speaking the word of comfort here and there, and oh, how it takes hold! In cottage meeting or at the sick bed or among the sorrowing—their name is legion. Dr. Joseph Parker said, "He preaches to the times who preaches to broken hearts." They are everywhere. And there may the Word go with its sweet assuagements.

Moreover your own soul gets well watered by the way. Here at Iowa City the other day I found "Sister Jane," Dr. John E. Clough's own sister who helped him to college and presently at Telugu land. "Shut in" we say, but shut in with God. Ah, the joy of it! Go seeking to help others and be helped yourself. Here a chapel talk and there a hospital visit, and the light shines in Christian faces, and "Heaven comes down our souls to greet,

And glory crowns the mercy seat."

I might add in this connection that Mrs. Principal Ballinger, whose husband is in the local schools, is a daughter of Pastor Case of Des Moines, and that Mrs. Professor Polter (University) is the daughter, as I have learned, of Rev. J. M. Whitehead of heroic memory in Kansas.

And now I hear that our genial friend, Jacob Schutz of the class of '79, has gone on. He was buried at Corning, Iowa, the last of March. He married Mabel Fairbanks at Morgan Park, where the cottage meetings were held in the good old initial days of the seminary.

Fraternal

But I am minded to speak another word. In this third Psalm, a little earlier, in the second verse, it says, not so reassuringly, "many there be which say of my soul. There is no help for him in God. Selah." We come to it sometimes. We have reached the end. And then the gracious words that follow, "But thou, O Lord, art a shield for me: my glory, and the lifter up of my head." Lux in tenebris. And there we find our God. "A very present help in trouble." Not "time of trouble," merely as we usually speak of it, but as it stands in the text (Ps. 46:1) "in trouble." Trouble is often the vehicle by which he comes to us—trust his grace.

I think of this when I recall that sweet service of farewell which we held a few days ago over the casket of the much-loved wife of the managing editor of The Baptist. It was an uplifting triumph rather than burdening grief, and the bereaved husband showed it in his face and his voice, for he was free to speak then and there his own loving tribute. And she spoke it too in her happy countenance as she lay there. "I am smiling through," she said, and she did.

"Life's work well done,
Life's race well run,
Life's crown well won,
Now comes rest.
For lo, he giveth his beloved sleep."

Rev. J. P. Chadbourne assisted the First Church, Hyannis, of which Rev. A. T. Ringold is pastor, in a successful series of pre-Easter meetings. On April 22 there were five baptisms and others are expected soon.

The Boston Ministers Conference on Apr. 23 had a strong and almost exciting day on the present world situation. We had two of our own brethren to give us the benefit of their personal contacts and studies—Dr. E. M. Seake, who recently returned from a six months' trip through southern and central Europe, and Rev. Oliva Brouellette, who spent four years dispensing Baptist bounty and sympathy among the stricken French in the devastated area. Both speakers struck the statesmanlike note, but with unmistakable conviction, as well as broad intelligence and firm grasp upon the acute Franco-German contention. Somehow we are certain to get plenty of ginger when we give home talent a chance.

Dr. Austen T. Kempton is back again. The high spots of his trip were Palestine, Egyptian tombs and the Nile country. Ever so many will share his twin gifts of observing and describing.

Dr. Walter Calley is "up from Florida." He has already preached at the Stoughton Street Church, and has received the glad hand of the many brethren who love his spring appearing. He seeks nothing, yet is always in demand.

Dr. Joseph E. Perry has a glad heart because of the united response of his people to the building project which he has long cherished. The old meeting house is coming down, to make way for a new red brick colonial temple which will set perfectly in the old colonial town of Weston. Its classical facade of white pillars and tower will be something beautiful to see, as you speed through that famous suburban thoroughfare.

Rev. Frank M. Holt gives cheering messages from his couch in the Massachusetts General Hospital. Doctors promise that he will be better than ever. Rather a rash prediction, for "Frank" i pretty good already. His Reading peo ple know it, and are loyally waiting.

First Church Fitchburg is a churc that impresses a visitor. Few moder structures possess the enduring majest of that sturdy old meeting house, wit its tall steeple after the manner of Si Christopher Wren, and its spacious well-proportioned house of prayer. It i a strong, normal church, working wel its field for enduring results. The pas tor, Rev. E. B. Price seems after thei own mind in this, and they sound hi praises and tell you why. The urch was organized in 1848 and will cel-rate its seventy-fifth anniversary in No-mber. Pastor Graves is in the fourth ar of his pastorate.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Petworth Church, of which Rev. Paul Langhorne is pastor, has taken rapid strides during the past few years. In 1916 when Mr. Langhorne accepted the pastorate, the membership was far below 100, there was a mortgage of $8,000 and a floating debt of $1,500. Step by step under his guidance the church soon became self-supporting, free from debt and launched a $75,000 building project. Before the new edifice was started, $40,000 was in hand. As the result of a recent campaign, $40,000 more has been subscribed on a five year basis, so that when the church is dedicated, the entire cost will be covered. The church membership is now 400 and there is every indication that the work will continue to grow.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

The church at Ford City, at a special business meeting April 11, burned a $5,000 mortgage. At the same meeting $2,100 was subscribed for improvements on the interior of the building. The total cost of the improvements will be $2,500. Rev. A. B. Bowser is pastor.

Rev. Eugene Neubauer, who has traveled extensively in Egypt, delivered a gospel travelogue at the Elizabeth Church on "Egypt, the Land of King Tut." Improvements have been made on the church from time to time, and the ordinance of baptism has been administered several times during the year.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

The forty-third annual meeting of the women's missionary department of the Wyoming Association was held at the church in Tunkhannock, April 17. In addition to the usual reports there was a discussion on how to create more enthusiasm in missions. Miss Margaret Griffith and Mrs. M. H. Jones delivered addresses.

IOWA

Twenty persons were baptized on Easter at the Walnut Street Church, Waterloo, as the result of special evangelistic services conducted by the pastor, Rev. Robert N. MacDonald. Pastor MacDonald recently completed his first year of service with the church. During that time there were fifty-five accessions to the membership.

The church at Iowa Falls recently increased the salary of its pastor, Rev. W. A. Simmons, by adding $500 per year. The membership is now about 400 and there have been 120 additions to the membership during the less than two years of the present pastorate.

MICHIGAN

Grand River Avenue Church, Detroit: On April 25 a reception was given in honor of the twenty members recently received into the church. Pastor Parsons is encouraged at the growth of the work. Since his coming five months ago, the Sunday-school attendance had doubled. A new house of worship will soon be a necessity.

During the four years that Rev. C. S. Knight has been pastor of the First Church, Pontiac, there have been 500 additions to the membership, 300 by baptism. Since Jan. 1 there have been thirty-six baptisms. The work is in a flourishing condition.

Evangelist H. P. Hoskins recently closed a series of meetings with the First Church, Rochester, with the result that there were eighteen decisions for Christ. Rev. H. J. Hamilton is pastor.

At the annual meeting and banquet of the First Church, Port Huron, the following items of progress for the past year were reported: The purchase of an $8,500 parsonage, fifty-one new members received, the organization of a young people's club for the purpose of raising funds for the erection of a recreation house and an increase of $1,500 in the pledges. The church voted unanimously to increase the salary of the pastor, Rev. J. H. Vatcher, $400. The address was given by Pres. W. G. Spencer of Hillsdale College.

Rev. S. J. Hall has closed his pastorate of three and a half years at Leslie. One hundred and two new members have been received into the church.

ILLINOIS

As the result of pre-Easter meetings, there were forty additions to the membership of Central Church, Quincy, of which Rev. R. V. Meigs is pastor.

The First Church, Rochelle, is experiencing a slow but healthy growth in membership and attendance. There are baptisms practically every Sunday. With proper equipment and adequate space the membership could be doubled in a short time.

As the result of a three weeks' series of special meetings conducted by Rev. Lloyd C. Vineyard at the Sycamore Church, there were twenty-one conversions. In appreciation of his services, the church presented Mr. Vineyard a substantial purse. Definite plans have been formed for a greater and more efficient church.

Rev. G. W. Claxton of Streator reports eight additions on Easter, making a total of seventeen since the first of the year. Improvements have been made on the property to the amount of $1,000.

Eighteen candidates were baptized at the First Church, Peoria, on Easter. The work is in a flourishing condition.

Rev. A. D. McGlashan, pastor of the First Church, Elgin, according to the press of that city, has resigned and completed arrangements to enter business life in the West for a time in the hope that it will help to restore the health of Mrs. McGlashan. He will leave Elgin June 11 and a lumber camp in California will be his destination. He began his work in Elgin at the beginning of 1921.

As the result of special meetings conducted by Evangelist Dunk at the Belleville Church from March 18 to Easter, there were eleven additions to the membership with more to follow. Rev. J. H. Martin is pastor.

Dr. W. S. Ryder, who recently completed his course at the University of Chicago, has accepted a call to the First Church, Savanna, and began work May 1.

Urbana-Champaign

The Herald of Hope Church under the leadership of Rev. R. Sam Kirkland has added quite a number to the membership besides making decided progress in other ways.

The First Church of Champaign is enjoying a period of prosperity. Rev. W. B. Morris is entering on his third year under favorable circumstances. He has recently introduced a unified service of his Sunday school and morning congregation which is proving a success. The church recently had the services of Rev.

Geo. Thompson of Iowa in a two weeks' meeting with good results.

The University Church, under the leadership of Rev. M. S. Bryant, is performing a unique service for the Baptist student constituency of the Twin Cities. Mr. Bryant is beginning his twelfth year of service and is an asset to the Baptist denomination of the state in this most strategic position.

The First Church of Urbana has had a most fruitful year. Rev. C. C. Long is beginning his seventh year of service on this field. The prospects for a splendid year are promising. Seventy-five new members have been added to the church within the past year.

OHIO

Rev. A. W. West, who tendered his resignation as pastor of the First Church, Washington C. H., began his new work with the First Church, Troy, May 1. As yet no pastor has been secured to fill the vacancy. Any communications should be addressed to the church clerk.

The First Church, Middletown, observed special Passion week services. At the sunrise meeting on Easter twenty-one young people were baptized. At the morning service sixty received the hand of fellowship. Rev. Franklin A. Stiles is pastor.

Dayton Association

Doctor Geistweit addressed the pastors at their monthly meeting. The First Church has given Doctor and Mrs. Geistweit a most hearty reception.

Pastor Johnson conducted a two weeks' meeting at the Linden Avenue Church with the result that there were thirty additions to the membership and twenty baptisms.

The Haynes Street Church is building a new parsonage. The pastor assisted in a two weeks' campaign in Akron with the result that there were six baptisms.

Pastor J. C. MacFarlane of Memorial closed a serious of meetings. Four candidates were baptized.

The Colorado Avenue Church has called John E. Fosnight as pastor. He began his new work May 1. Rev. J. S. Hill was supply pastor for five months.

A. B. Y. P. U. has been organized at the Central Church. Fifty-one new members have been received during the ministry of Pastor Staley.

Pastor Hall at Summit Street baptized twelve candidates and received three by letter.

There have been three additions to the membership of the Centerville Church. Pastor Lawson reports that Mrs. Lawson's health is improving.

Pastor Copeland of Clifton Street, Springfield, had thirteen additions to the membership.

Pastor J. M. Cosby of Tippecanoe City had begun his fourth year with the church. There is a steady growth in all departments. Mr. Cosby has recently recovered from a serious illness. There were two additions by letter.

There were twenty additions to the Piqua Church. Doctor Pottor assisted Pastor Fenner in a series of special meetings, but owing to illness Mr. Fenner was unable to take much part in the services.

The hand of fellowship was given to nineteen persons at the North Dayton Church. The pastor is doing extensive preaching at noon in the shops.

The church at Sidney is being redecorated and a new heating system installed. Pastor Walsh conducted a successful meeting at King's Mill. There were ten baptisms.—Philip Bauer.

NEBRASKA

Rev. A. A. DeLarme, pastor of the First Church, Omaha, baptized twenty candidates on Easter. The communion service was the largest in the history of the church. The annual meeting was held April 18. Reports showed $36,900 raised during the year, of which $12,000 was used for missionary benevolences.

KANSAS

The First Church, Parsons, is celebrating its fiftieth anniversary. The pastor, Rev. H. A. Smoot, invited Rev. J. T. Crawford, secretary of the Kansas Baptist Convention and a former pastor, to deliver the anniversary address.

NORTH DAKOTA

The annual business meeting and banquet of the First Church, Grand Forks, was held April 18. Reports showed that the total receipts for the year exceeded $13,000. About $5,500 was contributed to missions. The treasurer stated that the church at the present time is financially in the best condition that it has been for fifteen years. Following the business session the fortieth anniversary of the organization of the church was observed. The membership of the church is now 423.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Rev. H. H. Gunderson, for five years pastor of the Pierre Church, has resigned. Since Jan. 1 there have been twenty baptisms. Mr. Gunderson is engaged in evangelistic work under the North Dakota convention. Before he left the field, the church presented him and his wife a purse in appreciation of their services.

There were five baptisms on Easter at the Aberdeen Church. Rev. A. B. Claypoole is pastor.

MISSOURI

First Church, Excelsior Springs: Since the coming of Rev. C. M. Phillips, formerly a teacher for six years at William Jewell College, all departments have been quickened. Because of the enlarging needs of the work a new house of worship was erected free of debt. This field presents a limitless opportunity because of the many visitors at the resorts, a number of whom are Baptists.

At the meeting of the St. Louis Mission board, held April 19, Dr. S. E. Ewing, superintendent and executive secretary of the board, presented his resignation, to become effective June 30. He will assist Dr. B. A. Wilkes of the Missouri Baptist Sanitarium. For sixteen years Doctor Ewing has been vitally interested in and connected with the city mission work, and his influence has been felt not only by Baptists, but by all religious denominations. The Missouri Sanitarium is the property of Missouri Baptists and has grown since its organization in 1889 until at the present time it has property valued at more than $750,000. Doctor Ewing will have complete charge of the finances of the institution, together with the responsibility for the spiritual morale.

Rocky Mountain States

WYOMING

The first annual meeting of the Central Association was held with the First Church, Glenrock, April 11-12. Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Manley of Ongole, India, were guests of the association. Evangelist Blanchard is conducting evangelistic services at the First Church. Since the coming of Pastor Dulin a little over a year ago there have been thirty-two additions to the church membership. The Sunday school attendance has increased until on April 15 there were 131 present.

EASTERN WASHINGTON

During the seven months that Rev. W. E. Henry has been pastor of the First Church, Yakima, there have been eighty accessions to the church membership. Plans are under way for a vacation school to be held in June.

Pacific Coast

WESTERN WASHINGTON

The First Church, Tacoma, has gone over the top in the campaign to secure pledges amounting to $250,000 for the new building. Over $251,146 was subscribed. Rev. C. Oscar Johnson is pastor. Rev. F. H. Divine has had charge of the campaign.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Rev. A. E. Patch is pastor of a small mission church on the line dividing Burlingame and San Mateo. A Sunday school of sixty members has been organized. Five young people were baptized on Easter, and there have been many additions by letter

The church is twenty miles from San Francisco and is the only one for many miles. A suitable house of worship is greatly needed.

Rev. Geo. A. Phillips of Tenth Avenue, Oakland, recently completed five years of service with this church. They have been years of high privilege to those who have waited upon the ministry of this man who is extraordinarily gifted in expression and who is consumed with a passion for the Lord Jesus Christ and who possesses a remarkable faculty in the use of illustration. Doctor Phillips is preaching to the largest congregations that have gathered in Tenth Avenue for many years. He is steadily drawing thoughtful people who find in his unique ministry the spiritual help they need. At recent communion services many persons have been welcomed into the church, a goodly number of whom have come by baptism.

Dr. John Snape, during his three years with the First Church, Oakland, has welcomed over 500 new members into the church. The current expense budget has been more than doubled and the beneficent budget has been quadrupled. Their giving to the New World Movement during the last eleven months has averaged at $11.98 per member.

In the five months since Dr. James S. West came to the First Church, San Francisco, over 100 new members have been added, a large number by baptism. As a result of one Sunday's services, ten church letters were sent for, and altogether things are moving. On Easter Sunday, the attendance record was broken at both services. In the evening two commanderies of Knight Templars visited the church in a body and the place was crowded to its full capacity, many being turned away unable to get in.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

The First Church of San Bernardino is said to be the oldest Baptist church in Southern California. It was founded in 1866. Because of the railroad strike, the past year was a difficult one, as many of the members are employed in the railroad shops. Nevertheless the church is in excellent condition. Recently, as the result of revival meetings conducted by the pastor, Rev. G. Rector Dye, there were forty additions to the membership.

Evangelist Amy L. Stockton recently closed a two weeks' meeting with the Highland Park Church, J. W. Craig minister. As a result, there were twenty-one accessions to the membership. The church is now engaged in erecting an addition to the Sunday-school building at a cost of $20,000. The enrolment in the church is the largest it has ever known.

Six persons were baptized on Easter at the First Church, Redlands. There have been 544 additions to the membership in the last three and a half years. Recently the church decided to erect a new house of worship to cost $150,000, which will be raised in three units of $50,000 each. Rev. S. Fraser Langford is pastor.

The First Church, Hollywood, Dr. Samuel J. Skevington, pastor, held its annual meeting April 11. The reports of the various boards and officers were printed in the bulletin and instead of a detailed reading the pastor presented a summary through the medium of stereopticon slides. The finances were found to be in an unprecedented favorable condition. The income for the local work was $12,122.96.

Up-to-date Religious Statistics

In the face of criticism and attacks the churches of the United States, according to the Federal Council of Churches, made the greatest gains in their history during the last statistical year.

Figures made public under date of Mar. 31 by Dr. E. G. Watson, statistician of the Federal Council, show that the religious bodies of the United States gained 1,220,428 members over the preceding year. This is approximately 50 per cent greater than the average annual growth for the preceding five years.

The present membership of all religious bodies in the country, according to the latest figures available, is 47,461,558 persons. The various Christian communions, which show a rather uniform growth, are responsible for practically the entire recorded advance.

The statistics of the Adventist bodies indicate a loss of 2,567 members, their present membership being 133,666 against 136,233 reported last year. The Latter Day Saints (Mormons) show a constituency gain of 16,164.

The last available figures regarding membership of the larger churches and their gains or losses during the year are:

Adventist bodies, 133,666, loss 2,567; all Baptists, 8,167,535, gain 332,285; Northern Baptist Convention, 1,274,250, gain 13,843; Southern Baptist Convention, 3,374,165, gain 97,116; National Baptist Convention (negro), 3,253,733, gain 74,570; other Baptist bodies, 265,387. loss 655; Brethren-German Baptist (Dunkers), 136,432, gain 2,322; Christian Church (General Christian Convention), 94,153, loss 2,931; Swedenborgian bodies, 7,066, gain 776.

The Seven Ages of Woman, by Compton Mackenzie. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Co. $2.

The seven ages of woman—infant, girl, maiden, wife, mother, widow and grandmother—are made concrete in the life story of Mary Flower. Mary comes into being through the mésalliance of an aristocrat with a daughter of one of his father's tenants. Emigration to Australia is attempted; but the ship is wrecked, both parents drowned and baby Mary Flower is thrust upon Mr. and Mrs. Fawcus, fellow ship-passengers. The characterization of this couple is good. They keep Mary for ten years, then she is claimed by her now solitary, monied, paternal grandmother. Mary is an adorable, original and imaginative little girl, especially while she is with the Fawcus couple. Maturity moulds her into a more conventional, consequently a less interesting, type. There are times when the reader cannot help but wish that she had retained some of her childish initiative—especially when she meekly dismisses Pierre, the love of her life, at the instigation of her grandmother. As a mother Mary is disappointing—and disappointed. The book is a clean one and a strong one. Men as well as women will like it.

THE KINGDOM OF EVILS:

Psychiatric Social Work Presented in One Hundred Case Histories Together with a Classification of Social Divisions of Evil, by E. E. Southard, M. D., (Harvard) and Mary C. Jarrett (Smith College). Introduction by Richard C. Cabot, M. D., New York: The Macmillan Co., $5.

Prof. John Dewey has recently written: "The world has always been more or less a sick world. . . but it may be doubted if the consciousness of sickness was ever so widespread as it is today."

The work under review is a faithful and sympathetic portrayal of that sick world, as indicated in one hundred cases of physical, mental and moral disorder studied and treated at the Boston Psychopathic Hospital, where Dr. Southard was director until his death three years ago.

The first half of the volume, which contains 700 pages, presents the case histories of 100 vassals of the kingdom of evils, with a summary for each case of the treatment and results. This section is "a vivid transcript of poignant human experience—a record of human misfortunes and their healing."

The remainder of the book is devoted to a discussion of psychopathology (the science of the mind diseased) and psychiatry (the art of mental healing.) Dr. Cabot, in the introduction, says of the author that he claimed more, perhaps, for psychiatry, than any one else ever did up to his time: "He believed that labor disputes, family rows, and international ambitions, as well as crime, alcoholism, and school-backwardness belong in the field of mental hygiene." Yet he "refused to confound (as psychiatrists and psychologists often do) the sphere of immorality with the sphere of disease. Not all sinners are sick—in his view, nor all criminals psychopaths."

Dr. Southard's "five categories" for the classification of "the five major forms of evil in the regnum malorum," are fundamental in his diagnosis and treatment of his psychopathic cases. They are:

Morbi—diseases and defects of body and mind; errores—educational deficiencies and misinformation; vitia—vices and bad habits; litigia—legal entanglements; penuriae—poverty and other forms of resourcelessness.

Many psychopathic patients manifest symptoms of two or more of these forms of evil; one case cited by Dr. Southard includes all five.

The spirit and method of the authors throughout is that of ministers to a mind diseased, seeking to bring healing to a sick world. "In one sense this volume is a collection of cases of social maladjustment. The whole of life, according to Herbert Spencer, is an adjustment—a continuous adjustment of inner to outer relations . . . The duty of the social worker lies in the plane of adjustment and of readjustment between the human mind and society. Modern social work undertakes consciously to effect readjustment, so far as possible, in all concrete human cases in which the vital relations, inner and outer, have become mutually disorganized. Society has come to regard itself more and more responsible for the cure and the prevention of all human maladjustments."

It would seem to be beyond dispute that such a book dealing with wise and recuperative treatment for the morbid mind, should at least rank in importance for study and discussion, with treatises in politics or economics; for, as the authors say, "Man's mind is at the center and crossing of all those inner relations which Spencer defined as requiring readjustment to the outer world. If modern social work demands readjustment of man to his environment, not to say of the environment to man, then it is clear that the specialist in social adjustment must find his chief aid and mainstay, but also the greatest bugbear and stumbling block, in this selfsame highly sensitive, highly unstable mind." Dr. Cabot's reference, in his introduction, to the influence of religion, reflects the sympathetic attitude of the book itself: "The book is written, in part, to show how doctor and social worker can cooperate in the care of mentally deranged. . . . I think myself, that if the psychiatrist were yet a little more broad-minded, he would call the clergyman as well as the social worker to his aid and would find his patients thanking him for a new sort of help now given by neither doctor nor social worker."

The notable volume is not designed for "pleasure reading," but those who deal with human souls and human minds, affected by one or more of the five major evils, "morbi, errores, vitia, litigia, penuriae, will find in "The Kingdom of Evils" a course of instruction, with clinical material, invaluable in quality, to aid them in their ministry, whether as pastors, teachers, lawyers, social workers, or in similar callings whose aim and end is "the cure of all human maladjustments."

"It Is to Laugh"

"What would you do if you were a millionaire?" demanded Pat.

"Me?" said Tim. "I'd have a half-foot more length to this pick-handle and save me poor back."—American Boy.

The Professor: "Let us take the example of the busy ant. He is busy all the time. He works all day and every day. Then what happens?"

The Bright One: "He gets stepped on."

MUSIC AND THE CHILD

By Edward P. Kimball

Too often children are taken to a teacher and left, with the assignment to "give" them some "lessons." Very little concern is exhibited as to whether a particular child is especially talented or if possessing talent, whether the particular study that has been decided upon for him to take up, physically, temperamentally, and intellectually, he is best adapted to succeed in. He is brought to a teacher as he might, in olden times have been taken to a sorcerer, to have injected into his anatomy, by force if necessary, this magic potion called music which mysteriously and in some vague manner is supposed to give him suddenly some supernatural proclivities and powers. Parents must be brought to understand that music must be taken up and pursued in the same natural and reasonable way as every other branch of learning, and rigidly and unceasingly, every rational theory of advancement and growth adhered to in the acquirement of proficiency in any other branch of learning.

There is a disposition now among psychologists to deny the existence of hereditary talents, and to discount, if not scout, the idea of prenatal influences, but experience in the field of art presses the belief upon us that tendencies toward music in one generation really protrude themselves into the future of the race, and usually they are strongest in the next generation. It will be recalled that from the sixteenth to the eighteenth centuries we can see the tribe of Bachs peopling Thuringia, Saxony, and Franconia with a host of artists of the first order, who were wont to assemble once a year, sometimes at Erfurt, sometimes at Eisenach or Arnstadt to the number of 150. We may cite from antiquity the families of Hortensius, Curio, and Lysius, in which the art of oratory was transmitted, even among the women; Aeschylus, in which family tragic poets are counted. Nearer our own time are the painters, Vernets, for three generations; Mozart, Rossini, and innumerable others. Certainly this continuity of inclination and talent cannot all be charged to environment. Yet it is possible to find children entirely destitute of artistic gifts in music whose parents were musicians. As well do we find those possessing genius in music who are the issue of men and women who had never manifested the slightest inclination toward music. But while we are forced to admit that history shows us these examples of heredity which are amplified in our households, we cannot afford to lose sight of the more potent influence upon the soul of all of us, namely, environment. Marvelous are the instances where, by environment, the very tendencies of nature itself have been checked apparently, and the course of a life been so influenced that exactly the opposite end has been achieved that seemed at the outset to be the natural conclusion.

Parents who are concerned in the manifestations of musical talent in children may safely look for them in a number of well proved indications. While there are no absolutely and infallible signs of precocity in this direction, still there exist certain and numerous indications of a predisposition for music. A few of them are: The child who manifests an evident pleasure in listening to music; who goes to the piano, not in awe at a big plaything, but because for some inscrutable reason he experiences keen enjoyment in the tones he gets out of it; who loves to hear singing; who does not desire to leave the room when there is music—these are good signs. If a child prefers a concert of serious music to an evening at the vaudeville it may be taken as a sign that there is a disposition toward music, and such a preference should not be allowed to pass unnoticed.

The child with a strong natural inclination to music will drum upon the table or window pane, with a clearly marked rhythm, reproducing in unmistakable accent, the swing of a waltz or march—that augurs well. If he retains the airs and songs and hymns he has heard and sings them to himself, for his own pleasure it is a serious indication of talent. If he really sings them in time and with perfect tune, it should not pass consideration. But better, if he goes to the piano and attempts to pick them out with one finger and succeeds, there is a very strong evidence of talent. If this same child responds to a few simple tests, such as asking him to listen to a tone produced by an instrument, or by the voice, and requiring him to reproduce it, and like experiments in pitch, it may be taken as a certainty that he possesses marked talent.

Parents must not expect all children who possess talent to exhibit it as prodigies. Beethoven was not an infant prodigy. It was necessary to beat him in order to make him practice. Rubinstein expresses an interesting opinion on this subject. He says: "Most of our greatest masters were infant prodigies, but the number of great masters is very small in comparison with the great mass of musically gifted children we admire every year, who later fulfill none of their promises. Ordinarily, musical talent manifests itself in children at the tenderest age; but there comes a time (with boys from fifteen to twenty and girls from fourteen to seventeen) when this musical talent suffers a crisis, is weakened, or goes to sleep forever; only those who are capable of passing this Rubicon become great artists, their number is very limited." In this connection one has said that in beginning the music education of children, every one should be handled as though he were to become a master in this branch. After talent has displayed itself, environment should be so shaped that this talent may develop to the utmost.

If the child that is intended for a musical career is to have a fair chance his education should begin with the acquirement of knowledge and training in other lines; his music education should be begun at a time and conducted in a way that will make it a part of his daily growth.—Descret News.

The Memorial Sublime

A fitting tribute to your church

THE eternal struggle for good which your church has maintained throughout the years since its foundation, has been written deeply into your minds and hearts.

Reaching out beyond the narrow confines of the district in which it is located—a decisive factor in the moral and spiritual life of the community—your church—has become a power in civic and ecclesiastical affairs.

To keep alive the spirit of the church and the memory of its achievements, there is none more fitting monument than a set of Deagan Tower Chimes, whose beautiful, fulsome tones peal forth to all men the spirit of truth, and the power of good, as exemplified by the church—your church.

To members who desire to be instrumental in giving to their church a sublime memorial of its high position, this fitting tribute is now within easy reach. To interested, responsible inquirers, a postal will bring full information.

Fresh from the Field

Under the leadership of Mrs. M. Plin Beebe of Ipswich, S. D., the state gave $1,700 for the Women's Union Christian Colleges of the Orient.

The First Church, Jacksonville, Fla., is to lose its pastor, Rev. W. A. Hobson, after twenty-three years of service. His resignation took effect on May 6. He will attend the Baptist World Alliance.

The annual meeting of the New York City Mission Society and of the Woman's Auxiliary was held at the Central Church May 10 and was of unusual interest because of the joint sessions with the Southern New York Association.

Rev. Arthur H. Page is now in this country, after a strenuous period of service in our Academy at Swatow, China. He was through the trying experiences of the typhoon and aided in righting things as much as possible before leaving on his overdue furlough. At present his address is 167 W. 66th St., Los Angeles, Cal.

Charles Halsey McKee, pioneer Baptist preacher in several of the western states, died at his home in McMinnville, Ore., April 20, on the eve of his sixty-eighth birthday. Mr. McKee was a graduate of Shurtleff college and held pastorates in Illinois, South Dakota and Oregon. He was for a number of years a very efficient colporter of the Publication Society. He devoted much time to evangelistic work and was especially successful in leading discouraged churches back to organized and effective service.

The steamship "America," which has been made the official vessel for Northern Baptist delegates at Stockholm, is proving embarrassingly popular on its sailing of June 30. Its agents report that all the cabin space could have been sold three times over for that sailing, and at present there is a waiting list of 750 people from the general public who would like to take passage on the "America" on June 30. It was exceedingly fortunate that the committee to promote attendance secured a large number of berths on this ship, but practically all of them have been sold, and the committee is now advising that those who have not made their reservations be prepared to sail on some other vessel, except as cabins on the "America" may unexpectedly be surrendered. Some delegates are so anxious to travel on the "America" that they are accepting berths in rooms that ordinarily have been sold as third class accommodations, but the committee to promote attendance does not recommend the use of such rooms. Delegates making such reservations must do so on their own responsibility. The committee strongly advises that those who cannot secure berths in the regular cabin space on the "America" use some other ship. Delegates who have not booked their passages should communicate at once with the American Express Company, 65 Broadway, New York City, or with some other steamship agent. The American Express Company is holding blocks of space on several ships sailing about July 1. It is important, too, that the delegates book their return passage to America without delay, or they may be greatly embarrassed. Some of the ships sailing from Europe in August and September are known to be quite fully reserved already.

The annual meeting of the Boston Baptist City Mission will be held in Dudley Street Church, May 15. One hundred churches and organizations will send delegates.

The formal call to assemble in Glasgow, Scotland, June 18-26, 1924, for the ninth convention of the World's Sunday-school Association has been issued from the New York office of the association. Hon. J. J. Maclaren, Justice of the Appellate Court of Canada, is president.

The forty-fourth anniversary of the Hall Bible class of the First Church, Boston, was celebrated recently. Among the speakers were Deacon Conray P. Hall, founder of the class, Mr. Arthur W. Baker, and the pastor, Rev. Austen K. de Blois, who is also teacher of the class.

Gautama the Buddha

By Wayne Gard

Yes, Gautama, when in the Bo-tree's shade
You'd found Enlightenment, and when in town
Or village street you walked, with yellow gown
And begging bowl, then many men delayed
Their work, and many held your teaching true
And sought, by conquering Desire, to gain
Deliverance from suffering and pain.
But when you died, they made a god of you.

They made a god of you because you failed
To hear the heart's unending bitter cry
That only one Unseen could satisfy;
It was the soul more than the mind that ailed.
So when men take the Galilean's Yoke,
Then, Gautama, alas, your Wheel is broke!

The East Church, Lynn, Mass., recently celebrated its forty-ninth anniversary. It was founded in 1874 with sixty-five members, five of whom are still members. The present membership in 661, fifty-four of whom were received the past year. Rev. Frank W. Padelford preached the anniversary sermon. Rev. Arthur E. Harriman is pastor.

Rev. John R. Garst, pastor of the Twenty-Third Avenue Church, Oakland, Cal., has accepted a call to the First Church, Spokane, Wash. Mr. Garst is attending both the Southern and Northern Baptist Conventions and will spend a little time in the East before taking up his new work. He has had a highly successful pastorate in Oakland and will follow Rev. John E. Smith who is now general director of the Michigan convention.

The Baptist churches of Kansas City, Mo., are planning a $500,000 hospital. It is hoped to begin building at an early date.

The church at Wauwatosa, Wis., on Sunday, Apr. 29, observed the twenty-fifth anniversary of the ordination of its pastor, Rev. George C. Alborn. He has been the pastor for more than five years.

The annual meeting of the New England District, Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, was held in the First Church, Malden, Mass., May 2-3. Mrs. William Q. Rosselle, wife of the pastor, welcomed the delegates.

The State of Georgia lost 13 per cent of its negro farm laborers last year because they migrated to the North. The influx means that provision for things spiritual as well as material must be made for this addition to the northern population.

The Chestnut Street Church, Philadelphia, has granted its pastor, Rev. Arthur C. Baldwin, a leave of absence. He will leave on June 21 for Los Angeles where he will supply the First Church during July; Fresno, First Church, Aug. 5; and the First Church, Seattle, for two Sundays. He will return to his Philadelphia work about Sept. 7.

The evangelical churches in Europe, which have recently established, with the aid and cooperation of the American churches, a central bureau as a clearing-house in all matters of relief, have sent Dr. Adolph Keller of Zurich, Switzerland, to bring to the attention of American Protestants the present condition of the Protestant churches of continental Europe. Doctor Keller has been one of the moving factors in outlining the project of a central body for Protestant relief administration in Europe and has been untiring in his efforts to get it on a working basis.

The twentieth annual session of the Foreign Mission Conference will be held at East Northfield, Mass., July 13-21. The study for the year 1923-24 will be Japan. Camp Salaam is for Baptist girls who attend the conference. Miss Gertrude Schultz, Misses Alma and Mary Noble and Miss Mary C. Peacock are among the instructors for the study classes. Miss Jessie Burrall will also be one of the faculty. Registration and inquiries should be addressed to Miss Elizabeth S. Sargent, 101 Centre St., Concord, N. H.

Rev. G. A. Leichliter, pastor of the Prospect Avenue Church, Buffalo, N. Y., is putting out some clever publicity. The church calendar for a recent Sunday carried a sketch of a golf player and the question is asked, "Golf or a sermon?" "Every man needs recreation. The out-of-doors is the world's most popular tonic. God made that and made it good. And it helps the flagging constitution too. But your soul needs strength and health as well as your body needs them. After all it is of greatest value and it is poor policy to develop the body at the expense of the soul and the returns are of questionable value. Do not be deceived! 'Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.' You would not live in a community where there was no church. Then why neglect the ones that are here. To church next Sunday."

We Practice What We Preach

THE BAPTIST believes in and advocates giving all the facts to the folks. We contend that individual Baptists have the right to know the best and the worst in all the situations that confront any Baptist organization in which they have a stake through the New World Movement or direct giving. We regret that it is ever necessary to go into "executive session." We believe we should avoid every appearance of "star chamber" methods. Better a hundred fold that some unpleasant facts should become public property than to have any one anywhere feel that things are being done in a corner, and that what our leaders most want of private Baptists is their cash. Our great denominational program of work is a Baptist program and Baptists will have to finance it and pay the debts if they are incurred. We greatly regret that the committee on future denominational program has felt that it was necessary to keep its plans so closely guarded on the purely technical ground that the committee was appointed by the convention and must first make its report to that body. That report concerns Baptists, not organizations as such. Well, what has this to do with the Kollum? We feel so keenly that there is danger in any method which does not come out frankly with all the facts that we have given on the front page of the paper a comparative statement of the financial condition of THE BAPTIST for the fiscal years 1921-1922 and 1922-1923—the period during which the present management of the paper has been directly responsible for its welfare.

What the Report Shows

1. The report shows that more individual Baptists subscribed and paid for THE BAPTIST this year than any other year since the paper started. Here are the figures: Subscription receipts: May 1, 1920-April 30, 1921, $40,920.45; 1921-1922, $49,047.33; 1922-1923, $52,118.91. The average subscription amounts to $2.11, since so many churches secure lists equal to 10 per cent of their memberships and thus avail themselves of the $2 rate.

2. This report shows that THE BAPTIST has not received this year one dollar from "subsidy," "budget allowance," "preferential advertising" or any such thing. We have also practically done away with any short-time special circulation.

3. The report shows that THE BAPTIST started the year without working capital and in spite of this handicap has paid its own way, taking all discounts, and shows a balance in the bank of $5,164.49 in excess of last year. Its bills receivable and paper inventory (paper on hand for which payment has been made) is $3,133.64 in excess of outstanding obligations. This is a little less than last year.

4. The condition indicated by this report makes it possible for us now to push for increased circulation without at the same time incurring a deficit. It has been hard to work zealously for new subscriptions when success along this line only increased the difficulty of financing the institution.

We Have Sinned

A denominational worker to whom we recently gave these facts about the financial standing of THE BAPTIST, said, "Killam, you are making a great mistake. Your policy of making the paper self-sustaining is a short-sighted policy." We bow in the dust. We have sinned. We took at face value the statement of our leaders that the most careful business policy and the strictest economy was not only desirable but imperative. We could have spent the net saving of the year, $23,392, but we felt if we could save it without seriously impairing the quality of the product that we were thus making a contribution in a very real sense to the common denominational weal.

The Baptist Congress and International Relationships

By James H. Franklin

AMONG all the distinguished visitors to America in recent years, perhaps no one has made a finer impression than Lord Robert Cecil, who has just sailed for England after spending a month in the United States. His simplicity, frankness and unobtrusiveness, pleased the many thousands who heard him tell of the achievements and possibilities of the League of Nations. His obvious candor and friendliness were persuasive, even when questioned by opponents of the league at the conclusion of addresses at formal dinners. But a close-up view of him when he was a guest of honor at a luncheon to which a few representatives of various denominations were invited, was particularly impressive.

In the smaller group gathered about the luncheon tables there were no reporters, and nearly every one was already in sympathy with the idea of American membership in the League of Nations, but not even there would Lord Robert attempt to tell us America's duty. He confessed that occasionally doubters had been found among the clergy of the Church of England, of which he is an ardent member, but so far as he knew, the ministers of the Free churches in Great Britain had supported the league unanimously. However, the chief point in his rather intimate conversation was to the effect that no scheme for the betterment of international relationships could possibly succeed except as moral and spiritual stimulus can be supplied. The very climax of his simple words to us was his declaration that no plan for the prevention of world cataclysms will prove effective unless the hearts of the rulers are disposed aright, and that for the development of the necessary influences in that direction there is no hope except through the efforts of the Christian forces.

If what Lord Robert Cecil said to us is true (and he but confirms what many men of light and leading are telling us), there rests on the Christian forces of the world a tremendous responsibility. Every denomination should ask what it can do, separately and cooperatively, at this hour to serve the cause of international peace. Naturally the thought of at least one member of the group, who heard the distinguished visitor, turned to the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm, and he felt confirmed in the opinion that Baptists should use the occasion to weld its forces into better instruments for the development of international justice and goodwill.

On a similar occasion in New York recently, the importance of American representation at the congress in Stockholm was again confirmed in the opinion of the writer of this article. An officer in the American Army of Occupation in Germany, who had returned to the United States only a few weeks earlier, and had just retired from active service, spoke very plainly of the world's need of the "simple things we learned at mother's knee." Before he was through the ex-officer added, "I am not a church man, and I am almost ashamed to say that I never read the Bible very much before I went to France, but when I found myself facing heavy responsibilities in the American Army of Occupation, where we were related on the one hand to the German population, and on the other hand to the French military authorities, I had to have a book of specifications. For such a book of specifications I turned to the Bible, and I discovered that there is no economic or political problem which cannot be settled through the application of its teachings."

When the retired army officer sat down, one of our group asked him to tell us America's duty at this hour, and the duty of the American churches. The second question received his first attention. He replied that the church people need to know more regarding the world situation, and that in his opinion, one of the best things which could happen would be for the pastors of American churches to visit Europe ad see the situation for themselves, then come home and report the actual conditions.

Some of us whose duties have taken us across the Atlantic since the World War, have often wished that many of our pastors could spend a few weeks in the devastated sections of Europe. Many of our pastors are now wishing for such an opportunity in connection with the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm, Sweden, July 21-27. A man in the far west, who has given nearly thirty years to home mission work, wrote me a few days ago inquiring if the committee to promote attendance had any way to help one who could manage only a part of his own expenses. Others have written to ascertain if they could work their way across the Atlantic on any of the steamers on which the delegates are sailing for Stockholm. Comparatively few are able to make the trip without assistance. In many cases such assistance could easily be provided if some one only called the attention of the congregation to the need and the opportunity.

It would mean a great deal to the churches themselves, it would broaden the vision of multitudes of young people, and it would help the communities in general, if a thousand pastors could go to Stockholm and spend several weeks in Europe next summer. The churches would receive a larger vision and their young people would live in a larger world. Moreover, large stimulus for the successful completion of the program of the New World Movement in the year 1923-24 might be engendered if a host of representatives of our churches were to catch at Stockholm a larger vision of world needs and of Baptist obligations.

It is not too much to hope that Stockholm will prove to be a mount of vision for the Baptists of the world, and a mount of dedication as well.

Fresh from the Field

As we go to press a telegraphed report of the financial condition for the fiscal year just closed comes from Dr. J. Y. Aitchison: "Reports to date would seem to indicate total income year just closing including about $1,000,000 designated funds approximates $7,500,000. This does not include income legacies, matured annuities, invested funds, amount of which unable to report as yet."

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Winter Hill Church, Somerville, Mass., will send the pastor of the church to the Northern Baptist Convention in Atlantic City.

The Congregational and Baptist church of Holden, Mass., recently conducted a joint campaign of religion. Rev. York A. King, Baptist, superintendent of evangelism for New England, lead the meetings. Ernest Naftzgar leading the singing.

In Hangchow, China, the Commissioner of Police for the Province last fall became a Christian and united with the church. Later he was elected to membership on the board of directors of the Y. M. C. A. He has made a record in politics, having held his present office, in spite of changes in governors every few years, for twelve years. Because of his strength of character and long service he is easily the most influential man in the province. His clear-cut stand means much in Christian circles.

It has been stated that a loan of 200 million francs would be floated for restoring the 8,000 churches that were destroyed in northern and eastern provinces of France. The work of reconstruction will be executed by a number of cooperative societies, formed for the purpose. In order to finance the building operations, these societies have formed a limited liability company which arranged a contract with the ministry of finances. Under this contract the indemnity due for the destruction of the church buildings will be paid in thirty annuities. These annuities will be used to amortize the present loan.

The annual meeting of the Central District of the two women's societies was held in St. Louis, Apr. 23-25. The keynote of the meeting was "Work," and the motto, "Working together with Christ." Mrs. F. J. Miller, president of the district, presided. Mrs. C. W. Peterson had charge of the program on which the following were speakers: Mrs. H. B. Montgomery, Mrs. G. Caleb Moor, Miss Alice Brimson, Miss Alma Noble, Dr. Katherine Mabie of Africa, Miss Pennington of Burma, Miss Pecchus of Bethel Neighborhood House, Kansas City, and Mrs. Clara D. Pinkham, president of the Missionary Training School.

We are glad to know that the negro Baptists of America hope to be well represented at the meeting of the Baptist World Alliance at Stockholm. Several of their well-known representatives have places on the program. With real heroism in many cases, our negro brethren have pressed their work until today the National Baptist Convention is one of the largest religious bodies in America. Indeed, if Dr. H. K. Carroll, who gathers statistics for the Christian Herald, is correct, the National Baptist Convention, with a total church membership of 3,426,506, is the largest Baptist body in the world, the Southern Baptist Convention coming second with 3,339,118. Northern Baptists number about 1,300,000. No one knows just how many Baptists there are in Russia. The representatives of the National Baptist Convention will be warmly welcomed in Sweden. Their participation in the congress should furnish inspiration to the meeting and prove a blessing to their own denomination.

The Baptist

Spiritual Dividends

AMERICAN Baptists waited six long years, after launching their first daring venture in foreign missions in 1814, before Judson baptized his first native convert. Last year our Northern Baptist missions alone reported 12,000 baptisms in the one year. What important investment ever waited longer for its first dividend or came ultimately to yield richer returns? If Judson in heaven is given a glimpse of the field where he toiled so terribly and suffered so unspeakably for results so meager at the first, or if Thomas Baldwin and William Staughton and John Williams and Luther Rice, recalling those seemingly hopeless six years, can look down upon the Burma of today, what would they say of the success of our investment in the New World Movement compared with theirs in the old Triennial Convention of a century ago?

One finds on our mission field of Burma today a thousand churches with a larger proportion of them self-supporting than is the case in Ohio or Illinois, the native Christians eagerly seeking education, assuming religious responsibility in their churches, giving generously of their slender resources—even sending money to help pay the debt of our missionary societies—sending out foreign missionaries of their own. So also in Africa, in China, and on the Chinese-Burmese frontier where Young is repeating his Pentecostal ingatherings, our work is triumphing in the hearts of men. Though inadequately supported from home and despite the riot of unrest and racial self-assertion which is upheaving the whole oriental world; though increasingly impatient of the dominance of any foreign nation, that world seems increasingly ready to bow at the feet of Jesus Christ.

And in America, as well, the three years of our great undertaking show rich spiritual results. The report by the statistician, H. K. Carroll, of the religious forces of the United States for the past year, as published in the Christian Herald of April 7, gives the gain of the Baptist bodies for the year as nearly a third of a million and the present membership as 8,303,824, making the Baptists again the largest of Protestant bodies in America. Reports throughout the year, and especially those from Easter time, show large accessions by baptism, a great chorus of new voices telling afresh the most thrilling story in the world, that of their birth to a new existence and an eternal hope through Jesus Christ. It is not strange for a single church to report hundreds of accessions in a year, and multitudes of churches report scores of converts and great quickening of church life.

Our Southern brethren lead in these inspiring reports. They have great eloquence and the power of moving appeal; theirs is the momentum of a mighty mass which accretes to itself additions like a moving avalanche; and most significantly of all, they have profound convictions, with unwavering confidence in their New Testament and baptistic message. Yet Northern Baptists too have notable records ot achievement. Generous Southern Baptists have even made some comparisons to our credit. Amid the difficult financial adaptations of these three years the churches have steadily advanced; amid diversities of opinion that threatened disruption the denomination has held together and held to its task. The redemptive work of the church has not merely continued; it has increased in extent and deepened in power; many new faces shining with the joy of the redeemed are seen in our churches throughout all the North.

It means much that the urticant efforts of troublers have not been able to turn aside the churches from their spiritual tasks. The burden of greatly-increased beneficence has not weakened the churches in their self-support, but they have as a rule increased their budgets for current expenses and made notable additions to property and equipment. But above all, souls have been won in increasing numbers and the spirit of devotion to Christ is a rising and not an ebb tide.

FOR the next year we may reasonably expect a quickening of pace, alike in financial and spiritual achievement, as we near the term of our great undertaking; and for the years thereafter we have faith to believe that our Lord will lead us, keep us busy and keep us straight. There are, of course, possibilities of denominational discord or of a discouraged apathy which would be worse than discord; we may be blind to the lessons of experience and slow in the rectification of our errors. If so we shall suffer. But our denominational craft has proved its buoyancy in many a storm. Or, to change the figure, we have again and again faced Giant Despair and passed by the open gate of Doubting Castle, and slipped perilously near the Slough of Despond. We have suffered many things from Mr. Facing Both Ways; but in the reassuring company of Mr. Greatheart and Mr. Faithful we have pressed on our pilgrim way, and we doubt not we shall see the Delectable Mountains and catch glimpses of splendor from the shining city where our Lord waits to welcome those who have "fought the good fight, finished the course, kept the faith!"

The Christian Journal

WHEREVER you find a growing measure of intelligent Christian truth you will find a similar measure of service, for in the realms of real Christianity to know the will and the way of the Lord is to do them.

The Bible is the supreme source of our intelligence concerning truth. We must know God and his way in Jesus Christ or we are lost. Let us have more Bible reading and not less of it, and a Christian weekly journal helps to bring this to pass.

Good books are practically essential, and he or she is poor indeed who does not find out in some measure what others think and feel about the Lord and his way and then relate that knowledge to his own course in life. To Bible reading, therefore, add good books in wise and balanced measure.

However, it will not do to stop there if you are a Christian, a church member and a part of our Baptist constituency. With a due regard for truth and your welfare we say you must read THE BAPTIST. We cheerfully admit it is not perfect. Neither are you. Furthermore each one can help the other.

There are some potent reasons why many thousands more of our Baptist folk should subscribe for their paper and we say this in spite of the fact that more people subscribed and paid for the paper this last year than ever before in its history. See the financial statement on the cover page.

Examine with us the reasons why the weekly issues of THE BAPTIST should be read by our constituency.

It is your paper. Your money is invested in it. Your people produce it. Your own brothers and sisters are the chief actors in the scenes it describes from week to week. A letter from home is always a blessing.

THE BAPTIST tends to promote unity. We can never expect all to think exactly alike in the world. We expect some differences of opinion. A weekly journal that aims to present what is being thought through by many minds helps us all to think things through in a prayerful way. The great majority of us—90 per cent—then find that we occupy substantially the same ground. That makes unity of a potent sort.

Those who differ with the majority of us in our unity of thought and balanced emphasis should be and are given Christian consideration and that is a further help towards unity.

Divisions come too often from a failure to get diverse and balanced information to the bulk of our constituency. THE BAPTIST and our other religious journals are designed to set before our people continuously that sort of information. The Spirit of God can then implant the seal of his approval upon all that is truth in his sight. That is very unifying.

Next, THE BAPTIST tends to promote growth.

The minds that are closed to new sources of Christian experience and enterprise do not grow, but die. Week by week the religious paper tells a story of revival, of missionary achievement, of church methods, of stewardship, of the plans and programs of achieving local churches, and brings to mind the work of men and women whose faces and voices have helped us on to God. Their growth thus becomes ours.

The Christian journal produces participation. Many of our failures result from ignorance. Failure is a barrier to participation.

Some time ago we were in a church where up to that time not a single copy of any denominational paper was taken. The church was "out of sorts" with its sister churches. The members were "slamming" their brethren in other churches and in their own. The pastor was poorly paid and half-starved in mind and soul. Some one read them the story of a California church that had reported in THE BAPTIST a piece of fine careful membership follow-up. It fired their vision. An hour's frank discussion followed and the whole evil atmosphere enmeshing a couple of hundred of people was dissipated and they went into action with fresh zeal. People must have information if they are to serve. THE BAPTIST brings it to its readers week after week.

The denominational weekly paper is a continuous forum of distinct educational value. We have long known that the pastors and churches that read it with more or less regularity are among those who constitute the elements of the denomination that produce the major portion of its dynamic and resources. Our Baptist future rests largely upon people who know. Not to know is a sin when knowledge can be easily had.

There is nothing else that exactly takes the place of the weekly religious paper in the home. A home where Christian people live without the visit of such a periodical is a home without one potent influence for Christ and his church. It is a home without all the needed sources of Christian intelligence. That means it is a home in danger.

THE BAPTIST should have a circulation of at least 150,000 copies and even at that figure it would be reaching less than half of our constituency. For the sake of the present and the future let us speedily increase the paid circulation until it reaches at least that number.

This cannot be done by wishing. Work alone will do it. Such work should enlist the cooperation of all our denominational agencies and leaders, for the paper is a vital factor in all their concerns.

Much talk has gone the rounds about this piece of work. It would seem to us as if the preparations had been completed and that this was the time to stop talking and get to work in earnest.

Censorship Once More

IN the Open Forum you will find that "an official of one of our denominational societies" identifies himself. You will note that he again calls in question the accuracy of our editorial and says, "Had we seen the editorial before printing we could have helped you to strengthen it by making it entirely accurate." We do not wish to go into detail to defend the position taken in the editorial in question, but we too find ourselves "involuntarily" forced to do so.

"On the March" is a great document. It was broadcasted to give us the necessary information for intelligent and sacrificial giving. It was largely from this document that we gleaned the information which formed the basis of our editorial. Turn with us to such pages as 49 and 52 and to the financial figures in the back part of the document. You will find here some very pointed facts—we have never before had reason to doubt that they were facts—and that the need was indeed grievous. After listing the buildings and equipment secured during the past three years, we read, "If only the amount sufficient to operate these plants and to provide missionaries enough to run them can be given, what will it not mean to vast multitudes in the non-Christian world!" Are we not to understand by this language that there is a real need and that the utility of this equipment depends on an "if"? If this statement is taken at face value you have official documentary warrant for the editorial. In addition to these official statements friends on the foreign field have informed us that the reduced allotments were not sufficient for the full use of their equipment. But why argue? We either have enough money and men to carry on the Lord's work in a way that is worthy of us as a denomination, or we are cramped and hampered in our work because of our failure to complete our financial task. Let us give our time and effort to getting the money and to doing the work. To be forever on the defensive is, even for an editor, unsatisfactory business.

Joy Fulfilled

JESUS said, in speaking to the Father, "And now come I to thee, and these things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves."

A wonderful bequest was that, made, not alone to those who had been given to him, "but for them which shall believe on me through their word." His must have been a great joy since it was made up of the knowledge that he was going back to the Father, and the time of his glorification was at hand. He was almost through with the work for which he had been sent—he had never failed in one least thing. So now we, if we live in the same perfect harmony and perfect obedience, may claim a full share in the legacy that is ours for the taking.

As Christians, many of us talk and act as though we are circumscribed instead of being empowered. We mourn, we anticipate calamity, we seem to delight in recital of sorrows and tribulations, whereas, we should be so filled and thrilled with the joy bequeathed us that we should know only courage and hope.

To be sure there is sorrow, ignorance, and wrong doing; but much has been accomplished since Christ took back his glory and it is the strong-hearted, the joy-laden, the faith-filled who achieve more than the doubtful and downcast.

Jesus was never a pessimist though he saw and knew the hardness of life; he did not bewail poverty although the poorest of us have more than he possessed; he did not talk of ill health and suffering even though he saw more of it than do we, for he recognized soul-sickness as we may not. He just worked and worked—too busy to complain, too full of love to hesitate, too full of faith to be discouraged.

Surely we stumble along like little children, but as we grasp the promises of our great textbook and realize that they belong to us, individually, we grow strong and rejoice with joy unspeakable.

What is the Baptist?

THE BAPTIST is a denominational organ. It represents the organized life and activities of all our local churches. Therefore it represents a wide variety of viewpoints and desires and all of those viewpoints and desires have a right to a balanced presentation in its pages as long as their objective is constructive and not destructive of the aims of the united body. No matter how diversified may be our individual viewpoints as local churches or as persons, we must never forget that the purpose of our organized life is to project and do certain large and wide-reaching pieces of work which would be impossible of accomplishment if attempted by local churches or people in their individual capacities. The pages of THE BAPTIST are open to discussion concerning our purposes and projects. We do not expect that all who enter into such discussions through our pages will see eye to eye, but we hope and expect that those discussions will always be carried on in a Christian spirit and without any divisive purpose. In that way we help form what is known as the denominational viewpoint and we also help carry out our denominational projects.

THE BAPTIST is a representative organ. The pages of this journal are not alone to be used to express official opinions and projects, but also to put before the constituency the opinions of those local churches and people whose representatives are those same officials just referred to. That some of the people will differ in certain methods of procedure from some official representatives is a matter of certainty, and the discussion of those differences is part of the process of a democracy. In opposing the desires or acts of an official we shall not be actuated by personal likes or dislikes. We believe in and honor the men and women whom the denomination has called to leadership, but in a democracy that does not mean we shall always agree with them or accede to their requests. THE BAPTIST must always preserve its representative capacity and be subject neither to official, personal, or mass domination. THE BAPTIST is a Christian organ. By this we mean that its purpose will aim always to promote the cause of Christianity and preserve the practices of the faith as we have come to believe them essential to the growth of our cause.

We shall endeavor to have a wise and gentle Christian courage even when sharp things are said or unjust imputations are aimed at the editor.

We shall sacrifice much to be fair; and when we say that, we realize that such a statement does not mean that we shall ever feel called upon to sacrifice the truth in order to be fair. The truth and fairness live together where there is true Christianity. This journal, therefore, will always aim to be a representative Baptist organ and maintained upon Christian principles.

An Address to Northern Baptists

The one constraining power, the only adequate power, is the love of Christ. Here is our supreme task—just to follow him, just to be like him.

By E. A. Hanley

WHAT shall it profit us if we gain a hundred million dollars and lose our souls? Surveys are necessary; programs are needful; promotion boards have their place; campaigns are in order, though when multiplied they become a weariness to the flesh. But what, if having all these, we lose our souls and incidently fail to get the hundred million dollars?

Let no man regard these words as a counsel of despair. That our efforts during the last four years have been a great and notable achievement is surely apparent to all. Indeed, it is hard to think what would have happened had it not been for the New World Movement. Nor have we begun to reach the limits of our devotion.

We Do Not Live by Programs

Yet, with all that has been accomplished, we stand to lose, perhaps more than we stand to gain, in the larger service of Baptists to the world. Many indeed have been lifted into a new sense of privilege in the matter of giving. This is a very great gain. Yet there are those who have been pressed so hard that they are likely to turn away in disappointment, seeking spiritual comfort from some other source. We do not live by programs and at length people grow weary of them. Then there are many who for various reasons have not been with us in this great task. They have been left cold, untouched by our appeal. They are open, however, to the pull of worldliness on the one hand or the coming of religious vagaries on the other. All in all, therefore, we are facing the peril of a certain spiritual impoverishment — a peril which other great denominations as well as our own need to consider.

In particular, we are in danger of commercializing the work and worship of our churches. The voice of our leadership has lost something of its prophetic note. Our preaching, our journalism, and even our private devotions have had a string attached for the purpose of raising money. We have almost come to believe in the divinity of the dollar. We are obsessed with budgets and allotments, with deficits and delinquent pledges. It is not alone what we have done but also what we have failed to do. We have thought of money, sought money, prayed for money until we have almost left God and the soul out of account.

We have been provincial as a great Christian body, thinking much of our own affairs and forgetful of the greater interests of the kingdom, and just at the time when the New World for which so many have suffered is in the making. We have caught the spirit of selfish isolation which has possessed America. Our deliberations have resembled a committee of ways and means. We are like a church that uses up its strength in an effort to raise money through dinners, fairs and bazaars until the good women are almost nervous wrecks. We have made much of executive work, have called many men from the pastorate, and have put greater burdens on those who remain. Surely this is not the way of largest service to the kingdom of God.

We have been leaving vast issues out of account. All about us is a world of need and we have come to a state of mind that to some degree disqualifies us for serving it. We have not seen the peril of America with its wealth, its industrial conflict and its shameful retreat before the call of international responsibility. How dumb was our journalism in the midst of the nation-wide coal and railroad strikes. We have been playing over and over again one tune, entitled "A Hundred Million Dollars", and a situation that imperils everything, even the future of the church itself, has scarcely claimed our attention.

The Nature of Our Meetings

We have hardly noted the gropings of men for light in this troubled hour, for a better understanding of the truth of God. When, in modern times, has there been so great confusion? When were men so caught by the dogmas of the past, so enmeshed by literalism in their interpretation of the Bible? Was there ever such need for earnest teaching of fundamentals that are really fundamental? Did ever people gather as ours have done, so wistful of heart—and what have we given them? Often our meetings have had the nature of a political convention rather than an assembly of Christians seeking to know and to do the will of God.

Self-Criticism Needed

What now ought we to do?

First of all we stand in need of wholesome self-criticism. The fundamentalists, so-called, and the liberals, so-called, are ready to criticise each other. Some of us are prepared to deal with our teachers, and our teachers are prepared to make reply. Oh for self criticism! It is time for judgment to begin with each of us, with each group, and then extend to the ideals and ways of our denomination. We need nothing more than a teachable spirit and a new appraisement of ourselves in the light of the greater work of the kingdom. So may we recover perspective and find where we really are.

We need to review our whole business method of administration. Are we attempting to do more than we are prepared to undertake? Are we seeking to live within our income and to avoid debts and deficits? "Impossible" you say? I am not convinced on that point. We all know about war prices but have we been doing business on sound business principles? I give it as a guess, which is not altogether a conjecture, that in the past we have forfeited the support of large givers in many quarters because our ways of business administration did not meet with their approval. I have long been asking myself whether we have the right system of budgets, of reserves for emergency, of estimating our receipts; and whether we must not come to the policy of being sure of our income before we spend it. If in these matters we lack sound method and then have to extricate ourselves from a difficult situation by shouting "crisis" and "deficits" we shall find our people growing more and more unresponsive. And just this very thing is happening.

I believe I voice a moral right of every giver to the denomination when I say that our leaders are under sacred obligation to shape our business policy so as to get us out of debt and keep us out of debt. I know there are emergency calls, imperative needs, situations that cannot wait, but if we do not follow sound business methods we shall come to sore distress from which special campaigns and frantic appeals cannot deliver. I am not suggesting misappropriation of funds—no one is thinking of that. I am saying that in our zeal for advance work and in the urgency of needs we may be swept along to undertake expenditures without first counting the cost and reckoning our income. It is true that war prices caught us but is it not true that they caught us with a business method that was taking too great risk? Somewhere beyond the stress and strain of the present hour I see the coming of a new business policy when we shall proceed with careful budgets, with due reserves for emergency, and with assured reckoning of income, and the name of that new era will be We-Pay-As-We-Go. If that day is to come our executives and directors must begin to work toward such a policy here and now. It will be hard to do this in missionary work. But in the end it will be harder not to do it.

Our Greatest Asset

We ought never to forget that next to trust in God, our greatest asset is the confidence and devotion of our people. On the whole they have done wonderfully well and there is no end to their devotion if only we prove ourselves worthy of their trust and support. Here is a beautiful story. A great preacher came from Australia to our fair city opposite the Golden Gate. His church needs a new meeting house. He met the people in their homes and tried to prepare them for a great spiritual adventure. Then on Palm Sunday they brought their offerings. After the message, the people pressed forward and left their gifts on the communion table. Without solicitation they gave more than $100,000. Truly this way of giving sounds like a story from the Bible. It leads, it inspires, it commands, as drives and campaigns could never do, and it will grow.

I wonder whether we have been dealing wisely with our people in the method of our appeals. I am afraid that allotments, drives, canvasses, will prove of less and less avail, and gradually will harden the heart. There is a compulsion of the spirit which we have not quite known how to employ, and which is mighty above all things. It comes by way of reaching the heart and of dedicating the whole life. Such giving will sanctify and enrich, and its bounty will increase. Perhaps we shall need all the machinery we now have but we certainly need a new spirit and an appeal that will engage a new sense of responsibility.

Are we not called to a fresh inquiry into the mind of God? It is not the dogmas or the literalism of scripture, but the living work of God, which demands our thought. What is the will of God for this time, for America, for the church, and for us who have felt that we have a great witness to bear? Can we recover the spirit of prophecy, not of blind prediction as to the future but interpretation of the eternal word of God? The fundamentalists are right in placing Christ at the center. If only they had a different spirit and method! The liberals are right in standing for freedom of the faith. If only they had more boldness and would deal with the common people! We must all gather about Christ and are called to be teachable, one and all. There is but one vital question: Can we be taught? Can we learn? More light is to break, light that will come like the dawn, only we must give ourselves with entire devotion to know the mind of God else we shall be as those who having eyes did not perceive and having ears did not understand.

A Prayer

O GOD, who art the Father-God, who made the mother's heart and made it like thine own, take care of these men and women who suffer through their children's sin! O God, who dost love us all, keep our boys and girls from the sin and shame which bruise the souls of those who love them best!—Charles F. Aked.

The whole world is in need of a fresh revelation. To receive this would be the highest service we could ever render. Search where we will, a new insight into the mind of God is the creative power of the kingdom. On every hand men are feeling today that some great new epoch is at hand. The time is ripe and anything may happen — another Reformation, another Wesleyan movement, another great revival, some new crusade. Who knows what may come? And are not Baptists with their adherence to the sacred scripture and their freedom of interpretation without the handicap of authoritative creeds, in a peculiar position to catch the new vision and pass it on to the world? Their varied constituency, even their diverse views, may qualify them for being an oracle of God to this age, if only they will seek and be teachable and learn together.

Renewed Loyalty

We must summon ourselves to renewed loyalty to Christ. We need to hear and consider again: "If any man would come after me . . . " and "Except a man . . . he cannot be my disciple." We are only half Christian. We live in a society that has the outward graces of Christianity but inwardly much of the spirit of paganism. From money grubber to university professor we are following Christ afar off, if indeed we are following him at all. We need a new type of Christian, a new depth of experience, the kind which the Master required long ago. We must look unto him and be shamed out of our littleness, our uncharity, our selfishness, our worldliness. The one constraining power, the only adequate power, is the love of Christ. Here is our supreme task—just to follow him, just to be like him. To be a people filled with his spirit is the noblest service we can render to the world. And if we follow him, we shall be used of God and we shall have all the funds he can trust us with. But if we do not put him first nothing else can avail. Indeed our partial failure lies chiefly in our half-hearted discipleship. We must have again the tongues like as of fire and speak from a flaming heart.

And what about the New World Movement? Let us go on earnestly, patiently, without harassing our brethren and without losing heart, to achieve all that we can achieve, and may the Lord give us special wisdom to shape our course after April 30, 1924. But let us know, that we need new vision, new business method, new insight into the mind of God, new trust in dealing with our people, new loyalty to the Christ—and then indeed we shall be ready to have part in the divine movement of making a New World.

Pentecost Outpentecosted

BY HORACE J. NICKELS

THE night had not yet passed. It was that darkest of all hours just before the dawn. We stepped out on the boulevard which runs the length of the Methodist mission compound. At the gateway with difficulty we roused the sleeping keeper who greeted us with his never-ceasing smile. The great doors opened as we passed out and then closed behind us. Stillness reigned over all save for the sound of an early-rising shopkeeper making preparations in his tiny store for perhaps the busiest of all days of the year in Peking—the day before Chinese New Year; or for the occasional pop of a firecracker set off by some celebrator of the holiday season.

The noise of an approaching car reached our ears. It rounded the corner of the wall and drew up beside us just on the dot of the appointed hour. Then as Doctor Davis, the North China field secretary of the Methodist mission, and I settled comfortably back in our seats the auto moved off through the hutungs and out on the avenues of the great city. We passed frowning watch-towers, through graceful Oriental arches silhouetted in soft relief by the night, and down broad highways lined with great legation buildings. The streets displayed few signs of life, but now and then we met a lonely ricsha coolie or a pedler who had spent the night manufacturing the paper lanterns which he now had for sale. We sped along past the Temple of Heaven, and when a few minutes later we drew up with an abrupt stop, we found ourselves just beneath the glowering walls of old Peking.

A Sealed City

The gates were still bolted for the night. This ancient practice of sealing the entrances to the city so that no one may come in or go out during the hours of darkness is yet preserved. Doctor Davis and the driver alighted and stirred up the guards. It was quite impossible for them to open the gates before the customary hour. Doctor Davis explained that he was on an official errand for General Feng Yu Hsiang. This impressed the men but they were still loath to move. Then Doctor Davis asked to be allowed to telephone to the captain of the guard. This worked the trick. After a moment or two of hesitation on the part of the police to "save their faces" the first huge doors swung wide to permit our passage. As the second gate began to open a great commotion arose without. Through the aperture we could see in the dusk the forms of scores of pedlers who had been squatting expectantly about the gateway now trying to force an access to the city. We forced our way through their midst as we heard the rough commands of the guards and the clatter of the great bolts behind us.

It was a country road over which we now traveled, but the influence of General Feng could already be felt by the speed we were able to achieve on it. Road-mending is one of his soldiers many occupations. For some distance we passed multitudes of farmers and pedlers, not such early risers as their associates, hurrying toward the great walls we were fast leaving behind us.

Horace J. Nickels, with his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Nickels, has been traveling during the past year with a view to studying Christian missions and Christian work throughout the world. He writes: "Several weeks ago I was one of a very few privileged to witness the most remarkable event in the history of missions in China—the baptism of 4,100 men of General Feng Yu Hsiang's army into the Christian church. I was the only one present outside of the pastors who administered the ordinance. The day was thrilling in every respect. I had the opportunity of coming in touch with the general himself and was his guest at luncheon. At the suggestion of several of the ministers who were there, I have written an article describing the day in full. This is the first and only full account of the day that has been offered to any paper."

When we had gone three miles we found ourselves approaching one of those few remaining royal archways which add charm to the city of Peking. As we passed under the arch we were accosted by several soldiers to receive our road tax and present us with the necessary pass. This road tax serves a double purpose. Not only does it help provide maintenance for the highway but it also affords a means of keeping a check on all automobiles leaving Peking. With the combined barricade of the city walls and this road guard, escape for robbers is made almost an impossibility.

After leaving the archway the first dim rays of light began to fringe the distant horizon. Dawn came slowly, bringing with it the promise of a grey, bleak day—not at all the kind we had anticipated. The landscape afforded us only an outlook on a bare, desolate countryside, particularly unattractive in this winter season and on this dark, cold day. A heavy grey dust, the kind for which Peking is famous, covered all objects in sight and blew in such clouds about us that we were most thankful for our closed car.

We were about six miles from the city walls when the tiny village of Nan Yuan came into sight. As we entered its narrow streets, a line of donkeys laden with marketable goods and driven along by their owner were the only inhabitants to greet us. We passed quickly through the town and emerged on a great open tract of land, acres in extent, of considerable width and stretching in length as far as the eye could see.

"This," said Doctor Davis, "is the general's drill ground." His words brought me suddenly to the realization that we must be already close to our destination—the military camp of China's famous soldier, General Feng Yu Hsiang, and his Christian army.

Nor did I have to wait long for confirmation. A large, low-walled compound, above whose parapets peeped the grey-tiled roofs of the army barracks, now confronted us—a section of the winter quarters of the troops. We did not, however, enter this compound but, passing its guarded entrance, above which were crossed the draped regimental colors and the rainbow flag of the Chinese republic, we took a sharp turn to the right and drew up in front of military headquarters. Built of grey brick and according to the requirements of the most humble Chinese architecture, it composed an entire compound in itself, the very inmost section of which, where the colors floated, was occupied by the dwelling apartments of the general and his official reception room. Surrounding this inner sanctuary was the customary court. This court was enclosed by a quadrangular building in which the aides de camp and the evangelists took up their abode. An outer court circled this, and the whole was compassed by a low wall.

With the Workers

At the arched gateway five guards stood sentinel. Our car stopped and simultaneously another drew up behind us. It brought with it Doctor Felt and Doctor Lowry, one of God's saints now over eighty years of age. Both are numbered among the Methodist workers in Peking. They were on the same mission as we—to administer the ordinance of baptism to the hundreds of recent converts in the Christian army. The men who were to be received into the church had yielded their hearts to the Lord Jesus months ago, but in accordance with General Feng's regulations they had first been obliged to take a course of intensive Bible training and pass a rigid examination. Then for the last two weeks they had been attending a series of evangelistic services conducted by some of the Methodist pastors, which had been kindling the emotional fires and preparing their spiritual selves for the climax of their religious experience—this great day which was now at hand.

We alighted and greeted the ministers and while we were talking we heard from behind approaching footsteps. Turning about we met the welcoming smile of Rev. Hsu Kun Hsiang, head chaplin of the Christian army. He invited us into the evangelists' quarters. So with much clattering of weapons on the part of the guards and answering salutes from us, we passed through the archway, traversed the courtyard and entered two adjoining sleeping apartments of the outer quadrangular building. These were heated only by a tiny stove; no truly Chinese house is heated.

In the first room we found Doctor Hobart, another of the Peking missionaries completing his morning toilet. In the next room were gathered a half dozen or more Chinese evangelistic workers ready for the eventful day, at present enjoying a congenial chat. We joined the circle and waited till Doctor Hobart was ready to start. Then the party divided into two groups which set out at once for the two appointed places where services were to be conducted.

Our division consisted of Doctor Davis, Doctor Lowry and Doctor Felt. Our destination proved to be another similar walled compound, separated from headquarters only by a few yards and consisting of a number of grey brick, grey-tiled barracks and several large sized areas of drill ground. Into one of these open spaces we drove and parked the cars. A body of troops from the Eighth Brigade already filled the square and many more were coming at double time—coming at double time to be baptized. The engine of our car had scarcely stopped when we were warmly greeted by a kindly appearing Chinese gentleman, garbed in a brown silk shaam, whose face spoke clearly the secret of his heart. This was no other than Rev. Liu Fang, formerly pastor of Asbury Methodist Church,now district superintendent of the Methodist mission, the man who baptized General Feng and who acts as his closest advisor on all religious matters.

We were just shaking hands with the pastor when we heard a slight commotion among the troops and perceived the handsome figure of Brigadier General Li Ming Chung of the Eighth Brigade approaching our party. The brigadier general, about six feet in height, was dressed in the regulation gray uniform. On his shoulders were gold braid epaulets adorned with the three stars denoting his rank, and his officer's cap displayed a broad band of gold braid. Across his chest, hung from his shoulder a wide yellow strap ornamented with a tassel at the end and provided with proper fastenings for his official sword, which at this time, however, was not at his side. General Li speaks not a word of English. All our party save myself spoke Chinese. But his firm handgrasp and genial smile extended just as cordial a welcome.

A Look Around

The conversation continued in Chinese. Being unable to take any interest in it I began to look about me. The grounds were clean and well cared for. The nearby barracks, from what I could see of them, looked equally neat. A row of stalls, running along the north wall of the compound, sheltered a number of the officers' horses which looked well groomed and well-housed—a contrast to the average Chinese ponies. An interesting custom soon attracted my attention. Now and again a coolie squad about its work or a newly arrived body of troops marched past us. As soon as these came within the prescribed distance from the brigadier general, they swung at once into the famous goose step by way of salute. Except for the fact that this particular step has become odious to us through its connection with Prussian militarism, I was forced to admit to myself that it afforded an easy and effective means of salute.

After several minutes of conversation had taken place, Doctor Davis spoke to me. "We will move on now to the meeting." At once the brigadier general started off and we followed close behind. By now the designated troops were drawn up in the square facing a low rectangular building, similar in architecture to all its companions, and as we passed by them to enter the hall 800 men clicked to attention.

Within the building we were greeted by the salute of 200 soldiers (all that the small hall could accommodate) who rose from the floor, and a few from benches, on which they had been sitting. Our service began shortly after seven o'clock. The men were divided into two sections, seated in the wings of the building, while a low platform was raised in the center to command both ends. We took our seats beside this platform upon which the brigadier general mounted and gave a brief order. The body rose to its feet of one accord and there broke upon that still morning air the stirring measures of "Onward Christian Soldiers." Never before, and I am sure never again will those strains move me as they did sung by these actual soldiers of Christ. The music ceased, and while every head was bowed the inspiring voice of Doctor Lowry invoked the Heavenly Father's presence at all the services of the day. The brigadier general announced the passage of scripture which was to be the lesson of this service, and from every pocket appeared those two books which are most intimately associated with the lives of the Christian soldiers, the Bible and the hymnal.

General Li paused. Two men near the platform were having difficulty in locating the passage. The great man stepped down from his place and went to their assistance, then resumed his former position and in his clear ringing voice continued the reading. The words were from the Gospel according to John. When the reading was finished, Doctor Felt gave a brief talk to the men emphasizing the importance of the step they were about to take. But with these men there was no danger of careless or hasty decision. General Feng, as I have said, is most stringent in this respect. So fearful is he lest one of his soldiers should be lacking in knowledge for efficient church membership, that after each man who desires to ally himself with the Christian church has taken the prescribed course of Bible study and has passed a thorough examination, the major having control over that particular candidate must give a signed guarantee which holds him sponsor for the applicant's fitness. These are the views of General Feng which he himself expressed in a recent address: "Don't be so anxious to increase the membership of your church. See that the people who enter the church know what they are doing and are worthy to enter the church. Recently in my army 1500 men applied to enter the church, and after they had been carefully examined by Doctor Gailey and some of the chaplains all but 400 were refused. We must see that the church is filled with people who love the Lord and know what they are doing."

I say, therefore, there was little need of emphasizing to these men the importance of the step they were about to take. However, General Feng takes every opportunity and means of keeping them reminded of their obligations. So when Doctor Felt had concluded his talk, Rev. Liu Fang began a series of questions prepared for such occasions. Simple they were but heartsearching. When he ceased, the baptisms began.

General Li held in his hands the official orders of General Feng, giving the names of those accepted for baptism. These he began to read. As each name was called, the man answered with military promptness, at the same time jumped to his feet and hurried to join the line of bowed heads which was thus forming down the center aisle past the platform. Forty men were all that could be placed comfortably in this line, so as soon as General Li had called forty names he stopped. Two bowls, the kind ordinarily found on a Chinese table, were produced and a can of water. The bowls were filled. Then General Li took one and a colonel of his the other. Doctor Lowry joined the brigadier general while Rev. Liu Fang joined the colonel and each pair went to the extremities of the line where they began in this rough but solemn way to baptize these souls "in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost." (We cannot help but feel that the scene would have been far more impressive and more truly scriptural had the men been literally baptized—"buried with Christ in baptism."—Editor). To each soldier's coat was attached a tag bearing his name and this facilitated the baptism greatly. When all of the group had received the benediction they returned quietly to their place with a mark of inexpressible joy written on their faces, while in soldierly tones a chorus of the brigade sang "Oh, happy day that fixed my choice on Thee, my Master and my Lord."

By Forties

Another forty men formed in line, another forty bowed heads received the ordinance by which they proclaimed to the world Christ as their Saviour and Lord, another forty gladdened hearts turned away as the strains of the familiar tune swelled through the hall. And so it went until the 200 were baptized. But things were moving too slowly for Doctor Davis. During all this time he had been conducting a preparatory service with the rest of the brigade which stood outside the building. All those men were ready and waiting to receive baptism. So at his suggestion, General Li marched the troops to a nearby barrack whose veranda served as a platform, and there the ceremony continued. Doctor Lowry, Doctor Davis, Doctor Felt and Mr. Fang were now baptizing as rapidly as the solemnity and reverence of the occasion would permit. The brigadier general and members of his staff carried the bowls while the four ministers went down rank after rank. When about half the men had been baptized, General Li marched them off to still another barrack where he and Doctor Lowry addressed them.

The service ended about 10:30 and we all went over to the officers' mess, where we sat around for a chat—though conversation was in Chinese. The room was a long narrow one with Y. M. C. A. posters tacked all over the walls, telling about "keeping the wolf from the door" and admonishing the reader to remember that "you can't satisfy an automobile appetite on a ricsha salary."

By and by the men decided it was time to return to headquarters, which we did. We sat in the rooms mentioned previously as occupied by the evangelists and awaited the hour for General Feng to receive us. Once we attempted to gain admittance but found that the general, sick and worn out by a midnight trip to the capital, was still abed. We returned to our conversation which lasted until 11:30 when, at length, the general summoned us.

A sentinel conducted us through the inner courtyard to the doorway of the private apartments. There we were met by several orderlies, who ushered us into a fair sized reception, half dining hall. The room was furnished in very plain style, befitting an army headquarters.

"The Christian General"

We were scarcely seated when there was a rustling from the adjoining apartment, the draperies of the private doorway parted, and into the room stepped Feng Yu Hsiang, today known to all the world by his honoring title "the Christian general." I at once found myself faced with the realization that General Feng was not the sort of man I had pictured in my fancy. I had expected to meet a type more like Brigadier General Li, an official of striking appearance, a man particular about his dress, a host possessed with easy manner. I found myself face to face with a figure not at all prepossessing in appearance, an officer dressed no better nor with more care than his privates, a man rather awkward in motion and seemingly lacking in natural grace. But I also found myself confronting a tall, heavy set man of distinctly military bearing, on whose face a mark of strong character was written, a genial personage who seemed as if he would be the best sort of a friend if one would but give him a chance, and yet a soldier who feared neither man nor devil. And these are just the characteristics which have made General Feng great. He is a plain man, a soldier who has come up from the ranks by his own labor, possessed with little scholastic ability but with a big strong heart, a strong will and a deep love of God in his soul. What more can be laid to the credit of any man except to recount actual instances where these virtues have born fruit, and in the case of General Feng they are far too numerous to mention. General Feng is the Cromwell of his age, but his heart is more like that of the great Lincoln. Even today he holds in his hands the balance of China's political power. Once given free rein he could, no doubt, place this great republic in its rightful position among the nations of the world, and if we may judge from present day conditions he alone of all her leaders is capable of such a task.

We had now been chatting for several minutes when tiffin was announced. The general conducted us to the table and seated us. He speaks only a few words of English so I could not enjoy the conversation all through the lunch hour as I should have liked. Nor could I get acquainted with the general through words, though it was a privilege to sit by and look on. The only time he addressed me was just as we were sitting down. He asked Rev. Hsu to inquire if I could eat with chopsticks. I do make a bold attempt. The lunch, however, with all its varied Chinese dishes, many of them very watery in consistency, taxed my skill to the utmost. But then following the Chinese mode of eating with a great deal of noise thrown in as a mark of courtesy, I managed to get through the meal very comfortably.

Luncheon over, it was time to be starting for our next meeting. So after saying our thank-yous to the general, who bowed us politely well out of the door, we took the cars back to the same compound where our morning service had been conducted.

Seven hundred men of the Twenty-fifth Brigade were assembled on one of the drill grounds. They were drawn up around three sides of an imaginary square, while on the fourth side a row of chairs and a table was arranged for the evangelistic party. In the center of the square was a bench to serve as a platform. When we had taken our appointed positions, Brigadier General

NEWLY BAPTIZED LISTENING TO GENERAL LI

Sung in his genial way announced a hymn, and presently this body of Christ's followers, now about to publicly declare allegiance to him, were swelling that familiar song of loyalty which none of us has ever sung more feelingly—"Take the name of Jesus with you."

The service in all respects was similar to that of the morning. There was the prayer, the talk, the questions, the baptism. Doctor Lowry this time gave the talk, for the Chinese greatly revere a man of his age and respect his opinion. He told these candidates of the church about all the temptations that would come to them through the years, and at the close of his speech he asked them whether, when the time comes for them to leave the army and return to their own homes away from the Christian environment, they would be loyal followers and earnest workers for the Master or whether they would forget their love for Jesus. How strong and determined was their shout of answer: "Never!"

Again, as in the morning, the men formed in line in reply to the official roll call, again the ceremony was performed.

When the service was over I was introduced to Mr. Pettis, the head of the Peking Union Language School, who had been present at the meeting. He was anxious to have an interview with General Feng so we took him over to the headquarters and Rev. Liu tried to arrange it for him. But the general was not there and though we waited a long while he did not return. It drew near the appointed hour when we should have our last opportunity of witnessing such a tremendous spectacle as we had been privileged to see already twice today, and so Doctor Davis and I set out on foot for the Twenty-fifth Brigade compound. We had not gone far, however, when we were overtaken by Doctor Felt in his car, so we jumped in and he ran us over to the officers' mess.

Now in front of the mess hall is the largest of all the drill grounds in the Twenty-fifth Brigade compound, a great open area surrounded by barracks, and already it was well filled with the troops which were rapidly pouring in to receive the ordinance of baptism. Two brigadier generals, General Sung and General Liu, were commanding the maneouvers. As each body of soldiers arrived, the men were checked off on the roll and moved into their proper positions. But since there were in all some 1400 present it took quite a time to get them in order. Meanwhile, we were served with tea in the officers' mess, where we sat and conversed, from time to time stepping without the curtained doorway to watch the movements of the men. At length, all was in readiness, we took our places in the center of that great body of soldiers and the service began.

4,100 Souls Added

What a fitting climax it was to this wonderful day. How fervently we joined in that beautiful expression of the heart: "Nearer My God to Thee"; how splendidly Doctor Davis prayed, how earnestly the Rev. Chen Heng Te of the Methodist Seminary talked, how attentively the men listened, and how stirring were their replies to the Bible questions he put to them. With one accord, like the inspiring shout of victory at a great athletic contest, came their answering vows of loyalty to Jesus Christ. Then quietly, reverently the baptisms took place. And while they were still going on General Sung stepped out into the quadrangle and in his warm but dignified tone suggested that his men spend their moments of waiting in communion with their Lord. Who could not sense the spirit of that hour? Who could forget that scene—1400 bowed heads, 1400 lives gladly offered up in devoted service to their Master! And so as we watched this last group receive the beautiful ordinance, "how our hearts burned within us," for we realized that when we totalled the baptisms of that day in the camp of the Christian army we could say in the words of the scripture: "And the same day there were added unto them about 4,100 souls."

The day of days is over. The troops are leaving the field. Soft twilight is falling over all. We hear the clear, far-away call of bugle. Far down the road we see the line of march as one regiment returns to its distant barracks. While we look we see the men swing behind the hills and vanish from our sight, and as they go a faint echo is wafted back to us on the evening breeze:

"Onward Christian Soldiers, marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus going on before."

Lord, we thank thee that miracles are not vaporous dreams of the long ago. We are grateful to thee for those which we are permitted to witness. We thank thee, our Heavenly Father, for the influence of such a man as General Feng Yu Hsiang, and we rejoice with great joy for this day that has outpentecosted Pentecost.

The New Testament on Social Service

By Thurman F. Sowers

MUCH has been written and still more has been preached concerning the social teachings of Jesus, but the field, covered by the theme of this paper, thus far, has been scarcely more than opened. Obviously a paper of this scope cannot hope to make a very definite contribution to the subject in hand, but we will have accomplished something of real value if we succeed in pointing out the direction along which our study must proceed.

First of all, let us determine upon some working definitions; then let us indicate the plan we shall follow in our investigation. By "social service," we understand, is meant a form of service which tends directly to elevate and to improve society through the bettering of the conditions and of the customs under which mankind lives. By the "New Testament," we have in mind these faithful records of the teachings and actions of Jesus together with the account of the first Christian leaders in their endeavor to put these teachings into working shape. For the purpose of this study, we shall endeavor to free ourselves from traditional or doctrinal bias of any sort and to search the documents before us for the facts in the case.

The Teachings of the Master

May we look first at the teachings and doings of the Master as recorded in the synoptics; then, as recorded in the fourth Gospel: finally, may we study the various conceptions of these teachings as we find them advocated by the several schools of thought represented by the early Christian leaders.

1. When we go to the first three Gospels with an open mind, we are struck with the fact that Jesus opens his public ministry with the proclamation of a program of social service. "The kingdom of God (of heaven) is at hand," is his challenging message of reform. (of Mark 1: 15.) It is true that the Messianic hope of the Jews had developed into a more or less spiritualized conception of redemption, but it was not at all difficult to awaken a sympathetic response to the suggestion that the kingdom might, after all, be tangible and real. Especially after the revival under the leadership of John the Baptist had actually taken hold of the people, Jesus found no difficulty in talking the kingdom. Towards the latter part of his ministry we find the conflict not so much between the spiritual and the literal conceptions of the kingdom, but rather between the political and national as against the social and the universal. "It is not," says Jesus, "here or there: it is within you." (cf. Luke 17: 20 and 21.) Passing over all exegetical problems involved here, we are still certain that Jesus had reference to a reformed social order here on this earth through the working out of his principles of the inner life. So far as we can discover, Jesus never abandoned the hope of the universal kingdom of God through the triumph of his principles of living. (See Gould—"The Biblical Theology of the New Testament," pp. 11, 12.)

Jesus' apparent estimation of the worth of John the Baptist as it bears upon his mission is not less direct in support of this thesis than in his kingdom program. Now, John the Baptist was not a theologian. His stirring challenge caught the ear of society, and society had no confusion in thought as to what John the Baptist considered fundamental. "Bring forth, therefore, fruits worthy of repentance," (Luke 3: 8a,) and, in the same sentence, he charges them to abandon doctrinal and theological conceptions of "salvation" and "redemption," in favor of correct social life. Note carefully his response to the various social groups who question him as to their conduct. Now, this is the same man whom Jesus terms "The greatest born of woman." (Matt. 11: 11.)

We shall probably come closer to Jesus' own conception of his real mission in life if we allow him to speak for himself. To his own townsfolk, Jesus stated plainly, definitely and with emphasis upon the divinity of his authority that his was a social service mission. Note the terms used: "Open the eyes of the blind;" "bind up the broken hearted;" "heal the sick;" "heal them that are bruised;" "set at liberty them that are bound," and the like. (Luke 4: 16ff.) It would appear from this that Jesus has subjected himself to the just charge of forwarding a social gospel. (See George Jackson—"The Teachings of Jesus," Ch. 6. pp. 83ff.)

As though we could not be trusted to catch his meaning from a single statement of his life task, Jesus paused, in the midst of his work, to lay down the underlying principles of his kingdom enterprise. A glance at the Sermon on the Mount as a whole shows Jesus bringing his social gospel directly into comparison with the doctrinal and ceremonial "gospel" of the Jewish people. Note that after every one of his wonderful "But I say unto you," he lays down some definite course of action or conduct with reference to society or to one's fellows. Doctor H. C. King—(Ethics of Jesus, Ch. 8, pp. 232ff)—points out that of the four great motives noted in the Sermon on the Mount by far the two most powerful are the motive of the divine fatherhood and the motive of human brotherhood. While we may find the underlying principles here to be somewhat theological yet their working out is extremely social in effect. (cf. Vedder—"The Fundamentals of Christianity;" Ch. 3 pp. 54ff. See also Mathews—"The Church and the Changing Order," Ch. 4, pp. 91ff, especially p. 98.)

Had we only the parables of Jesus, we could easily prove our thesis. Though a very small number of the parables deal, apparently, with the more or less philosophical phase of religion, every single one has its social implications. "The Good Samaritan," the three so called "Parables of Grace," "The Rich Man and Lazarus," "The Sower," "The Talents," "The Sheep and the Goats," and a large majority of the rest are based directly upon a life or principle of social service. Were we to divorce ourselves from the impedimentum of the middle ages we would never suspect from them any other teachings. (cf. Bruce—"The Parbolic Teachings of Jesus," Book 2, pp. 229ff; Goebel—"The Parables of Jesus," p. 127-140, et al.)

Jesus the Doer

But if all these proofs were not conclusive we could turn to what is probably the earliest complete record—the Gospel according to Mark. Matthew's problem was to convince the Jews that the practical, helpful, social worker of Nazareth was the promised Revealer of God: Luke's problem was to convince the hard-hearted world that there really was a man who was "moved with compassion:" Mark had no problem. He sees a man who was "mightily" in earnest in the endeavor to help his fellows and he enters enthusiastically into the task of showing how he did it. There is much need just here for a careful study of "Jesus the Doer," as well as of "Jesus, the Teacher." A thorough, unprejudiced reading of the Gospel according to Mark drives one to the conclusion that Jesus' supreme task was to show his followers how to use the "keys of heaven" in unlocking its treasure houses and in bringing down its good to suffering humanity. Mark is the first Christian text book on social service. Refresh your minds a bit on Jesus' call of his first disciples; recall his instructions to the man who wished, after a wonderful healing, to follow him as a devoted monk; watch him rise "a great while before day," ostensibly to go to morning prayers, but really and actually to find a lonely, hopeless leper, to throw his arms about him, to suffer with him for a moment, then, to return him whole to society. A score or more of such incidents might be cited, but—read the Gospel through for yourself.

2. Turning now to the Gospel according to John, we find a somewhat different situation. Jesus has become "A teacher sent from God;" his kingdom has become "eternal life." Still, the ideas are not mutually exclusive. (See Stevens—"Theology of the New Testament," pp 224ff.) Even here, it would

Mother's Day

LET every day be Mother's Day
Make roses grow along her way
And beauty everywhere.
O, never let her eyes be wet
With tears of sorrow or regret,
And never cease to care.
Come, grown-up children, and rejoice
That you can hear your mother's voice.

A day for her? For you she gave Long years of love and service brave,
For you her youth was spent.
There was no weight of hurt or care
Too heavy for her strength to bear.
She followed where you went,
Her courage and her love sublime
You could depend on all the time.

—Edgar Guest.

seem that one of the greatest struggles through which he passed was that caused by the desire of the people to see in him a religionist and his own desire to be received as a social worker. See the Jews ready to stone him because of his teachings, then listen to Jesus' effort to bring forward the other phase of his life; "Many good works have I showed you from the Father; for which of those works do ye stone me?" (John 10:31, 32.)

Two facts ought to be noted in reference to the Gospel according to John: (1) it was not written as a record but as an interpretation to meet the growing demands of the mystical philosophers of the latter half of the first century of the Christian era. (See Kerr—Introduction to New Testament Study," pp. 65ff; Gould—"The Biblical Theology of the New Testament," pp 182ff.) (2) John wrote his story long after the other three had been written; long after the letters of Paul, too, had been written. More than likely, John had read several of Paul's letters. However that may be, it is evident that John has been under powerful mystical influences. But with all this, the social service inspiration is not wanting here. See, for instances, Jesus' treatment of the Sabbath; see him washing the feet of his disciples and note the comment which followed; go through chapter fifteen and his last prayer—chapter seventeen.

3. Coming next to the early interpreters of the life and teachings of Jesus, we find, at the outset, two schools of thought struggling for supremacy. (1) On the one hand, there are the "Peterites," healing the sick, directing a temporary communist movement, crossing the barriers of race and creed, in short, carrying forward the kingdom idea of Jesus with "compassion" as their dominating principle. (2) On the other hand, there are "the men from James," who find themselves committed to an eternal struggle for "the faith once for all delivered unto the saints." It would be highly profitable to follow this line of study further, but the limits of this paper forbid that here. We can only indicate general tendencies. Note that the first ten chapters in the Acts of the Apostles give us the unmixed impression that Jesus gave to us a social program. (See especially Ch. 6.) The remainder of the book is not so definite for the struggle between theories largely dominate the church life.

"In a Strait"

Paul's letters show us that here, as in other situations, he "is in a strait betwixt two." His letter to the Romans is made up of two distinct sections—the doctrinal and the so-called practical, which really means the social service. Note carefully the last five chapters. Both letters to the Corinthian church reveal the same situation though the divisions are not so clearly marked. In a somewhat less degree, this is true of all Paul's letters.

In the main, James has followed the Petrine school. His letter is admittedly committed to the social service program. One needs only to refer to his definition of "pure religion," (1: 27) and to his bitter denunciation of class feeling and race prejudice, scattered throughout the entire letter.

John's letters carry out the main idea of the Gospel bearing his name. His emphasis, however, on "brotherhood," "love," "fellowship" and the like show clearly that he is not unmindful of the logical outcome of the teachings of his Master.

Time and space forbid a fuller outline here. May we gather up the threads thus far spun that we may weave them into something like a web of life? (1) Jesus seems to have announced himself to the public by entering upon a program of social service and kingdom building. (2) This is evidenced by the fact that he endorses in unqualified terms the message of John the Baptist which is wholly on social service. (3) Jesus' own conception of his mission was that of social service. (4) The major motives in the Sermon on the Mount commit Jesus to a social service program entirely. (5) Jesus' parables almost unanimously, bear a social service implication and a large number of them carry no other message. (6) The earliest records of Jesus reveal him to us not as a Teacher, but as a DOER. (7) The first interpreters of Jesus gave his message the social service direction. (8) The later interpreters of Jesus' message found themselves face to face with two schools of thought, one emphasizing the social phase, the other the ceremonial or doctrinal phase; but in every case, a large place is given to the emphasis on the so-called social gospel.

Work, People, Things and Souls

By Zo D. Browne

ACCORDING to the latest reports, there are 900 Americans and Englishmen, 450 Anglo-Indians and 87,000 Indians in Jamshedpur and its suburbs. Every engineer I have met says, "Jamshedpur is and will continue to be the largest steel center in India." And it continues to grow. A new tin-plate mill, owned by the Burma Oil Company and larger than the one at Gary, Ind., said to be the largest in the world, was opened on Dec. 18, 1922. No one can foretell what the future of this great industrial center will be and no one ought to waste his time trying to do so. There is too much to be done in the present.

If need spells opportunity and obligation, there is plenty of both. When the ceaseless hum of the mill says, "Work, work, work!" for twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week, 365 days a year, the voice of the prophet must cry out, "People, people, people!" When men go and come at all hours of the day and night at the call of the whistle, there must be a finger to point them to the skies lest their hearts be hardened by the materials in which they work. Who will do it if the servants of the Carpenter of Nazareth fail to do so?

Along with this inexorable demand for work, there is almost a defiant demand for things. For all their hard work the men here—native and foreign—get more money, receive more rapid promotion, wear better clothes, eat better food and live in better houses than they do anywhere else in India. Yet nowhere will you find greater dissatisfaction and greed. The men want more money and more privileges. They went out on strike Sept. 18 and returned to work Oct. 22, having gained nothing but trouble and suffering. One of the leaders in the strike was a man who had started in on Rs. 35 and had risen to a salary of Rs. 300 a month. The shareholders want larger dividends. Most of the foreigners will frankly say that they are here to make all the money they can as quickly as they can. India has done nothing for them. It will not be their home. Why should they do anything for India except that for which they are paid? In this subtle, determined struggle for things, things, things, the church of the living God must cry out, "Souls, souls, souls!" and never be silent.

We must introduce the foreigners to the work of the kingdom of God, help them to meet the average Indian Christian and open up to them the needs of our Christian community. This will take patience. Just because the task is hard and results are slow, shall we say that there is no task, that obligation does not exist? Denial of our obligation will never remove the need. We must minister to our Christians—the Telugus from South India, the Oriyas from Cuttack and Balasore, the Americans and the English from our homelands. We must go forward and conquer the enemy that is poisoning the air.

The Telugus and Oriyas are now united in a spirit of Christian brotherhood. In addition to the union service held on Sunday at our house, another service is held every Sunday morning at Golmuri, the tin-plate company's headquarters about four miles from North Town. Of those attending from 60 to 80 per cent are not Christians. Besides these two services, prayer meetings are conducted during the week in various localities like Tatanagar, L. Town, G. town and Calcutta Monifieth.

The bricks for the church building have been hauled on the site. Mr. Eller, our mission builder, is drawing plans for the building. The idea of uniting the two congregations in one building has commended itself to the public and to men of judgment. The town administrator says that uniting our Telugus, Oriyas and Bengalis in one service is another fine achievement. Last night the building fund committee of the Indian church met. They decided to ask each earning member to give one month's salary for this new building and to pay it within a year, if possible. Then came a sight that moved me to tears. This group of men, some getting $12, some $15, some $20 and one $80 a month started a subscription paper and pledged themselves to give one month's salary each. From that meeting they are going out to every Indian Christian in Jamshedpur and ask each one to give one month's salary. Our missionaries out here subscribed $2000 to the New World Movement and designated this gift to the Jamshedpur Indian church building. They are keeping their pledges.

Beginning June 18 an English service has been held at the house every Sunday evening. The spirit is good and new families are coming every month. In October a subscription book was started and the first month fifteen families gave Rs. 202. New families are coming every month. We hope that the English speaking people will one day support the missionary.

Lafayette Avenue Church, Buffalo, New York

By Emery B. Jackson

FOR a live and progressive church body, we commend to our readers the Lafayette Avenue Baptist Church of Buffalo. In a city containing more Baptist churches than those of any other Protestant denomination we find also Baptist new church building activities well to the fore. Noble men started Christian work in that city probably as early as 1801, the first sermon being preached by a Baptist missionary. On down through the years Baptist activities have never lagged. The fathers in the Buffalo Baptist Union who, with inspiration and vision, purchased years ago the site on which is now being built a carefully planned and thoroughly equipped modern Baptist church, must rejoice that the challenge they then laid down has been so eagerly taken up by their worthy successors of today.

Let us visit this church now under the leadership of the Rev. J. Scott Ebersole and examine the new building nearing completion under the wise direction of its building committee headed by Mr. F. M. Sullivan. We learn that after thoroughly canvassing the subject they called in the denominational department of architecture to study with them their problem and, after an entirely satisfactory modern plan arrangement was evolved, the active architectural handling of the building was placed in the hands of the competent local architect, Mr. Frank A. Spangenberg.

On a corner plot, 130x150 feet, stands this church and church school building, costing $155,000, without furnishings and organ—a structure in colonial style built of a mixture of buff and gray brick, trimmed with Indiana lime stone with a variegated slate roof in purple and green. Stately Corinthian columns mark the entrance to the auditorium. An imposing tower proclaims at once that we have here an edifice erected to the glory of God and dedicated to his service. Through a pleasing arcade, which unites church and church school, we catch a glimpse of an inviting grass court.

Entering the building we find a sanctuary pure in its very atmosphere, dignified, yet friendly in its feeling. We feel the significance of the place and the appropriateness of its every arrangement for preaching and teaching, for music, and for the observance of the ordinances of the church. We learn that sittings are provided for a maximum of 700. Spaces does not permit of a more detailed description but the plan will make clear the many provisions for the convenience and comfort of both those who minister and those who are ministered unto.

J. SCOTT EBERSOLE, PASTOR

Passing from the church through the arcade, we enter the church school unit. This portion follows the approved arrangement for a departmentalized school, providing for seven departments, to meet simultaneously, giving to each department a graded equipment, a graded worship period as well as graded instruction.

LAFAYETTE AVENUE CHURCH BUILDING

The first floor contains a ladies' parlor and class room, nursery and cradle-roll room and six rooms for the beginners' and primary departments, and the pastor's study. The second floor contains assembly and class rooms for the junior, intermediate and senior departments, fourteen rooms in all on this floor. There are twenty-seven rooms in the church school unit. On the ground floor, one finds a large men's class and club room, a boys' club room with lockers and showers, a club room for girls with lockers and showers, while at a lower level is the boiler room. On the three floors are eight fireplaces. A kitchenette is provided on each floor.

The recreation hall, under the auditorium, will serve as gymnasium; also for entertainments, community meetings and as a dining room. Ample kitchen and serving facilities are provided.

Doctor Burroughs has well said that "every church is inevitably moulded in its program of activities by the facilities provided in its building." What then may we not expect of this church upon its occupancy of so complete and attractive a structure.

American International Training School

By Charles L. White

EVERY man is a new Ulysses and is a part of all that he has met. The foreigners who come here from many lands are a part of us, and we unconsciously become a part of them. These same people return to their homes in other nations with ideas enlarged, plans matured and powers strengthened. It is for Christian America to determine largely what they shall take back to Europe, Asia, Africa and South America and to the islands in the sea. Shall they return theistic or atheistic, Christian or pagan? In their contact with the representatives of Christ and with Christian organizations in America, has their social vision become impaired or improved? Do they measure America by gold or goodness, by silver or sincerity? Let American Christians answer.

God has been sending these peoples here for a hundred years as he has never sent them to another country in all the history of the nations. He saw the world conflict that was coming, and he was preparing for it long before we recognized the significance of the presence of these men and women and their children, who now number more than thirty-two million of the one hundred million in our land. He sent them here that they might learn the truth concerning this life and the life to come. Now is the day of testing. What have we given them? What in right measure should we give to them? Can we answer? In America for a generation we have been unconsciously making leaders who on returning to their own countries will either deform or transform, disfigure or transfigure their social, political and religious institutions. The process has not stopped. It has only just begun. We have opportunity to redeem the time.

Meanwhile we must remember that these millions are making their contribution to the social habits and ideals of our country. Not all of these influences are harmless, although many are of real worth. Each of them is continually exerting its power toward changing the character of our entire national life.

Mr. Roosevelt once asserted that all the money that had been expended in America for negro Christian education would have been well spent if the only fruitage had been a Booker T. Washington. Great Britain for a generation has justified its vast expenditures for human betterment by the hope that in the years of crisis the hundred millionth man would be discovered to save the empire. If America can furnish Christian leaders who will save Russia or other lands from chaos and confusion, we shall begin to see what God has been doing in our wonderful country.

The Open Forum

AN OFFICIAL IDENTIFIES HIMSELF

Will you permit me though the columns of the Open Forum to assume responsibility for the authorship of the letter from "An Official of One of Our Societies" published in your issue of April 28. I have never before had the privilege of breaking into this particular department of THE BAPTIST and having done so thus involuntarily, I am anxious that no one else should be charged with responsibility for any indiscretion of mine.

May I say frankly that in my opinion your editorial comment indicates that you did not quite understand my letter. Probably it was my fault for not phrasing it more clearly. In any case you will, I am sure, let me make my position plain. I have always had a vast respect for the dignity and authority of "ye editor" ever since the days when I used to aspire somewhat hopelessly to appear in print. Moreover, I am heartily in accord with your feeling that the freedom of the press is a sacred principle which should be jealously guarded both in state and church.

Far be it from me therefore to suggest the establishment of a censorship, even in the mildest form, either over the editorial pen or over contributed articles. What I desired to suggest was merely a piece of team work between the editor and the group of those who best know foreign missionary interests. In the present case this cooperation would have worked in the interests of accuracy and Christian comity, both of them highly desirable qualities in any publication—especially a Christian journal, and qualities which usually characterize the pages of THE BAPTIST.

My letter called attention to two items, the first having to do with a question of fact as stated in the editorial, that is to say, whether there were newly erected buildings on the foreign fields unused for lack of funds to operate them; the second, a question of Christian comity having to do with our relationships to the Methodists in Burma raised by certain phrases in a contributed article.

Had we seen the editorial before printing we could have helped you to strengthen it by making it entirely accurate. The contributed article must have been written some months before its publication. In the interim the issue discussed in it was being decisively dealt with, a fact which the author at his remote distance may not have known. We could have called the author's attention to this fact and in all probability he would have wished to modify his phraseology. Even the use of the cable would have been justifiable to avoid appearing to do an injustice to a sister denomination. At the same time he would have retained full liberty to publish the article in its original form if after due consideration of all the facts in the case he felt disposed to do so.

May I be forgiven another word? I am sorry you should have insisted upon printing my letter even though I telegraphed you respectfully requesting you to permit me to withdraw it upon realizing that others might share your misinterpretation.

P. H. J. LERRIGO.

"A PLEA FOR FAIR PLAY"

In THE BAPTIST of March 31, V. W. Dyer, under the above caption, places before the religious world, and especially the Baptist world, the case of the American Methodists breaking into Burma. He calls attention to the fact that several years ago the great missionary societies of the northern United States agreed to certain principles of mission comity and divided up the various mission fields among themselves in order to avoid friction and overlapping, and that under this arrangement Burma was assigned to the Baptists, since that field was being largely covered by the Baptists of the North. On the same principle northern India around Lucknow was assigned to the American Methodists. Attention is called to the fact that the Methodists through an understanding with the Baptists about thirty years ago came into Burma to do work among the Anglo-Indians and Europeans only, giving assurance that they would not attempt any work among the natives. Now it is asserted the Methodists are pushing work among the native Burmans in many sections in Burma. In view of this situation Mr. Dyer raises the question if there is a comity agreement, and if Burma is a Baptist field.

Certainly there is a comity agreement, which Mr. Dyer declares in the earlier part of his article, and Burma was assigned to the Baptists; the question is raised as to the wisdom of such an agreement to begin with, so far as the Baptists are concerned. We claim to hold the full gospel message, and why should we agree with religious bodies who do not hold to the truth thus fully, and thereby voluntarily remain out of fields permanently where only a partial message is given to the people?

When Jesus gave the great commission he surely meant that all the peoples of the earth should have a chance as speedily as possible to hear the full truth as presented by the prophets and more fully by himself. If Baptists are right in their claim of absolute loyalty to Jesus as Lord and Master, how can they barter away the responsibility and the opportunity to give the truth to the whole world as soon as they can furnish the workers and finance the work? In the meanwhile Christian courtesy and brotherly cooperation is all that can be expected of us, and to push this courtesy and cooperation to the extent of hard-and-fast agreements to remain off certain fields and districts is to run counter to the will of the Lord and to give him the deepest grief.

Certainly it would seem that the great Methodist denomination would keep honor with other bodies when it had voluntarily gone into the arrangement; but it is giving the Baptists at home and abroad to understand by its aggressive action and plan that it does not propose to abide by these agreements. It is currently reported that a Methodist bishop in the great West advises his pastors to push into all fields of opportunity, and never to stop unless called down, meaning, of course, to establish themselves everywhere and then plead prior occupation and successfully established interests, and thus hold the ground occupied. This seems to be the Methodist predetermined plan for the world, and why should the Baptists be guilty of entering into such entangling alliances? It is bad policy under any condition with any religious body or bodies holding to less than the truth, or to erroneous conceptions of truth, for Baptists to undercut their responsibility to their Lord by agreement with others not to do his complete will, and especially so with a body like the great Methodist denomination, which does not keep and does not propose to keep any comity agreement.

While it would seem that the Methodists and others would stay off a field like Burma, where the Baptists have been for more than a century, and have done a work that is outstanding from almost every standpoint of success in the missionary enterprise, yet why should Mr. Dyer, or any other Baptist, whine or protest because the Methodists are taking up work there? It should be recognized that the truth must win out in an open world. This is true as against the open and avowed enemies of truth, and is just as true as against those who only hold to the truth partially.

The coming of the Methodists into Burma may be a bit embarrassing to the Baptist missionaries and workers there, but let them redouble their efforts and become more efficient than ever before, and they will more and more hold the field as against all comers who present a partial or corrupted gospel.

Why should not the Baptists of the North be done with this matter of comity that means division of territory both at home and abroad? They get nowhere by it. They embarrass themselves and

What the Church Vacation School Will Do

The church vacation school will give twice as much time in one summer for religious education as the Sunday school can give in one year. On account of the length of the daily session and the five succeeding sessions each week, vastly greater progress can be made by the pupils, and impressions are so much deeper that they become lasting.

Because of the shortness of time each Sunday, the teaching of the Sunday-school lesson is in danger of becoming superficial and of being quickly forgotten. By means of drills, this partially remembered work of the Sunday school may be clarified and made permanent by the vacation school.

Hymns and scripture, under the present system, are not being memorized. The vacation school makes of these clear and definite possessions.

The vacation school is so attractive that it effects the following results: Secures the faithful attendance of Sunday-school pupils, causes them to love the work and urge its continuation in afternoons and during the entire summer. It brings into its sessions large numbers of children who are untouched by the Sunday school.

The vacation school will give the pastors a new vision of possibilities with children, a new hold on them, a new entrance to homes and a new joy in service.

The vacation school is one of the finest fields for training of workers which the church has yet discovered.

Promotion and Organization

1. In promoting a vacation school for the first time the following steps may be taken:

(1) Form a nucleus of interested persons, the pastor being one, if at all possible.

(2) Secure free literature from your director of religious education.

(3) Let the members of the nucleus thoroughly prepare themselves in order to present the vacation school before every organization within the church.

(4) Get the pastor to give two proper meetings and one sermon to consideration of the church vacation school and its possibilities. One-half of the first prayer meeting should be given to a presentation of the devotional period of a vacation school, using the audience and not children as the school. The second half of the meeting may well be used for a discussion of the program and the possibilities. The second prayer meeting may be given to prayer for evangelistic results among the children and for teachers who will volunteer to do the work. The sermon may well take up the theme of more adequate religious education of the right kind for our children.

(5) Get definitely fixed in the minds of all that this is a task in evangelism and not primarily a plan for entertaining and employing children.

(6) Get the church to adopt officially the vacation school as a line of its work and to commission either the Sunday school or a special committee to proceed to its establishment.

2. The organization of a vacation school begins as soon as a church (or Sunday school) authorizes a special group to proceed. (Where the church as such will not take an interest, a Sunday school or other group may carry out the plan, but best results require the interest and cooperation of church and pastor.)

(1) The first step of the duly authorized group will be to appoint the following committees: a, Publicity; b, Housing and Equipment; c, Finance and Teachers; d, Lesson Courses; e, Administration.

(2) If the church has a committee on religious education, it should be given full consideration. In the entire field of the vacation school adjust the work to this committee as local conditions make wise.—Thomas S. Young and Elizabeth M. Finn in "Church School Objectives," Judson Press.

Inspiration

By Clarence S. Burns.

INTO whose eyes did I first look
And find there the love that lives?
From out whose lips did I first hear
The lullaby that slumber gives?
Whose touch of tenderness remains
In memory as none other?
'Tis the eyes and lips and fingers dear
Of my beloved mother.

And in these days of busy deeds
When stress and strain assail me,
With tasks too big for my frail self,
What memories then avail me?
'Tis those of love in service given
Outweighing every other,
Found in the sacrifice for me
By my beloved mother.

And so I'll tackle all my tasks
Determined not to slight them.
Counting no sacrifice too great,
If I may but complete them.
Since such devotion freely given
Not for self, but for another,
Has been my lot through all life's days,
Given me by my mother.

International Sunday School Lesson for May 27

ISAIAH, THE STATESMAN-PROPHET

Lesson: 2 Kings 18:13-20:19. Isa. 1; 6:1-13. Golden Text: Isa. 6:8.

Introductory

The death of King Uzziah seemed to bode ill for Israel. He had reigned for fifty-two years, and during that time had exercised astute statesmanship, had built up the fortifications of the city, had promoted husbandry and agriculture among the people. Isaiah, a man of good birth, had been an intimate of the palace. He knew the worth of the king and he was fearful as to who should take his place.

The Lesson

When Isaiah says, "In the year that King Uzziah died," he is not thinking of the year 740 B. C., but of the time when for a moment the world seemed to stand still because of the loss of this great leader. He was desolated by a sense of personal loss, as well as by fear for his people. He was in an expectant mood, and an ideal one for a vision. He saw the Lord upon his throne, and the seraphim (literally in the Hebrew: the burning ones) crying one to another, "Holy, holy, holy, is Jehovah of hosts; the earth is full of his glory." At the cry the building shook and was filled with smoke. There came upon Isaiah a sense of his own uncleanness and unworthiness among an unclean people. This was the result of his close contemplation of the King, Jehovah. As though in answer to his sense of sin, there came one of the seraphim and touched his lips with a burning coal which he had taken from the altar with a tongs, and said, "Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin forgiven. Then came the voice of the Lord. "Whom shall I send?" and Isaiah's instant response, "Here am I; send me."

Leading Thoughts

1. Had Isaiah not already sensed the need of Israel the call might not have touched him so personally. 2. It is only the thinker—one who is burdened with desire for the good of his people—who is blessed with a vision. 3. Greatness usually shines through the garment of true humility. 4. The call to service comes to the listening ear.

Where the School-Bell Never Rings

In three out of four of Indian's more than half million villages the school-bell never rings. For such villagers life is made up of the daily drudgery and the routine happenings of family and village life. Superstition, not enlightenment, interprets events and guides in emergencies. No doors open into pleasant fields of intellectual enjoyment or spiritual satisfaction. Fear, not hope, dominates life.

In the school-less village, illiteracy is the common lot of the Brahman girl who lives on the exclusive streets of the village, as well as of the outcaste girl in the hovel outside the village pale. Miss Van Doren tells the life-story of the average girl for whom no school-bell rings. At six household duties begin.

"Meenachi is twelve, and the freedom of the long street is hers no more. . . Now follows the swift sequel of marriage. . . . Meenachi is carried away by the splendor of new clothes and jewels and processions. Is she not the envy of all her former playmates? Only now and then comes a strange feeling of loneliness when she thinks of leaving the dear family roof, the narrow street with its tamarind trees. The mother-in-law's house is a hundred miles away and the mother-in-law's face is strange."—"Lighted to Lighten," pp. 22-24.

Another Hundred

The campaign committee of the Baptist Young People's Union of America, which is raising a fund for extension work in Europe, is ready to acknowledge the receipt from various sources of another hundred dollars. Our young people throughout the country are waking up to the fact that our organization has an unusual opportunity for service in planning to meet the call of young people's groups of Europe for help in organizing their work. The Secretary of the B. Y. P. U. of A., Dr. White, will attend the Stockholm Conference, meet with many of the leaders of Europe there, and afterwards visit some of the countries which have written requesting help from our organization. He will then be able to advise with them and, upon his return, will know just what our organization can do to help our brethren across the sea. Meanwhile, the work of the fund must go on, and we want every young people's group to send in a donation equal to at least ten cents per member. The following organizations and individuals have responded since the last acknowledgment:

A Little Taste of Learning

Arul is more fortunate than Meenachi. Her father has recently become a Christian, and along with other ideas newly born in his mind is this, that Christian education is the way up and out of poverty and depression. So Arul is one of three girls who sit with twenty-five boys upon the earthen floor of the village school. There is little light and air, no desks or benches. A small wooden blackboard, the teacher's rickety table and chair, are all that the room can boast in the way of furniture. The teacher's professional equipment is equally meager. Yet in that little room lies the possibility of transforming even the life of the whole village.

Poor as it is, the village school is the only alma mater of many Indian girls who are counted among the one out of every hundred women whom the census classes as literates. For her a little learning is not a dangerous thing, but a flickering candle in a dark place.

In all the larger cities and some more advanced towns in India there are government schools for girls, where Hindus as well as Christian girls are found. Here also are usually found mission schools and perhaps private schools, but the village schools are almost entirely the product of Christian enterprise. Already the proportion of literacy among Christian women is far higher than among the women of Hindu and Mohammedan communities.—Adapted from Service.

Mother-of-Pearl

(A Mother's Day Story)

By MARGARET T. APPLEGARTH

(All rights reserved)

NOW there came a day in the Land of Nod when the king got simply tired to death of all these beauty contests when he had to be forever judging thin girls and fat girls and in-between girls, awarding prizes and making speeches and kissing the winners on the cheek.

"I simply won't do it again!" quoth he in that really awful voice which only kings knew how to assume back in the good old days when there were a dozen more kings than there are nowadays.

When a king goes on strike about such a serious matter as kissing pretty girls it is indeed a serious matter to the entire realm, and the Lord High Chancellor had to be fetched. You would have trembled in your boots just to look at him, so stiff and purple in the face with importance, and purple in his robe, too. Of course the king didn't have to tremble over anybody, really; but nevertheless, when he saw the Lord High Chancellor coming up the front walk to the palace he felt terribly uncomfortable and nervous.

"I wont' give in, I won't! I won't! I won't!" said he to himself just to give his courage an extra screw. "What's the good of being king if I can't kiss whom I please?"

This was all very well. But the moment the great doors swung open to admit the Lord High Chancellor, the king felt himself beginning to grow weak in the knees. That was mostly on account of the Lord High Chancellor's nose. It was purpler than usual. Purple noses always seem so dangerous to live with! The king stared fixedly out of the window in order not to see it.

"Nice day," said he. And that was foolish of him, for anybody ought to know that chancellors don't care a cent about rain or shine, weather being about the only thing in the Land of Nod that they let somebody else attend to.

"Sire," began the dreaded voice.

"Now look here," interrupted the king with admirable firmness, "I won't kiss another of your pretty gals. I won't! I won't! I won't!"

The Lord High Chancellor looked pained. Exceedingly pained. His pretty gals, indeed! Nary a kiss had he ever gotten from all these many contests. It seemed such an easy pastime. . . . By his mere silence he was making the poor king more and more fidgety and uncomfortable.

"I w-won't!" he stuttered, for all the world like a naughty boy.

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

The chancellor folded his hands over his broad stomach and looked resigned.

"Who will you kiss, then?" he asked, "for we've simply got to have contests, but you can settle on what kind they shall be and let me know at your convenience, sire."

Now this was fun. It made the king feel important. Decisions never were left to him lately and he had been feeling peeved about it. "It shall be a mother's contest," he announced instantly, quite as if he had known all along what he would say. But he hadn't, of course. It had popped into his mind quickly and from his mind had hopped to his lips.

"Excellent!" boomed the L. H. C. in his most agreeable manner. "Now name the terms of the contest."

The king was radiant. "It's a kind heart beats behind that purple nose,' said he to himself. (Which shows you how really flabbergasted he was at this sudden authority, for noses and heart are not in adjoining vicinities, as the king would readily have admitted in calmer moments.) But at present there were all those terms of the contest to be named, so he hemmed and hawed through firstlies, secondlies and thirdlies and "whereases" and "therefore, my beloved subjects," for the sheer perversity of seeing the poor Lord High Chancellor puff breathlessly as he jotted down the memoranda in his notebook. But the long and short of it was that every child in the realm, under ten years of age, could "submit" his or her mother in this new contest, provided sufficient reasons could be advanced why this particular mother was the best in the world.

"Good! Good! Fine!" panted the exhausted L. H. C., dotting his t's and crossing his i's in his haste. "I will now get this featured as a special in all the newspapers, sire, and I expect it won't be long before you will have the palace swarming with mothers."

"That will be—nice," said the king softly. He perfectly loved mothers! He hadn't had nearly enough of his own mother, because even when she grew to be quite old she had to sit on her throne all day long to be dictated to by the purple nose of the Lord High Chancellor. She had known that nose through so many years of rosiness, redness, henna shades, then purples that she, too, took to gazing wistfully out of the palace windows. And although she was so old she felt like a dear little girl in school listening for the noon whistle. But when the signal came it was not the one her son had hoped for; for the tired old soul grew too tired and too old, and not all the doctors in the realm could cure her. So that now the lonely king had inherited both the throne and the purple nose; and he longed with unspeakable yearning for his mother.

"Perhaps some of the mothers submitted will look like my own mother," he said; and although it was such a wet April that he could only ride out in his royal coach twice in all those ten days until the contest was due, he really never noticed the weather, for he was too busy moving comfortable chairs into the rooms where the mothers were to wait.

The Lord High Chancellor poohpoohed this exercise: "It is all perfect nonsense," said he coldly. But the king looked him straight in the eye and said: "The chairs are my own chairs, sir."

Stupendous, wasn't it? The purple nose grew mauve, then orchid. "Quite so!" said the L. H. C. gently, for of course there was a limit to the lengths one should go in bossing kings. But nobody could understand about this chair business—they all had to have cushioned seats, and some of them actually had tidies.

"Tidies have been out of style for years and years," remonstrated the court architect, who was very up-and-coming with his Van Dyke beard and a monocle.

The king smiled wistfully: "When I was a little boy there was a chair. My mother used to sit on it. It had a tidy. But then my mother had to go to sit on the throne. There was no tidy on the throne, and she missed it. So even if they are now out of style maybe there will be a mother submitted in my contest who has always been hungry for a tidy. Hunger matters more than style."

The court architect suddenly began to like the king very much indeed. "He's just a wistful, warm-hearted, lonely old boy," said he to his wife that night, when he had removed his monocle and was feeling very cosy by the hearth.

"Why, he's a perfect lamb!" smiled she. (You may be interested to know that she had been the winner of last year's beauty contest and she knew the exact spot on her left cheek where the king had planted his royal kiss. It could never be to her a cheek like her right cheek. She was only wishing that the baby were old enough to be submitting his mother—who knew . . . ?)

Well, the great day came, and with it the mothers, led up to the palace by their proudly possessive children.

The king had one bitter half hour when he saw how young these mothers looked. "Some one has played a trick on me," he cried; "this is only another of those awful pretty-girl businesses."

But before long he could see how much the children resembled the "pretty girls," and it was evident that here were genuine mothers; the error was his own to have stipulated that only children under ten could submit mothers. Naturally these would be young women.

He began to wonder whether the tidies had not been a mistake. They were! One mother removed hers before sitting down. Others smiled in a superior way at the old-fogyness which still prevailed in these supposedly elegant court circles. But the tidy catastrophe occurred when one mother quite unconsciously caught the buttons on the back of her dress into the open-work of her tidy so that when she came up to be judged, she certainly looked most peculiar behind. It upset her son terribly. Being a boy, he had no least idea what was wrong, of course. "She looks too jumbled," he groaned to himself, and knew that she was not going to get the prize. Neither did she. But the tidy-on-the-buttons was not the deciding factor, it was the frown-on-the-forehead of a certain boy's face.

"The child whose mother wins must look supremely radiant with admiration," the king had ruled, for that was how he had looked at his own mother as she sat on the throne all those years holding her own against even purple noses.

Well, it was an exhausting day. Mothers to right of him, mothers to left of him—tall, thin, fat, fair, forty, jolly, cross, prim, fixed-for-company, bored, interested. . . .

"She's the beautifullest mother in the world because she's got gold hair. It curls in little rings. You can run your fingers in those rings."

"Mine's the beautifullest because she makes such gummy cookies. U'm'm! She cuts 'em out in the shape of little animules. She puts in raisins for eyes. She's an awful nice mudder."

"Mine plays with me. You just ought to see her play. She can beat me at most anything even dang'rous things, you know!"

Oh, yes, any number of those mothers were "hot" as far as winning the prize went, all on account of the proud glint in the eyes of the adoring child who clung to their hands.

The king had become so interested that he had forgotten his earlier disappointment at the lack of more matronly old dears. To tell the truth, he was in exactly the same petrified state of fear that always had attacked him during the pretty girl contests. For here he had merit as well as looks to consider. Should he, therefore, kiss the nice lady with gold curls, or that lanky, freckled creature who played games? (The king knew that she was a born tree-climber; she had that look in her eye.)

But he need not have worried, for the whole matter was solved for him by Pearl. She was, actually, the meekest little girl you ever saw. She wasn't pretty. She wasn't even any too clean. Two buttons in the back or her frock were altogether gone, a third was dangling experimentally, undecided whether to be or not to be. Her pigtails zigzagged down her back in a higgelty-piggelty fashion—you could tell by looking at her that she belonged to the genus We-Dress-Ourselves-By-Ourselves. Nobody seemed to have spent much time over Pearl.

And yet, the least of those in the palace, Pearl suddenly leaped into terrible prominence by slapping the face of the son of the Lord High Chancellor. Did you ever hear of anything so abominably rude in your life? Actually slapped it until the poor little fellow's nose bled, making it appear altogether too much like the parental nose.

People were simply scandalized, especially as the news soon leaked out that Pearl had been doing quite a little private fighting on the side, behind portieres and such, ever since she had reached the palace. Several other bleeding noses and bruised cheeks testified to the strength in the fists of that meek, unbuttoned little girl who seemed to be unaccompanied by a mother. Matters were beginning to look dark for Pearl when the king noticed the commotion and left his throne to saunter nearer. Everybody told him at once about this outrageous female nose-smasher. "She doesn't seem to now the rules," they complained, "for she hasn't brought her mother." The king looked at the little girl carefully.

Pearl looked at the king carefully, too. It was a thrilling experience for him, for there was fire in Pearl's eye, and the wild idea came into his mind that the little girl was prepared to fight him. Body guards and secret police and armies and generals meant nothing to Pearl. The king was thrilled.

"Well! Well!" he burbled, soothingly, adding, "Where's your mother?"

"She's home in bed," said Pearl.

"Oh! Dear me!" said the king, sympathetically. And Pearl fell in love with him at once.

"She couldn't come, but I brought her photograph," she said.

"An excellent idea," nodded the king, holding out his hand to take what she was evidently holding out her hand to give him, when a tell-tale titter was heard behind her. Quick as a flash she spun on her heel. Quick as a flash certain noses were discreetly hidden behind voluminous skirts. With great dignity Pearl then turned and placed something in the king's hand.

"But this is just—a—s-shell!" he stammered, staring at the rough brown exterior.

"But it is a photograph of my mother," Pearl insisted, until she heard more titters and swirled around on her little heel.

The king began to feel happier and happier. "Never mind these little boors and bores, tell me about your mother," he said, rubbing his fingers gently over the horny shell.

Pearl looked at him with her little face glowing. "My mother is very beautiful," she said. "If she had not loved me so dearly she would be very pretty to look at. But she did love me, and when I was a baby she saw me catch fire from a lamp and rushed to save me. She did save me, but oh! that lamp burned her. It burned her face and her hands and her arms. It crippled her so that she has been in bed ever since. She cannot use her hands. She cannot use her feet. Her face is all scarred. She looks—she looks like that shell on the outside. But just you turn it over, Mister King."

The king turned the shell over—ah, what exquisite opalescent pearliness, blues and pinks and lavenders and tender greens.

"That," said Pearl, "is my mother. She is so kind. She is so patient. She is so gentle. She tells me such lovely stories. We play together. We play that she is beautiful and can run with me over the daisy meadows. We play that we are rich and have a fine coach so that she can ride every day to fetch me home from school. Oh, we play and we play; we play while she lies flat on her back in bed. There is nobody like my mother!"

"That is true!" said the king softly, looking at the beautiful shell. "She has won the prize, so now I am going straight home with you to kiss your mother. And tomorrow—where is the Lord High Chancellor?"

"Here, sire!"

"Tomorrow morning please buy me the most comfortable automobile in the Land of Nod. One that you can lie down in and yet see out of. One with the springiest springs and the best shock absorbers. And above all, it must be an automobile that knows how to run gently through daisy meadows and knows how to stop at school house doors. Kindly charge it to my personal account."

"Yes, sire, and to whom is it to be delivered?"

"Deliver it to the most appreciated lady in all the Land of Nod, deliver it to—Mother-Of-Pearl."

And then, hand in hand, the man and the little girl went to tell that most beautiful lady the result of her years of patient loveliness.

Young People's Notes

Shreveport, La., First Church B. Y. P. U. is reported as having the distinction of being the first B. Y. P. U. to broadcast its programs.

"The Baptist Standard," Texas, reports that 450,000 of our young people attended college in 1921-22. Our exchange states that "there are 22,000,000 students in the elementary schools in the United States."

Wisconsin Summer Assembly will be held Aug. 7-19 at Green Lake. Director Boyd has secured an able faculty of instructors. The goal is at least 50 per cent of the Baptist churches in Wisconsin represented in the assembly.

Pennsylvania, Ridge View Park Assembly will be held July 9-16. Dr. J. S. Broker will serve as dean.

Our Own Folks

Indiana Letter

By C. M. Dinsmore

The first two weeks of April the men's department of our state board put on ten conferences for men in ten different sections of Indiana. The response to the invitations was very gratifying. One-third of the Baptist churches of the state were represented in these conferences. Doctor Wilcox of New York City was with us for one week and Doctor Eubank of Missouri was with us for the second week. These outside men with Mr. C. S. Dearborn and C. M. Dinsmore made up the team of speakers. A number of our laymen have expressed their intention of giving more of their time in the future to definite Christian work.

New Church Buildings.

There is a real building boom on in Indiana this year. The Bloomfield Church will dedicate a beautiful building in July. The Anderson Church expects to have its $75,000 auditorium completed in July. The First Church of Franklin pledged $42,715, April 29, for a Sunday-school plant. Newcastle building is under way and before fall will have a fine gymnasium and school plant ready for use. Greencastle has its money raised for a larger plant to be built this summer. In Indianapolis, the Temple building will be ready soon; The Emerson Avenue Church expects to have a $100,000 school plant and auditorium before the year ends and the Calvary Church recently pledged $35,000 for a new plant. A number of other buildings are being talked about but these are sure now. It has been a great thing to have our own consulting architect to help us in these enterprises. Mr. C. E. Bacon certainly knows how a modern Baptist church should be built.

New Program.

By the action of the last state convention we must take a referendum of all our churches this summer with respect to their missionary budget for the year following the New World Movement. The first steps toward this will be taken at the June meeting of the board of promotion of each association in the state.

Other Items.

Rev. S. G. Huntington who for several years has been the district superintendent of the northern section of Indiana was recently made the extension secretary for the state. Most of his time this spring has been spent in leading our churches in their campaign for new buildings. The First Church as Hammond has added an associate pastor to its working force. Rev. B. F. Martin, pastor of the Immanuel church in Fort Wayne, recently passed away. We are very sorry to lose Brother Martin. His church expected to begin a new building this summer. Rev. H. B. Ferrell, of Evansville has been called to Frankfort. Rev. C. J. Bunnell has resigned at Burnettsville and is open for another field. Rev. Robert Sage of Acton has accepted the call to Rushville. The reports from the churches with respect to Sunday-school attendance and the prayer meetings are most encouraging.

New Pastor of Second Church, Chicago

Rev. Ralph A. Jensen, who begins his duties as the pastor of the Second Church of Chicago the first of June to succeed Dr. J. J. Ross, was born in Chicago in the latter eighties. His father, Rev. Julius A. Jensen, was pastor of the First Danish Baptist Church of that city. Later he returned for a second pastorate to the same church so that much of Mr. Jensen's early training was in the public schools of Chicago. He then attended Central College, Pella, Iowa, for three years; the University of Chicago one year; and studied law at the Chicago School of Law for one year. This work was supplemented by correspondence and normal work. Feeling called of God to preach the gospel, he entered the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., where he studied for a time. After preaching a few years, he returned and was graduated from that institution in 1917.

Mr. Jensen's first pastorate was Osecola, Neb., and his second and present pastorate, from which he is coming to Chicago, is at Mankato, Minn. During the great war, he was in the Y. M. C. A. service, stationed at Camp Cody, Deming, New Mexico, as building secretary and religious work director. Mr. Jensen's family consists of his wife and two daughters. In his pastorates, he has been active, popular, and useful in civic and welfare movements, but he is always best known as a strong, evangelical preacher and as a faithful and helpful minister of Jesus Christ.

The Second Church is one of the historic Baptist churches of Chicago and of this part of the country. While a large number of its members live a considerable distance from the church, the building at Jackson and Lincoln is located in the center of a great community which affords endless opportunities for aggressive service. It is also within a few blocks of the great hospitals and the medical, dental and nurses colleges and training schools. It has been said that this is the greatest center in the world for students of the above types. Between ten and fifteen millions of dollars have been appropriated for increased facilities which will also greatly increase the number of students who will room in this section of the city. Mr. Jensen already has been used in a large way in dealing with students and in getting hold of young people and it is the desire, hope and expectation that under his leadership God will bless the Second Church in measuring up to its magnificent and unique opportunities. With the splendid record of the past, a large number of its members believe its greatest history is still in the future.

Baptist Work Among Mexicans in Colorado

By Eugene Parsons

The reorganization of work among the Mexican Baptists in Colorado makes timely a survey of evangelistic progress among the Spanish-speaking people of the Centennial State. Rev. Felix Escalante, who has been in charge of the work among the Mexicans in Denver the last two years, goes to Pueblo. Rev. Antonio Jimenez, who has been a successful worker among the Mexicans in Pueblo, leaves for Los Angeles. Rev. Juan M. Rodriguez, pastor of the Mexican Baptist Church in La Junta, is assigned to the Denver field, where he will be associated with Miss Mina S. Everett in the work of Americanizing natives of Mexico who have come here.

Many years ago attempts were made by Protestant preachers to evangelize Mexicans in Colorado Territory, and in later years something was accomplished in this direction. Here is a chapter of Colorado history yet to be written. It is a long story, full of human interest, and it has its international bearings. Christian missionaries, laboring among the foreign-born people who have crossed the border from the south, promote friendly relations between the two countries. The effort to improve Mexican immigrants intellectually and spiritually is certainly worth while. Frontiersmen from the states used to speak slightingly of Mexicans, calling them "greasers." There were some Americans, however, who appreciated the worth in men from across the border. Some venturesome freighters who trekked over the old Santa Fe trail to the republic on the other side of the Rio Grande found here and there a man of lofty idealism among the caballeros of Old Mexico. There is good material in the Mexicans among us. The writer can only glance at a large subject.

Back in the '60's the noted Methodist itinerant, John L. Dyer, while on his wanderings through southern Colorado, preached to Mexicans, who heard the gospel gladly. The transition days of the '70's brought a Presbyterian clergyman who burned with zeal for the conversion of the Spanish-speaking people in the San Luis Valley and the Huerfano Valley. He did missionary work among them, speaking Spanish to the throngs who gathered to listen. His enthusiasm was infectious. Other brethren of the Presbyterian synod of Colorado became interested. As a result of their earnest endeavors a dozen churches and missions were organized (in 1882 and later), which today have a combined membership of over 1,000 Mexican Presbyterians, all in southern Colorado. There is one Methodist Mexican church in Colorado; it was organized in West Denver, 1922, with over 80 members.

In the '90's a Baptist minister of Trinidad became impressed with the need of missionary work among the Spanish-speaking people in that city and elsewhere in southern Colorado. Other brethren joined him in the agitation, which resulted in the appointment of an evangelist to labor among the Mexicans in the San Luis Valley. In 1903 Rev. John G. Jeantet was assigned to this field. He had headquarters in Alamosa, where he preached twice a Sunday. From time to time he traveled through the valley, which then had a Spanish-speaking population of 10,000. He organized Sunday schools and opened a school in Ortiz, with study classes for children and adults wishing to learn English. This man had been one of the Penitentes of New Mexico. He was converted and baptized; he came to Colorado and longed to tell the Mexicans the truth as it is in Jesus. His daughter assisted him in street meetings, playing a little organ. By singing and speaking he gained the attention of passersby. Some six or seven years Mr. Jeantet labored and left his impress for good. Mexicans in Colorado flit about a good deal; some who heard him preach the gospel departed to become miners, or railroad workers or beet workers. They were benefited, however, by his message.

In time meeting-houses were erected in Alamosa and Ortiz for the use of the congregations of Mexican Baptists. For some years Rev. S. Valdez had charge of the mission and school in Ortiz. He did an important work. In 1912 he was succeeded by Rev. Arturo Anderson, who remained only a year or so. Money was lacking, and the Mexican missionary preachers had to give up their evangelistic efforts. This was unfortunate, because a promising beginning had been made. For five or six years the Baptists neglected this field, and the Presbyterians took over the struggling interests abandoned by the Baptists in Alamosa and Ortiz.

Baptist work among the Spanish-speaking people in Denver was begun in the summer of 1919 under the auspices of the Denver Union in cooperation with the Woman's Home Mission Society and the Publication Society. Miss Clara J. Flint (who had done missionary work in Colorado for many years) and Miss Mina S. Everett, formerly a missionary in South America and Mexico, started a Bible vacation school. Next they opened a Sunday school, which grew slowly at first. With the return of the sugar-beet workers late in the fall, the night school was crowded and the Sunday afternoon Bible school had an attendance of seventy and often more, the majority adults. The work was so successful that Rev. Felix Escalante, of California, was called as pastor of the mission in 1921. In the spring of 1922 it became the First Mexican Baptist Church of Denver, with over eighty members.

Meanwhile Rev. J. M. Rodriguez, formerly a Catholic priest in Mexico City, came to southern Colorado several years ago. He preached to congregations of his countrymen in Rocky Ford and La Junta. Baptist churches were organized by him in those towns, and houses of worship were erected. From time to time he has gone on missionary journeys in the Arkansas valley. Hundreds have been converted under his preaching. This earnest-minded man has preached in Fort Morgan, where more than fifty Mexicans were converted by his zealous appeals. Mr. Rodriguez takes up the work in Denver. His coming means that the Mexicans in the Platte Valley will be more concerned in community welfare and render better community service.

My Mother's Hands

(My mother has been dead for nearly twenty-five years. I found this among some papers she had preserved.—A. H. Finn.)

SUCH beautiful, beautiful hands!
They're neither white nor small,
And you, I know, would scarcely think
That they were fair at all.
I've looked on hands whose form and hue
A sculptor's dream might be,
Yet are those aged, wrinkled hands
Most beautiful to me.

Such beautiful, beautiful hands!
Though heart were weary and sad
These patient hands kept toiling on
That the children might be glad.
The tears well forth as, looking back
To childhood's distant day,
I think how these hands rested not
While mine were at their play.

Such beautiful, beautiful hands!
They are growing feeble now,
For time and pain have left their work
On hand, and heart, and brow.
Alas! alas! how near the time
Of pain and loss to me,
When 'neath the daisies, out of sight,
Those hands will folded be.

But, oh, beyond the shadow land,
Where all is bright and fair,
I know full well these dear old hands
Will palms of victory wear.
Where crystal streams through endless years
Flow over golden sands
And where the old grow young again,
I'll clasp my mother's hands.

Continental Beggars

By J. H. Rushbrooke

There is superabundance of genuine distress on the continent of Europe, but, as was to be expected, the sympathy of Christian people in America and Britain is often exploited by unworthy persons. I have lately given some examples, here is another which has come into my hands this morning. The following extract is from a letter written by the official representative of one of the continental Baptist unions:

"In the matter of the begging letter from . . . ., I have to inform you; I got the local pastor to visit the place and to obtain information about . . . .. I also asked one of our Baptist families to tell me of him. The replies show that . . . . . is not a member of a Baptist church, that he has no Christian character, and is known as a work-shy, discontented and altogether ill-disposed man. He devotes himself to composing begging letters for the sake of gain. His conditions are in many respects incomparably better than those of many families. Since he cannot write himself he compels his wife, who is a Baptist, to write such letters against her conscience. All my information demonstrates that it would be mistaken and utterly ill-advised to give special help to a man who neither needs or deserves it."

I earnestly hope that all who receive such letters professing to emanate from Baptists will send them to me. Then inquiries will be made through the responsible relief committees which exist in connection with each of the national Baptist Unions; and if there is real need it will be brought to light and assistance given.

Sowing and Reaping

By Mrs. W. Scott

Like a radio message over intervening mountain and plain to my home by the sea, came the article in The Baptist of Jan. 27, from H. C. Morse, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Denver—"The New World Movement in My Church."

To the inspiring words I have quick response. In my "Memory Book," I found a little print of a barnlike building under which was printed "The Dugout—1868-1872—" It was the home center of a few loyal Baptists who had started with a vision of a fine edifice a basement plan, six feet below surface, then the work was halted and three feet was added above ground and roofed over. It was to this church—the veritable "mother of all the Baptist churches in the city of Denver"—that my husband was called as pastor in 1871. He accepted the "call" on one condition—"That the church get out of this place and build within a year." This was done, and the following year saw us in a commodious chapel on Eighteenth Street. Later a large pipe organ was installed, the first one of the kind in the city.

We did not then have the "New World Movement" which is proving such a blessing to both the helped and the helper. But our success was made possible by the foresight of a young man named Potter who was a Baptist. He came from Rochester University to Denver for his health. A few years before he acquired some "realty" which before his decease he placed in trust with the Home Mission Society to be used for the Baptist work in the city. We invited Dr. N. B. Anderson, then president of Rochester University, and his wife to visit us and take a trip through the Rockies. Through his interest in our work and influence with the Home Mission Society, this property was made available in our time of great need and put us as Baptists in the forefront of religious work in the city.

Neither did we have organized city missions work, but we started Baptist interests in three different strategic points. These interests have since grown into prosperous Baptist churches.

Many changes have come since the chapel on Eighteenth Street was built. It did not long hold the mother church in 1901, and now this beautiful home is likewise too small for its family of over 1000, who with hearts and hands so full of the New World Movement, also full of joy, are gathering in the harvest and planning for a larger building to meet the expanding conditions. The accomplished work of the First Baptist Church of Denver is an inspiration to all, especially so to a little missions church of San Diego, dedicated to the memory of Winfield Scott, a former pastor of the First Baptist Church of Denver. He died Oct. 19, 1910.

A Nucleus for the National Memorial, Washington, D. C.

On Apr. 22, the Immanuel Church, Rev. G. G. Johnson, pastor, burned the $50,000 mortgage which marked the conclusion of the payments on the church's debt. The services were attended by Secretary of Labor Davis and Assistant Secretary of Labor Henning. Through the payment of the last note, the property becomes a clear gift to the Baptist denomination as the nucleus of the national memorial to religious liberty.

A letter received from President Harding read as follows: "I am writing to congratulate you and your associates on the splendid showing and progress you have made in the last year in behalf of the National Baptist memorial. I wish it were possible for me to be with you on Sunday for the special commemoration of this accomplishment. Not being able to meet with you, I want, at least, to present my felicitations and good wishes and the assurance of my continuing interest in the work you are carrying forward."

Secretary of State Hughes wrote: "I am gratified to learn that you have cleared off the $50,000 mortgage which has rested upon the present church property. I congratulate you and the members of the church upon this splendid achievement, and especially upon the opportunity that is now afforded to present the entire property free of debt as the basis of the National Baptist memorial. This memorial is of the deepest significance and will be a lasting inspiration."

Detroit Doings

By A. H. Finn

At the Second Church on Friday evening, April 27, occurred the graduating exercises of several study classes conducted by Rev. L. T. Clay, of the Detroit Christian Center for negro people. Miss Nannie Burrows, of Washington, D. C., was present for the occasion as a special compliment to Miss Alexander, directress of the center, who is a graduate of Miss Burrows' school. The Second Church was filled with an intelligent and enthusiastic audience. Diplomas were given out by Rev. B. T. Leonard, religious education director, of the Detroit Union, and special gifts by Dr. H. C. Gleiss, general superintendent of the Detroit Union, under whose auspices this whole work is being done. Miss Burrows gave a great address, sane, practical and inspiring. Few can speak so authoritatively as Miss Burrows. She loves her people, but not with a sick sentimentality. She made very plain the steps upward. Civilization and advancement is not a matter of white or black, but of efficiency and a willingness to serve. The negroes in the North have wonderful opportunities, but the use of these opportunities marks a crisis in the history of the race.

Dr. P. C. Wright Visits Detroit.

Rev. P. C. Wright, of the ministers' and missionaries' benefit board, spent four profitable days in eastern Michigan recently. Sunday morning, April 29, he spoke at the Woodward Avenue Church, Detroit, for Doctor Hoag. In the afternoon he spoke in the Second Roumanian church to a large and appreciative audience. Sunday evening he was with Doctor Klyver, at the Immanuel church. Monday was another busy day. He spoke three times: In the morning to the Detroit Baptist pastor's gathering, in the afternoon he had a conference with the pastors of the Wayne Association, meeting at Pontiac, and in the evening delivered an address in the First Church, Pontiac. On Tuesday, he attended the session of the Flint River Association, meeting with the church at Atlas, and delivered an address, going to Flint where he spoke in the First Church in the evening. Wednesday was the annual meeting of the Ministers' Aid Society in Fenton. For a number of years the ministers' and missionaries' benefit board has been aiding in the support of the home for aged ministers or the widows of ministers at Fenton. It has been the earnest wish of the board having this home in charge to have a representative of the ministers' and missionaries' board present for the annual meeting. It was, therefore, a matter of great joy to have Doctor Wright attend this gathering. Mr. F. P. Beaver, of Dayton, O., is the president; Rev. J. W. Priest, of Sturgis, is the secretary; and Mr. Grant Brown, of Flint, is the treasurer. Miss Lou LaTourett has been the very efficient superintendent for many years.

At the First Church, Detroit, on Saturday afternoon, April 28, was held a unique children's rally, when the children in the Sunday schools of our foreign speaking Baptist churches were the guests of the First Church school. There was a Bible drill by the Russian school; song by the Russian and Second Roumanian; Old Testament lesson by First and Third Roumanian and Serbian schools; New Testament lesson by Second Roumanian and Hungarian schools; patriotic exercise, children of many nations; industrial work of the children of all the schools; song "America the Beautiful;" address by Doctor Gleiss; salute to the flags, and then an exhibit of hand work done by pupils of the schools. It was a gerat and happy event and made a profound impression on all. Miss Cooper deserves great credit for its accomplishment.

Church News by States

Atlantic Coast

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Rev. Harvey E. Whitcomb has recently finished his second year with the church at Milton Mills. They have been prosperous years with substantial additions to the membership, a full treasury, $200 added to the pastor's salary, extensive repairs on the church building and parsonage, with all bills paid and increased congregations animated by a spirit of loyalty and unity.

VERMONT

The church and community of South Newfane greatly feels the death of Mrs. G. M. Love who died Sunday, April 22 after being struck by an automobile. Mrs. Love was prominent in both church and local affairs.

The Vermont Baptist Anniversaries to be held at Montpelier, June 4-6 promise to be unusually attractive. Among the special features will be the first meeting of the recently organized Woman's Mission Society of Vermont, at which Miss Linnie A. Holbrook of Assam, will speak. Miss Helen E. Hobart, national field secretary for the W. W. G. has been secured to deliver an address. Other speakers from outside the state will be Rev. P. C. Wright, Rev. W. B. Lipphard, Rev. Harry S. Myers, Rev. W. E. Raffety, Miss Ruth A. Carter and Rev. J. J. Ross. The newly elected principal of Vermont Academy, John B. Cook, will also address one of the sessions.

Two new courses have been added this year to the curriculum of the school of religious education which will be conducted at Vermont Academy from June 19 to 30, viz:—a course on Doctor Axling's new mission study book, "Japan on the Upward Trail," which will be given by Miss Marguerite Haven of the Mary Colby School in Yokohama, Japan, and a course on the new home mission study book, "The Debt Eternal" given by Rev. W. P. Behan of Ottawa University, Kansas.

Hon. William W. Stickney, as the agent for the board of trustees, recently purchased for the convention property in Springfield which will doubtless later be remodeled and utilized as a church site. It consists of a large lot upon which is a house which will make a good parsonage and a barn which can be built over for a chapel.

CONNECTICUT

Mrs. Annie Emery Merrill, wife of Rev. Charles A. Merrill, pastor of the Noank Church, passed away on April 4. Mrs. Merrill was deeply interested in all phases of religious work. Funeral services were held at Noank and Vineyard Haven. She is survived by her husband and five children.

Rev. J. H. Stearns, pastor of the Montville Union Church, baptized thirteen converts April 29. There is an encouraging interest on the part of many others.

Rev. W. D. Hetherington resigned as pastor of the Fitchville Church on April 22. He has accepted a call to the Preston City Church and will begin his new work June 1.

Rev. D. P. Gaines, pastor of the First Church, Waterbury, expects to attend the World Alliance. He will conduct a special party. Mr. Gaines was assisted in special meetings recently by Rev. D. A. Pitt, pastor of the Central Church, Norwich.

Drs. H. J. White and J. N. Lackey, co-pastors of the Central Church, Hartford, received fifty new members on Easter.

Rev. Will H. Houghton of Norristown, Pa., conducted an evangelistic campaign at the First Church, Danbury, of which Rev. Ellis Gilbert is pastor.

Rev. P. F. Wolfenden resigned at Main Street, Meriden, to accept a call to the First Church, Bristol.

Reports at the annual meeting of the First Church, Meriden, indicated that the work was progressing. The church showed its appreciation of the leadership of the pastor, Rev. B. N. Timbie, by an increase of salary.

The contest between the men's class of the Central Church, Norwich, and that of the First Church, New London, ended Palm Sunday. The Central Church won the contest. Fifty new members received the hand of fellowship April 8. The following Sunday the governor and Mrs. Templeton attended the services. The women of the church held their annual banquet April 13.

On April 17 the men of the First Church, New London, entertained the men's class of the Central Church, Norwich. The work at the First Church is continuing to expand. Rev. A. C. Darrow visited the church April 29 and spoke on his work in Burma.

MASSACHUSETTS

Rev. John C. Sycamore recently completed eight years of service with the Second Church, Holyoke. They have been fruitful years. The church building has been remodeled and an organ installed at a cost of $87,500, all of which is subscribed, and 390 new members have been received. It is the church's aim to contribute as much for missions as is spent for local work. The congregation presented Mr. Sycamore a car to facilitate his pastoral work.

NEW YORK

Rev. James L. Coote has resigned as pastor of the Baldwinsville Church after having served for nine years. He has accepted a call to the church at Hudson. Mr. and Mrs. Coote were given a farewell reception and were presented with purses by the members of the church.

At a recent special meeting, the members of the Temple Church, Rochester, voted unanimously to erect a $1,500,000 combined church and office building on its present site. The pastor, Rev. Clinton Wunder, presided at the meeting. The vote was taken after the detailed report and recommendations of the committee which has been studying the proposition for nearly two years, were read. A new building committee of eight men was appointed with authority to proceed to have plans drawn and the building erected as soon as the financial obligations stipulated have been met. These include the raising of $250,000 by subscriptions extending over a period of five years, the raising of $300,000 by the sale of second mortgage bonds and obtaining $950,000 by a first mortgage loan. The new structure as planned in the recommendations will either be eight stories in height with a tower of five additional stories, or a nine story building without the tower. The church auditorium will seat 1,800 persons and will occupy a large part of the first and second floors. There will be Sunday-school accommodations for more than 2,000 persons. Approximately 300 offices will be provided and also six retail stores on the first floor. The campaign for raising the $250,000 by subscription will be conducted May 29-June 10 by Dr. F. H. Divine. The present building fund of the church, amounting to $125,000, will be used for furnishing the interior of the structure when completed.

NEW JERSEY

The Easter collection of the First Church, Metuchen, amounted to $3,252, which will be used to erect a new parsonage to cost $10,000, $6,000 of which is in hand. During the present pastorate a mortgage of $4,500 has been paid in full, the membership has increased 90 per cent, a new pipe organ installed and the pledge to the N. W. M. paid in full. Rev. Calvin A. Hare is pastor.

Rev. William Ernest Braisted, has just completed his fifth year at the First Church, Red Bank. This group of Baptists is reporting, as are many other Baptist churches in New Jersey, one of the greatest periods of its history. Before Doctor Braisted's ministry began the total five-year contributions for benevolences were a little over $3,000. In the five years just closed the Red Bank Church contributed almost $30,000 for missionary purposes. There has been a fine steady growth in the number of baptisms; new members added by letter; in the Sunday school increased attendance and membership. From time to time Doctor Braisted's salary has been increased and within the last month the church, wishing to express appreciation of his work, again added to the pastor's salary. Doctor Braisted has not only won an effective place in the life of Red Bank but has done efficient work on the boards of the New Jersey Convention. The anniversary day was marked by special services, Dr. R. E. Farrier, of Syracuse, N. Y. and the executive secretary of New Jersey being special speakers. The pastor had the joy of baptizing three young people into the fellowship of the church. Dr. Bernard C. Taylor who, for so many years was professor at Crozer Seminary and now a member of the Red Bank Church, was unable to attend.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

The annual meeting of the First Church, Pittsburgh, was held Wednesday, April 25, which also marked the completion of the first year of the pastorate of Rev. C. Wallace Petty. Over 350 sat down to dinner, following which, brief addresses were given by W. E. Lincoln, E. E. Hamilton and the pastor. The reports presented were proof of the degree of success attained during the year: $29,000 was expended for current expenses, which wiped out a deficit of $2,600 the preceding year, and about $21,000 for missions. Fifty new members have been welcomed. The congregations have steadily increased. Pittsburgh is a great Presbyterian stronghold, but in one year Doctor Petty has brought Baptists into a position of prominence. The work with young people and among the university students is developing satisfactorily under Rev. David Boswell, who was called last fall. It has been a year of remarkable achievement.

The Ministers' Conference, Pittsburgh, was unusually fortunate recently in securing speakers who delivered inspiring addresses. Dr. J. Y. Aitchison was present April 9 and gave facts about the New World Movement and denominational support of missionary enterprises. Secretary J. C. Robbins spoke April 23 on the personnel, policies, problems and opportunities of the Foreign Mission Society; April 30, Rev. John E. Geil, of Africa, made a strong appeal for the work in the Congo, and Rev. S. L. Roberts, of the Publication Society, spoke on teacher training. The brotherhood has voted to undertake in a quiet way personal solicitation of a limited number of individuals in the Pittsburgh district to raise $8,000 which is needed to complete the new church at Jamshedpur, India, where Rev. Zo Brown, member of the Bellevue Church, is doing such heroic work.

The Baptist Church at Greensburg, Rev. H. J. Whalen, pastor, celebrated its fiftieth anniversary during the week, April 1-8. An interesting and complete history of the church, with biographies of its pastors and leading members, description of the various organizations of the church, their program and officers, and missionaries and ministers sent out by the church, was written by L. C. Walkinshaw and published in book form. The church has purchased a lot two blocks from the present edifice and is making plans for building on an extensive scale. The present pastor has served the church since 1915. The church is characterized under Doctor Whalen's leadership by efficient organization, well-rounded interests and efforts, loyalty to the denomination and a definite and constructive program for the future.

Dr. I. W. Riggs, of Bethel Church, Carrick, passed away suddenly Monday, April 9. Bethel Church is the outgrowth of a mission Bible school started by Doctor Riggs. From the first, he was a faithful and devoted worker in Bethel and the church owes more to him than to any other man. He was widely known as a Christian gentleman, uniformly kind and courteous.

The annual meeting of the Johnston Avenue Church, Rev. R. M. Campbell, pastor, was well attended. Everyone was happy, for the past year has been the best in the history of the church. A year ago the church was disorganized and burdened with debt. The members rallied about the new pastor and problems were solved. The attendance at church and Bible school has increased; in the past three months all the debts have been paid and a balance is in the treasury. Rev. W. C. Chappell was the guest of honor and spoke on the principles of a successful church work. Rev. W. A. Rupert, a former pastor, also spoke briefly.

Rev. E. P. Rundell died April 27 while engaged in evangelistic meetings at Butler, Pa. He was born in Suther's Mills, Pa., April 12, 1864. In 1885 he married Miss Myrtie Leonard. His first pastorate was at Newark Valley, N. Y., and for twenty years he served in New York, Ohio and Pennsylvania. For a time because of ill health he retired from active pastoral work, but recently he had accepted a call to the Bellevue Church, Ohio and was to begin work May 1. Funeral services were held at the Perry Church, Perry, O., and were conducted by Rev. A. R. Woodworth, who was assisted by Doctor Fitch of Ashtabula and Rev. A. G. Adriance of Bellevue. Mr. Rundell is survived by his wife and two children.

THERE WERE THREE BAPTISMS at the Patton Church on April 8. The work is in an encouraging condition. Pastor Zwayer is in the thirteenth year of his pastorate. The church has a mission located in a French and Belgium settlement where Mr. Zwayer also preaches.

OHIO

AS THE RESULT OF SPECIAL MEETINGS conducted at the Mt. Carmel, Deer Park Church, Cincinnati, by Rev. George R. Robbins, there were twenty-three additions to the church. The pastor, Rev. John C. Ellinwood baptized fifteen persons on April 15.

THE ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING and election of officers of the First Church, Delaware, was held April 4. The treasurer's report showed all bills paid and a balance on hand. During the present pastorate of less than two years forty-two new members have been received. This is encouraging in view of the fact that this is a Methodist center. As the result of special meetings conducted by Rev. A. B. Bowser, there were twenty additions to the membership. Rev. A. J. Bowser is pastor.

REV. J. G. WHITEN HAS ACCEPTED a call to the First Church, Lorain, and is already on the field. Lorain presents an unusual opportunity for aggressive Christian service. Mr. Whiten recently completed an extended course of graduate studies at the University of Chicago, although a graduate of a Toronto college.

REV. GEORGE M. HULME closed his work with the Trinity Church, Barberton, the last Sunday in April. He will devote his entire time to evangelism. A reception was tendered Mr. and Mrs. Hulme May 1 at which the congregation presented Mrs. Hulme a tea service and Mr. Hulme a purse of money. Mr. J. R. Davis, the senior deacon, or Mr. Geo. E. Ford, the clerk, can be communicated with relative to candidates for the pastorate.

ILLINOIS

AT THE REQUEST OF THE DIVERNON Church, a council was called April 23 to examine C. A. Patton. Rev. T. H. Marsh of Decatur was moderator and Rev. D. H. Toomey of Springfield, clerk. Rev. C. R. Drussel preached the ordination sermon. Mr. Patton expects to sail May 15 for San Paulo, Brazil, as a missionary of the Evangelical Union of South America.

THE FIRST CHURCH OF TAYLORVILLE has been greatly revived and strengthened by a two weeks' meeting immediately following Easter, in which Rev. G. P. Burdon of Shelbyville assisted the pastor. At the close of the meetings twenty-five members were received, most of them by baptism and more are expected to unite by letter and experience. Rev. Charles C. Colby is in his fourth year as pastor in this growing field.

KANSAS

REV. W. N. REYNOLDS, pastor of the First Church, Minneapolis, will attend the N. B. C. as a delegate from the church. Mr. and Mrs. Reynolds left May 7 for a month's stay in the East.

ON EASTER, THE FIRST CHURCH, Independence, began a series of meetings under the leadership of the pastor, assisted by Rev. and Mrs. George L. Rose. The meetings were held for twenty-two days and the result was 140 decisions for Christ. It is expected that sixty persons will unite with the church. During the first two weeks of the revival all current expenses of the meetings were raised. Rev. J. H. Bradbury is the new pastor.

IOWA

REV. CHARLES A. CARMAN, pastor of the First Church, Grinnell, was recently engaged in church vacation school institute work at Ottumwa and Creston. The other members of the faculty conducting the institutes were Rev. J. C. White of Indianola, Rev. C. C. Browne of Dunkerton and Rev. V. N. Witter of Des Moines.

WISCONSIN

THERE WERE TWENTY-THREE baptisms at the First Church, Madison, on Easter. The pastor, Rev. J. Sherman Wallace has resigned to become editor of all young people's Sunday-school publications issued by the Publication Society. During his pastorate the debt has been reduced $1,500, the building has been roofed, $25,000 has been raised for missionary purposes, and 125 new members were received.

NEBRASKA

REV. JOHN NEWTON FUNK, for twenty years a pastor in the state, died at the home of his daughter in Tecumseh. He was born near Jacksonville, Ill. After attending Shurtleff College, Mr. Funk went to Reynolds in 1891, his first pastorate. A year later he became pastor of the Mt. Zion Church, Tecumseh. In 1911 Mrs. Funk passed away. Mr. Funk is survived by two daughters.

THE SECOND CHURCH, LINCOLN, is doing a fine piece of work under the leadership of Rev. Henry G. Smith. Forty members have been received during the past year. A new parsonage has recently been purchased.

COLORADO

DR. ALLYN K. FOSTER recently spoke at at the First Church, Greeley. He also spent some time at the State Teacher's College.

REV. G. G. LAUGHLIN, who resigned May 1 as superintendent and executive secretary of the Denver Union, will devote his entire time to evangelism. Mr. Laughlin is well equipped for this kind of work. He may be addressed at 2421 Williams St., Denver.

ARIZONA

THE FIRST CHURCH, TUCSON, of which Rev. Richard S. Beal is pastor, recently closed an evangelistic campaign, conducted by Evangelist Harry O. Anderson of Berkeley, Cal. He was assisted by Mr. and Mrs. John Basil Long. As a result, there were 200 additions to the membership.

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Regional Convention of Mexicans

In behalf of the rapid growth of our Christian churches among the Mexicans of the San Joaquin Valley, especially through Baptist effort, there has been brought about a movement which has materialized in the first regional convention of Sunday schools and young people's societies among the Mexicans of Northern California.

Plans for the convention were laid about four months ago and the following officers were named: president, Rev. R. Q. Martinez, pastor of the Mexican Baptist Mission, Fresno; secretary, S. J. Dominguez, pastor Mexican Methodist Church, Bakersfield; corresponding secretary, E. N. Hernandez, pastor Mexican Methodist Church, Long Beach; treasurer, E. T. Martinez, pastor Mexican Baptist Mission, Dinuba; convention missionary, Rev. Jose Falcon of Los Angeles.

In our first meeting it was planned to hold our first convention in Fresno under the auspices of the Mexican Baptist Mission there, and that funds be contributed by the churches in the valley (interdenominational) to finance the convention as we had made plans to provide food and lodging to every delegate and visitor who lived outside Fresno. Arrangements were made with Rev. Thomas B. Frizelle, pastor of the First Church, for the use of the building during the convention.

There were many difficulties connected with the movement and up to the last hour only our Baptist churches showed signs of interest and activity. However, at the opening session, there were more people than any one had anticipated. There were twenty-seven delegates present at the first session, representing every Sunday school and young people's society in the valley, and the attendance varied from 180 at the first session to 340 at the last.

Each regular session was preceded by a devotional service which lasted a full hour. There was also a morning service at 6 o'clock. We believe that these services inspired us to do greater work for the Master.

The result of the meetings was seventy-four conversions, and we are going to try to win every Mexican in the valley for the Lord. Baptists everywhere are requested to pray for this great work. R. Q. Martinez.

MRS. HARRIET J. PERRIN

Mrs. Harriet J. Perrin went to be with the Lord April 26, 1923. She was born in Pittsford, N. Y., March 6, 1844, but moved to Iowa with her family while still young. She gave her life to her Saviour in early youth and was a staunch Baptist for sixty-nine years. In 1864 she married George W. Perrin of Floyd County, Iowa, and later moved to a farm near Mapleton, Iowa, where her home has been for more than forty years. She loved the service of the Lord and was a tireless worker in church and Sunday school until advanced age made it necessary for her to give her tasks to others. She was the mother of eleven children, seven of whom she reared to Christian manhood and womanhood. The others died in infancy. She is survived by two sons, Chester M. Perrin and Arthur C. Perrin, and three daughters, Mrs. Fred Strange, Mrs. J. O. Masters and Eunice A. Perrin. "The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance."

The Story of Mrs. Hsu

By Mrs. E. C. Smyth, of Chou't'sun

THERE are tearful eyes and sorrowful hearts in the village of Liao Wu. "Hsu shih niang ssu liao, Ai ya, Ai ya." (Mrs. Hsü is dead—Alas! Alas!)

And pray who is this Mrs. Hsü?

Thirty years ago she was known as a woman who was constantly worrying her somewhat easy-going husband with questions about future life. She had heard, somewhere, that death only meant the death of the body, and she wanted to know how she was to secure the well-being of that part of her that did not die! Her husband, though a Tsien sheng (an educated man), could not help her, beyond telling her that if she did good deeds, she might go to Tien Tang (heaven), but if she did evil, she would land in Ti yu (hell). The poor woman did not get much comfort from that, and started to work out her own salvation. At the entrance to the village, by the side of a deep ravine, is a shrine, and here Mrs. Hsü would often prostrate herself, imploring the idols to help her te chiu (obtain salvation). "Only tell me what to do, and I will obey. If you tell me to throw myself down the ravine I will do it."

One day Mr. Hsü went to Chih Chuan City on business, and on his return pulled out some papers, saying to his wife, "You're always bothering about your soul. Today I heard a man preaching a save-soul doctrine, and he gave me these tracts. Now perhaps you will find what you want, and cease your questions."

"But I can't read," said Mrs. Hsü tearfully. "How shall I find out what the tracts tell us?"

"Well, I will read them to you," said her husband, "but mind, I am only going to read them once, so if you can't get the meaning, you must learn to recognize the characters and read them yourself."

True to his word he took the trouble to read the tracts aloud, and handed them to her; and it certainly was a case of the seed falling into good ground, for whether she was preparing the food, making the clothes, or nursing the babies, Mrs. Hsü might be seen with one of her precious tracts propped up in front of her, slowly and laboriously going over the characters until she knew them by heart. Then, very diplomatically she began to take special care in preparing her husband's food, and when she saw he was feeling satisfied, she would ask him to tell her any character she did not know!

One day an evangelist, visiting the village, went to Mrs. Hsü's house, and expressed astonishment at the number of characters she was able to read, and she (wise woman) gave all the credit to her husband! He was so shamed and touched by the gratitude he felt he did not deserve, that he afterwards devoted some time to helping her, and before long she was able to read most of the New Testament. Then she learned some hymns, "Jesus loves me," "I'm but a stranger here," and she began to sing them—to tunes of her own! Truth compels me to say she was not a singer, and she knew it! Once when her husband's brother beat her for "making such a noise," and told her she had "a voice like a crow," she said: "Ah well, the Heavenly Father will perhaps give me a sweet voice when I get to heaven."

Mr. Hsü, partly through reading and partly through his wife's influence, had become convinced of the truth of the "doctrine," and when Mrs. Hsü expressed her wish to be baptized he offered no objection, but to her great joy agreed that they should be baptized at the same time. The question was how to manage it. The eldest brother—head of the family—was very angry with them for having anything to do with the "foreign devil's doctrine," and had already beaten Mrs. Hsü more than once. But they heard that a baptismal service was to be held at a village ten miles away, and decided to steal away before daylight, and to ask the foreign missionary to baptize them quickly, so they might get back before they were missed!

This was in 1892, and from that time until her death Mrs. Hsü herself was a true missionary. She would gather her friends and neighbors together, and teach them to repeat the Lord's prayer and the catechism, exhorting them to repent and believe the Gospel which had proved such good news to her.

Soon after their baptism, Mr. and Mrs. Hsü had their faith severely tested. Eight years in succession their harvests failed and then the villagers, and some of their own family, attributed the trouble to the fact of their having embraced the foreign religion! Poor Mrs. Hsü would go to some quiet spot and there pour out her troubles before her Heavenly Father, "but," said she, in telling us this experience later, "I never let the neighbors see me crying, or they would have said the doctrine was no comfort in time of trouble; so I asked Heavenly Father to keep me always smiling" (and he did, as we can testify).

Years passed by—years of trial and difficulty—a special trouble being the conduct of their eldest son, who, unknown to them, borrowed 50,000 cash (about £2 10s.) of a neighbor, and when it was found out, ran away, and has never been heard of since—leaving a wife and two children to be supported by Hsü. But about this time Mr. Hsü obtained the position of teacher at our mission school at Poshan, and his wife "kept the gate" and made the food for the boys, and by strict economy they managed to get along, and even save a little money. The outlook at home also improved, and Mrs. Hsü, after a time, returned to Liao Wu, leaving her husband at the school.

The faith having stood the test, it seemed as if, like Job, they were to receive sevenfold for all they had suffered. Their harvests were more bountiful than ever before. The second son, whom they had managed to educate—one hardly knows how—was in a good position as teacher, and was married to a well-educated girl of good family. The third son was at home to look after the land, and he also had a good, capable wife, while the daughter was married to one of our pastors.—English Baptist Magazine.

BAD TIMES AHEAD?

Will the present period of prosperity in America remain indefinitely or will it be followed by another period of depression?

Irrespective of good times or bad, will your income remain stable?

You can assure yourself a fixed permanent income as long as you live by taking out an Annuity Agreement with the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society.

An Annuity Agreement represents a gift made to the Foreign Mission Society in return for which the Society guarantees to pay to the donor an annual income for life. After death the net principal is released for the work of the Society.

Rates of income, paid semi-annually, range from 4 per cent to 9 per cent, for single lives, and from 4 per cent to 8.3 per cent on agreements covering two lives.

For information write to Home Secretary P. H. J. Lerrigo, 276 Fifth Avenue, New York City. All correspondence will be treated sacredly confidential.

This form of gift constitutes a financial investment in a spiritual enterprise to which our Lord gave his life. It enables the donor to furnish substantial support to the cause of Foreign Missions and at the same time in view of financial needs, to receive an assured income as long as the donor lives.

AMERICAN BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSION SOCIETY

In all documents such as wills, etc., it is important that the full corporate name of the Society as indicated above be used

Fugitive Facts

By Charles L. White

THE churches must be prodigal in the distribution of their truth as nature is in the scattering of her seed.

In these days of contagion through germs, society is such a mixture that no rich man is safer than his poorest neighbor. Does not this throw new light on the ancient question "Am I my brother's keeper?"

The church gives its blood for transfusion into the veins of the nation. It grafts the skin of its faith on the life, that has been scarred by sin.

The prophet of God who can discover the germ of unscriptural denominationalism and kill it, would as much deserve the Nobel prize as the one who discovers a germicide for a terrible disease.

Religiously we must return to the spirit of earnestness that animated the Puritans who sought first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and found it true that all other things were added unto them.

Plymouth Rock is the sacred spot of a spiritual democracy.

As bad germs should be kept out of our homes so bad immigrants should be kept out of our country.

The church inspires and trains leaders for every philanthropic work.

The church creates the atmosphere of education and progress which makes men inventors of much political and social betterment, and sticks to the production of primary products all the time.

The theocratic ideal of the church controlling the state, the secular ideal of the state controlling the church, the divisive ideal of the church and state as totally unrelated, must all give way to the true ideal of the church in the state, an integral and useful part, training men for the state and for every position of trust as spheres of Christian service.

The Beer Bottle on the Communion Table

BY JOHN H. BOURNE

THERE are saints in the South Sea Islands—even in Tahiti, despite recent novelists and faked moving pictures.

Tahiti's only road, 180 miles long, follows the coast line, close to the sea and at the foot of the mountains. Sometimes the ocean rises up and swallows this road, and sometimes the overhanging mountains slide down and bury it. On the far side of the island are many mad rivers, but no bridges; and when there is a rain on the mountains—an almost continuous performance, the traveler must just philosophize until the water is crossable. Hence, while a phase of life in the seaport city of Papeete is well known to tourists and to the reading public, the real life of the Tahitians in the hinterland is quite unknown.

Back on the untraveled side of Tahiti, farthest removed from the white man influences of Papeete, I built my house of bamboo poles and cocoanut palms and became a part of the primitive native settlement—its only white man.

My first visitor was an undersized brown-skinned man who said: "Me Sam, me cookee you." His words were startling, but his face was beaming with friendliness. To my joy, Sam when a young man had sailed the seas long enough to become an artist in pigeon English. Sam trotted out and brought in his buxom wife, the mother of fourteen children, whom he introduced as "She Tau, she washee you," and without waiting for my assent they took possession of me and mine.

The Tahitians are profoundly religious. Before our second meal, Sam said: "If allee same you likee, of no care you no, me an Tau we speakee a pray to God on table when quick come eatee everysink." These white-souled saints in brown skins had noted my omission at the first meal and were asking permission to say grace before meals. And before this meal was finished I was taught that to turn the loaf of bread with the bottom side up was not respect to God in heaven, and further, that when the blessing is asked at the table, as well as when I go into church, I should remove the tiare from behind my ear, because the Tahitian custom of wearing flowers on the ears was connected with ancient heathen rites and not pleasing to the true God.

In such ways I came to learn that the natives, when separated from the distractions of their seaport city, were both reverent and moral. Certainly, some of the youngsters would occasionally fade away for a hula dance, but I also remember reading somewhere that in America the children of deacons sometimes like to "shake a leg," too. I discovered that it was not necessary to lock my doors or satchels, as one must do in America, for these people are too remote from civilization to know the fine art of stealing, and I have yet to hear the first angry or profane word in Tahiti—except from sailors and tourists in the port of Papeete.

Back in Hitiaa I found a church of continuous existence for almost a century: none could tell me what kind of a church it was, except that it was the Protestant church. Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian are unknown words. They are not in the Tahitian language. This church had been one of the out-stations of the Papeete mission of the London missionary society 125 years ago; but forty years ago England ceded Tahiti to France and the French Protestants (Presbyterian) took over this mission.

A French pastor, de Pomeret, and his English-speaking wife were sent to Tahiti as missionaries; and for forty years these faithful old souls have been the worthy exponents of evangelical Christianity. De Pomeret is pastor of Papeete's large native church called "the Protestant Church" which has an enthusiastic Sunday school and many week-night educational and singing classes. He also conducts a school with a four-year course for the training of native pastors and carries upon his shoulders the responsibility of all the native churches around the island.

The whole existence of the natives centers in their church. Going to church is a religious routine and their only social activity. The churches are open night and day. Starting early in the morning, groups of natives assemble for prayer, while others come and go during the night. At least twice a month the entire population of Hitiaa, from doddering age to nursing babe, spends the whole night in church singing—singing without musical accompaniment and while squatting on the floor. Sometimes they close the eyes and sway the body as if crooning a lullaby, and again they flame up and shout as if in reality they were "Christian soldiers going to war."

And with all this religious activity, the church at Hitiaa has no pastor or missionary. Services are conducted by the chief of the district or by other of the "service-for-God" men, as the church members are called. But on every second Sunday the native pastor from a neighboring district comes to conduct a communion service. That is, he comes if he can get across the rivers. If he cannot get across, the sacrament is postponed until the first Sunday he can get through.

The communion service is identical with that in most evangelical churches in America. It follows the morning sermon, shortly after the wall clock over the preacher's head has solemnly struck twelve. The service-for-God men and women move a little closer to the front, but still separated into their four singing groups, while the rest of the congregation retires.

It was like old times to see the parson step behind the table with its covering of snowy whiteness. In the large native church at Papeete, as in other native churches, there was a nice silver communion set—such as used in American churches before the days of individual cups—so I was not prepared for the jolt that came when the barefooted deacons of this back-country church in the South Sea Islands raised the snowy cloth and revealed four thick china plates, four cheap glass tumblers and, as a centerpiece, a beer bottle containing the communion wine! You would have been shocked too; at first shocked and then overwhelmed with sympathy and respect for their reverent manner was testimony to their deep devotion and their pitiful communion outfit bespoke their utter poverty.

I knew, of course, that the beer bottle was merely a container, a very practical container in the tropics, and that in the minds of the natives it had no such sinister associations as it has in America. But I could not suppress the feeling that these people, the victims rather than the beneficiaries of modern civilization were worthy of, and perhaps entitled to, something better. And I remembered that churches in America sometimes have those good old-fashioned silver communion sets shoved away with the old pulpit Bibles, never to be used again.

Now, an old silver communion set wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a dark closet is of no possible value to God or man; but a consecrated beer bottle is a treasure. Therefore this trading proposition: Which church in America will exchange its abandoned silver set for the old beer bottle from the South Seas?

A Plea for Fair Play

limit their opportunity. Of course, we cannot cover the whole world field, and under ordinary circumstances we should not rush in on the fields well occupied by others while there are great sections of the world untouched, but why embarrass ourselves longer and be disloyal to our Lord by a short-sighted policy of allocation of responsibility and territory? Spiritual responsibility cannot be allocated except by the Lord himself.

Baptists need to hold themselves free to go anywhere at any time under the leadership of the Spirit and in keeping with the great commission, and this should apply to northern India around Lucknow, where the Methodists seem to have full possession. The question with us should be: Is it now the will of the Lord? Baptists have always made the will of the Lord paramount, and there it no reason above the horizon justifying any change from our age-long policy. Let the Baptists of the world, including the Northern Baptist, take as their rallying cry: On to the ends of the earth with the full message of the truth, in the name of Christ our King, as quickly as men and money can be furnished.

Family, by Wayland Wells Williams. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Co. $2 net.

The story of a New England family afflicted with family. The Deeres are the family of Wortley. The picture Mr. Williams gives of Wortley, through his characters, is a truer picture of a small town than is "Main Street." Nathan Deere, the primary character, marries—"out of his class"—a wife, Fortune by name and a fortune indeed. She is an individual, not a type. While never yielding an iota of her independence or dimming a shade of her personality, she contrives to make the good and happiness of her husband the paramount issue of her life. What a mother-in-law should not be is typified in Sarah Deere, with whom Nathan and Fortune make their home until matters come to a crisis. Living up to the family name and traditions seems in a fair way to thwart the life of Nathan Deere, until it is revealed that he carries not a drop of Deere blood in his veins. Hence he is free—no longer bound to uphold the family profession and precedent, and he drops (or rises, as you will) from law to motors, which brings about his migration from New England to Detroit, Mich. The book is never dull and the story moves along without lagging. The reader becomes an intimate of the family life of the Deeres and of Wortley. Were the occasional cigarettes and "damns" deleted, the book would be improved.

The Red Redmaynes, by Eden Phillpotts. New York: The Macmillan Co. $2.

The ominous mystery and the awful silence of Dartmoor provide a setting for a somewhat lurid and exciting tale in which a case of clever substitution baffles both detectives and reader to the end. The story reminds one of Oppenheim's "Great Impersonation." The reputed murder of a Redmayne enlists the service of a famous sleuth who soon finds himself ardently in love with the attractive young widow of the victim. Thus blinded by love, the renown of the great detective suffers eclipse, and it remains for an American expert to find the trail—with a surprising outcome. For pastime reading "The Red Redmaynes" ranks high.

Theosophy and Christian Thought, by W. S. Urquhart. Boston: Pilgrim Press. $2.25.

This is a fair-minded presentation of what theosophy is—its teaching, its relation to science and to Christianity, and it is a keen critique of its position. The author, a professor of philosophy in Calcutta, is well acquainted with the literature of theosophy and presents its history, sources and claims in such a way that the reader may readily grasp them without getting too much mixed up in the maze of its elusive tenets. His chapter on "Theosophy and Christianity" has some thought-provoking suggestions for thinking Christians, such as: "Theosophy challenges us to make the most of our religious inheritance, to cease from our to enter into the experience of the saints so that along with them we may feel that the whole world is alive with God."

The Best I Remember, by Arthur Porritt, Editor Christian World, New York: George H. Doran Co. $3 net.

With the exception of Sir William Robertson Nichols, editor of the British Weekly, possibly the author is the best known editor of a religious publication in Great Britain. He claims these "remembrances" were not written except for fugitive newspaper columns, but "they grew" on him so that in this volume there are about 400 remembrances and glimpses of noted men and newspapers. He had every opportunity as an editor for his task—access to the leaders of men and events, personal friendships and other privileges of a great paper to know such men and study the events. If the men considered in this volume were congested into a solitary individual we might mistake the volume for "Boswell's Life of Johnson." He devotes only a few pages to the longest "glimpses" of eminent men, but they are presented in crises of their history or of events related to them. Comments, criticism, praises are freely offered without fear or favor, with personal reminiscences. We have the names of Spurgeon, Gladstone, R. J. Campbell, Parker, Mead, Moody, Price Hughes, Myers, Clifford and a host of others, celebrities in politics, religion and society. His criticisms are sometimes caustic; theologically his bias is pronouncedly modernistic. We trust that his reminiscences of British men are more reliable than are his references to American. He writes of Robert Burdette as a humorist and as a pastor of Tremont Temple, Boston! He gives two "jokes" to his credit, one of them was ancient before Burdette was born; the other is entangled with a "glass eye," the author implies Burdette had. We suspect the joke is connected with Dr. P. S. Henson for we heard him tell it on himself and Burdette never could boast of such an eye. The volume is as chockfull of gossipy information and entertaining stories and experiences as we have read in many years. We get "inside information" about men and events not found in a biography. 'Tis a comfort as we read the lives of great men to learn how human and like our weak selves they were! Now and then we catch a glimpse of the true inward life of a great, at least a famous man, whom we had apotheosized and lo—he was quite human! This volume deepens this estimate we have of our fellows.

"It Is to Laugh"

A visitor was admiring a monument in an ancient church. Gazing at the effigies of a ruffled knight and stately dame, with a kneeling train of children behind each figure, he mused aloud: "Surely such surroundings must have a purifying influence!"

"Yes, indeed, sir," was the startling reply of the church cleaner, who had walked up unobserved. "Many a time I've washed them images' faces for 'em, when a flick of a duster was all that was expected of me!"

The three little darkies stood in line for inspection.

"And what are their names, Mandy?" asked the mistress.

"Dey's all got flower names, missie," replied Mandy. "Ah name them myself. De bigges' one's name is Gladioli, and de nex' one we done call Helitrope."

"Very pretty," was the mistress' comment. "And what's the third one?"

"Flower name again, missie. She am Artuhficial!"

OUR MUSIC CORNER

An Irritated Organist Speaks

One of the most common and frequent subjects for comment and discussion in the pages of the technical journels dealing with church and choral music is that of the poor equipment possessed by singers who inspire to church work. Most singers who present themselves to music committees have a stock-in-trade of a few sacred solos, a vague acquaintance with a fewer number of anthems, and almost total ignorance as to hymns, responses and the details of a church service. This lack of intelligent equipment is not to be wondered at when the mental viewpoint of the average vocal student is taken into consideration. The majority of voice pupils are wholly illiterate musically when they start upon the glamorous, (but eternally long) road which winds its way toward success. The common garden variety of piano pupil knows more of music and understands and can translate the symbols into results better after two or three years' work than does the usual mature singer after decades of so-called study. Most vocal students with whom I have come in contact—and they are many!—have undertaken what they think is sincere vocal study after they reach the period of the early twenties. Too many of them seem to act upon the axiom that a teacher's value depends upon a lack of ability to make simple explanations in our language and violent displays of what we are pleased to look upon as temperament. Too much of the time the hocus-pocus fake with the suave glitter of mystical phrases and the hypnotic eye gathers in his flock of aspiring gullibles. The voice teachers fall into two big classes—and one small popular class consists of the "tone" experts, who, each in his way, sets out to "place" the voices, "make" voices, prating lovingly of registers, breaks, blendings, vowel-shades, laryngeal virtuosities and pharyngeal curiosities. And this is as far as the greater mass of singers get. If they are exceptionally fortunate, they get under the guidance of an honest, efficient voice-builder, and bud forth able to produce pleasing variations of volume and tone at a wide choice of pitches, preferably high and exceedingly loud!

The unfortunate usually take up matrimony, or "give vocal instruction" after fruitless years of struggle.

A much smaller proportion of students concentrate their efforts on the "coach" who usually takes what vocal equipment the good Lord gave each subject and then outfits each pupil with a more or less individual stock of songs, and at least an aspiration for artistry. Too many of these so-called coaches are piano-teachers or performers who have failed to reach the Olympian heights in their specific fields and have changed the style of the shingles to accommodate the more profitable clientele. Another brand to fight shy of is the "operatic coach" who talks much and vaguely of a distinguished past abroad, but displays nothing tangible at the present but an impenetrable self-satisfaction! Opera for all but one out of a million is a delusion and a snare. The American singers who have achieved any prominence in this field can be figured on ten fingers. As a vague hope, operatic ambition is a good tonic. As a specialization, it is insanity! The great trouble with the vocal students of today is this foolish dance around the moth-flame of opera. I know earnest students slaving away under operatic coaches who cannot read music as fast as the average child of five can decipher his alphabet, who lack any conception of time or rhythm, and who have not the slightest vision of what the necessary equipment for a musical career is. They are blind, groping around in darkness.

The third, and smallest, group of teachers mentioned, would consist of that select few who realize that we must have both musical and vocal mastery to have any chance to succeed. The teacher must take the voice as nature presents it, and by correcting faulty habits, and coordinating the delicate apparatus, give a method of singing that is natural, automatic, healthy and efficient. But he must realize that this is but one small aspect of the problem. Directly, or by means of judicious recommendation, the pupil must be awakened to the need of a fitting education—the necessity of being able to read music as easily as we read printed words; to cultivate the sense of rhythm so that the proportionate values of a melody are as positive as its pitch individuality; an appreciation of the subtleties of expression notation, and that association and correlation of ideas we call "cultured education." To put the matter into plain English, apart from the technical jargon of the art, real success in singing depends on: Adequate ability to read music, control of the breath and tonal results so that "accidents" never occur, a likable quality of voice, intelligent mastery of language, and sufficient general education to give vision and definite meanings to the words. I might add, a specialized equipment in the particular field chosen.

The singer intending to do church singing needs a good repertoire of devotional sacred solos—songs which shall be of interest and value to a congregation, fitting to the particular occasion, vocally effective and musically valid. He or she needs practice in singing in large auditoriums with the accompaniment of an organ. Practice in singing with other singers, both in choral work and in what we may term "solo ensemble" (duets, trios, quartets, etc.) is absolutely essential. Due acquaintance with the anthem and ensemble church literature is positively necessary. And finally and most important, there must be present the sincere religious spirit. No singer can make a success of church singing unless the soul as well as the body sings in praise of God and the brotherhood of man. That vocalist who looks upon singing in divine service as merely a temporary financial necessity or only a training school for other fields will never succeed in this difficult art. I am well aware that many singers consider church singing as a sort of stop-gap at best, something belittling to their high aspirations! And there are many vocal teachers who actively dissuade their pupils from such a field for one reason or another. And both are badly mistaken. The best singers produced in this country have come by way of the choir-loft. I can always pick out the choir-trained pupil when he comes to exhibit his wares. Give me the pupil who has sung in the chorus choir in his home town; he will have a foundation that will lighten my work and quicken results. Let the rest of the teachers collect "opera bugs"—I am satisfied to get trained church-singers.

Report of the Committee on Future Denominational Program

On behalf of the committee on future denominational program of the Northern Baptist Convention I desire to express gratitude to all who have cooperated with the committee. The response to the questionnaire which was sent out, and also to the appeal made through the Baptist press was widespread. In addition many helpful suggestions were offered by individuals who were called into conference. The committee has thus been able to learn what representative members of our churches in all parts of our constituency are thinking about the questions involved.

It seems desirable that the denomination should have some acquaintance in advance of the meeting of the convention with the general nature of the report to be presented by the committee. The committee accordingly has authorized me to publish its general conclusions. These will form the basis for the report and the recommendations to be presented will aim at giving effect to them. They are given publicity here with the hope that they may receive careful consideration, but that final judgment upon them will be suspended until they have had more adequate presentation, with their accompanying recommendations, in the completed report. They are as follows:

1. The place and function of the local church should be emphasized anew. Promotion of its prosperity should be part of our united endeavor, and its verdict sought in determining denominational objectives.
2. A program of cooperation should be continued.
3. The cooperative plan should allow a larger measure of freedom to the participating organizations in the securing of funds.
4. While a comprehensive and far-reaching program of undertakings may be formulated, financial objectives should be determined annually, and pledges regularly be for one year.
5. Budgets should be concreted, and indicate in separate classes askings for regular operating expenses, and for specifics. Askings should fall into three groups: The national societies; state and city missions; schools and colleges.
6. Churches and individuals should have entire freedom in the designation of their gifts.
7. Organization essential to effective cooperation ought to be maintained. The present organization should not be discarded but modified as the experience of the past four years may suggest.
8. Schools and colleges, approved by the state conventions of the territory in which they are located, may be included in the cooperative program in the segregated budget.

J. F. VICHERT, Chairman.

Helps to Educate the Kiddies

Walter R. Hoefflin, of Los Angeles, in renewing his subscription to THE BAPTIST and Missions says: "We cannot keep house without both and educate the kiddies as they should be, to say nothing of our own kingdom responsibilities." Yes, and the fact that our own kingdom responsibilities are recognized will intensify our feeling of responsibility to the "kiddies." Great, gripping glimpses of God's grace as seen in the kingdom enterprises of which these journals speak will put iron into the blood and a purpose into the life of growing youth. In how many families in your church are the "kiddies" deprived of this help to Christian culture? Do you not owe it to these to put on an every family canvass for your denominational journals?

Killam's Kollum

For Which We Thank God

We occasionally find a man who seems to think that he is indispensable in his position of influence and trust. We are all of us more or less in danger of taking too much of God's responsibility for keeping the world's work moving forward. Edgar Guest in a characteristic and telling way reminds us that there will be some one —probably is some one—now in preparation to take your place and mine. In the marts of trade, in church and school and state, the same holds good. Not long since an old man stated publicly that one of the worries of his old age is that his work has grown so great and no one is now in sight to carry it on after he is gone. All such anxiety is sheer foolishness. In school, or college, or the great university of experience, there is some one in preparation to carry on your work. When we asked Mr. Guest for the privilege of publishing the following lines he said: "Personally I should be very happy to have you reprint that bit of mine in the manner you suggest but under the terms of my contract with George Matthew Adams, it is not mine to give." These verses are copyrighted by George Matthew Adams who kindly gives his consent for their use:

The Youth Behind

Some one will take your place when you are gone,
Will come as you to face the morning mail,
Hear the small talk, and bear the burden on,
And in his care the venture will not fail.

You may be brave and wise and quick and strong;
You may command with courage and with grace,
But one shall come, when you have passed along,
And serve with equal splendor in your place.

And he may see what you have never seen,
May find new ways your feet have never trod,
And he may go where you have never been,
For after all the greatest of us plod.

In all the throng you may not see his face,
Secure you seem, and all your prospects fair,
But one there is who waits to take your place.
Against your passing, life has placed him there.

Fresh from the Field

Rev. Ralph Palmer, pastor of the church at Mansfield, Mass., has resigned to become a member of the faculty of the Gordon Bible College.

The speaker at the ministers' meeting, Chicago, 125 N. Wabash Ave., May 21, will be Rev. O. H. Rowlands who will deliver an address on expository preaching.

Rev. E. A. Rockwell, a student of the Newton Theological Institution, has accepted the call of the Pleasant Street Church, Concord, N. H., succeeding Rev. Paul Alden.

We are usually concerned about the loss to the state on account of illiteracy. In a recent address on "Church and State," Rev. S. Parkes Cadman, of Brooklyn, said: "Half-educated, cocksure people are a greater menace to church and state than the ignorant. We must get a happy adjustment of reason and emotion . . . Don't allow prejudice to perch on the top of your mind like a parrot and dictate. It is better to be less critical and more helpful."

While we are busy with our own financial problems as a denomination, it is interesting to note the progress of other groups. The women's societies among Presbyterians showed a gain this year of approximately $100,000. The general board reports receipts about equal to those of last year—$10,000,000, although an effort was made to increase the amount to $15,000,000. Within a period of three years current expenses of the churches have increased almost 100 per cent, or $29,000,000, due in increased salaries and unusual building operations.

The students of Brown University recently pledged $2,500 for the support of the "Brown in China" movement next year. This movement is designed to support the chair of sociology in Shanghai College and train students in the social settlement connected with the college. The settlement is located in the midst of a population of 300,000 factory operatives where men, women and children work day and night with no legal and few moral safeguards. Three graduates of Brown University are now on the faculty of Shanghai College: C. C. Chen, professor of biology; Percival R. Bakeman, professor of theology; and Daniel H. Kulp, professor of sociology. Professor Kulp has recently accepted a call to teach at Columbia University, so Brown will send to the college Dr. Harold C. Bucklin, who will sail in August.

The conference on evangelism will reconvene at Atlantic City, May 20-21. The meetings promise to be of unusual interest. On May 20, Dr. Frank M. Goodchild will speak on "The Primacy of Evangelism." Sunday afternoon will be in the nature of a retreat under the leadership of Superintendent Stilwell and Dr. C. L. White. In the evening Dr. John M. Dean will speak on "The Spirit of Evangelism" and Mr. Raymond Robbins on "The Imperialism of Evangelism." On Monday morning Rev. James Holmes will deliver an address on "Evangelism a Proclamation." Dr. Bernard C. Clausen on "Evangelism a Testimony." and Dr. Frederick L. Anderson on "Evangelism an Education." In the afternoon Rev. Fred J. Peters will speak on "Continuous Evangelism," and the closing hour will be conducted by Dr. W. H. Geistweit on "The Fellowship of Evangelism." All the sessions will be held in the First Church.

Rev. Fred E. Britten, formerly pastor in Michigan, is now pastor of the Lake Worth Church, Fla. The church publishes a newsy monthly paper.

The First Church, Wheeling, W. Va., has called to its pastorate, Rev. I. T. Jacobs of Roanoke, Va. The First Church and the Temple Church, it will be recalled, united their forces recently.

Rev. T. R. Glover, the public orator at Cambridge, England, has accepted an invitation to lecture for four months at the University of California, during the coming year, according to the British Weekly.

The "Baptist Times and Freeman" is running a series of articles on great Baptist churches. In the current issue there appears an article bearing the cuts of the First Church, Indianapolis, and its pastor, Dr. F. E. Taylor.

The annual banquet of the alumnae association of the Institute for Christian Workers, Philadelphia, will be held during the meeting of the Northern Baptist Convention in Atlantic City, May 26, at 12:30 o'clock, in the Fireside Hall of the Y. W. C. A. Plates, $1.00. Send reservations to Sophia L. Huber, 1425 Snyder Ave., Philadelphia, Pa., on or before May 20.

TO make an all-round college student: Take a real interest in college work, a pride in upbuilding honor, a desire for sound physical health, abundant faith in others, and the joy of unselfish friendship. Add to these a dash of student activity and season the whole with clean fun. Through all, mix thoroughly the principles and ideals of Christian living.—Helen Jo Scott, Woman's Press.

Rev. Elijah A. Hanley pastor of the First Church of Berkeley, Cal., was special preacher at Stanford University, April 29. He took for his text "Have Faith in God" and the burden of the message ran: "Faith asks us to adventure forth in the clearest light we have and bids us be as thorough-going and courageous in dealing with the hypothesis of God as we have been in dealing with the hypothesis of science."

The party which Dr. Herbert Hines of Kankakee, Ill., has been organizing to go to the Stockholm Convention, incidently touring England and continental Europe, is developing to be a young people's party, ten of those going being young folks of the B. Y. P. U. age. It will be a splendid thing thus to have a group of real American young people attend the conferences of the convention devoted to young people's work. Any other B. Y. P. U'er getting the European fever for this season ought to get in communication with Doctor Hines immediately.

Rev. A. W. Beaven, pastor of the Lake Avenue Church, Rochester, N. Y., will leave on June 30 for Stockholm and will return about Oct. 15. Among the preachers who will occupy the pulpit during his absence are: Rev. C. W. Petty, pastor of the First Church of Pittsburgh; Rev. John M. Moore, pastor of the Marcy Avenue Church, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Dr. C. A. Barbour, president of the Rochester Theological Seminary; Rev. Edward Holyoke, pastor of the Calvary Church, Providence, R. I.; Rev. C. H. Moehlman and Rev. S. W. Beaven.

The new building of the Immanuel Church, at 2320 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago, is now nearing completion. Delegates passing to or from the convention in Atlantic City, will find it well worth their time to make a visit to this fine building which the church at one time proposed to turn over to the denomination for its use.

As we go to press, Dr. John A. Earl, chairman of the program committee, writes: "Please insert the following which was inadvertently omitted from the program of the Northern Baptist Convention: Thursday, 5:30 p. m., College Reunions; Friday, 5:30 p. m., Seminary Reunions.

Dr. John Clifford is apparently as wide awake as ever. In the British Weekly we find the following item: "And now the miracle. Doctor Clifford, in his eighty-seventh year, rises to propose a resolution resisting the attempt to legalize betting by making it subject to taxation. If the feeling of the meeting as it responds to Doctor Clifford is any indication of the general feeling amongst the Free Churches, Mr. Baldwin will have to drop his proposal. Doctor Clifford's speech is wonderful. This G. O. M. of the Free Churches, has an intellect as clear as ever. He shows that the proposal to tax betting is bad morals, bad business, bad finance. 'Where are you to stop if you once begin this kind of thing? Why not tax prostitution or opium smoking.' 'The bookmakers should not be placed in an official position.'"

Over ninety fellowships have been awarded at the University of Chicago for the year 1923-24. Thirty-four of the successful candidates have already received the Master's degree. Fifty-four different institutions are represented in the award, including McGill University, and the universities of Oxford, Toronto, and Manitoba. In the assignment of fellowships thirty departments of the university have shared. The University of Chicago appropriates annually $21,000 for fellowships in the graduate schools of arts, literature and science, ranging in value from $150 to $520. In addition to these there are special endowed, research, and professional-school fellowships, some of which yield an annual stipend of $1,000.

The date for commencement at Hillsdale College has been moved forward from Thursday, June 21 to Monday, June 11. Baccalaureate Sunday will be June 10. This is a radical change as commencement has come on Thursday ever since the college was established. The change is made so that the students and trustees may be on the campus during the commencement affairs and the alumni may come for the week-end and take in the whole of the commencement activities. Under the old plan, the alumni had to choose which portion of the commencement activities they would attend, as they could not remain the whole time. The college year will remain the same length. # Enthusiastic for Education

BY HELEN BARRETT MONTGOMERY

THERE is a rather interesting contrast between the theory and practice of the Karen Baptists in Burma and the Baptists of America, in regard to education. The Karen Baptists are all for education. They are rooting for it with all their might. They are going down into their pockets and bringing up the money to spread education, and they are sending their boys and girls to the schools in the largest number that they possibly can.

Here is a spectacle of a race which seventy-five years ago had no written language and were wild heathen, hiding in little mountain villages away from their masters, the Burmans. They were drunken, filthy, degraded, superstitious. Today you have this whole group set on their feet by the power of Christ. They build their own churches. They support their own ministers. They have a missionary society of their own, and send out their missionaries to the wild tribes of the frontier. They build their school buildings, and support them. They build their theological seminary, and support it. The churches tax themselves for education, so that any poor Karen boy or girl can have the opportunity of going through their Karen schools for a mere pittance—I have forgotten whether it is $25 or $50 a year, but it is a sufficiently small sum to be rather amazing to us.

The school which they have recently completed at Bassein is the best equipped building in Burma for educational purposes, and these educational advantages are thrown open to all Karen boys and girls, whether Christians or not.

No American money goes to the upkeep of these schools. All Americans pay for is the salary of the missionaries who supervise them.

Now contrast this, for a moment, with our Baptist indifference and independency in regard to our schools. We treat them as a stepmother is supposed to treat her children. We neither endow them nor equip them as we ought to do, and thousands of us are disgruntled because the schools are included among our national objectives. Even worse than this, as a denomination, we have no enthusiasm for education. We are content to let our boys and girls have the same education we had. "What is good enough for me is good enough for my children." The figures can hardly be challenged. The Baptist quota is below the Methodist, the Presbyterian, the Congregationalist or the Episcopalian contingent in all our great state schools and endowed interdenominational institutions. We may just as well confess it. We Baptists are not enthusiastic for education, and we do not send our childern to school in large numbers.

Now this policy might do for an aristocratic group. A hierarchy can get along very well with ignorance in the pews, because the ignorant pews do not control the actions of the hierarchy; but with our democratic form of government, our whole welfare as a denomination depends upon the intelligence of our constituency. In a church where everybody can vote, it is essential that everybody be intelligent. I know I shall be told that the situation is improving, as it is. Thank God for that! We Baptists are learning—rather slowly—that a great many of our theological difficulties come from an uneducated and untrained ministry. We Baptists are learning—all too slowly—to believe that the best training that we can give our children is none too good to equip them for their life work in this wonderful day of opportunity.

But although statistics show that we have made a truly marvelous gain since the New World Movement began, in the number of students which we have in our denominational colleges and in state institutions and undenominational institutions, we have not very greatly changed our relative position. We are still pretty well down along toward the foot of the class. I hope this educational number will be read by thousands of Baptist fathers and mothers, and I hope it will transform them into good Karens, believing in education, sacrificing for education, supporting education, and doing all we can to see that our boys and girls get a chance to be educated.

THE Rev. Dr. Russell H. Conwell, president and founder of Temple University, now past eighty, gave the secret of his remarkable memory in his talk at the closing session in the auditorium of the University Museum.

"When I want to quote from the Bible I close my eyes," said Doctor Conwell, "and the entire page of the Bible and the quotation comes before me and I read it. This is a thing a teacher taught me back in the old Berkshire hills where I was born. There was a time, when my congregation was about 2,500 when I could go home after the services and shut my eyes and the rows and rows of seats would come up before me and I could check up with my eyes closed, just who had missed church that night.

"As I look back over my sixty years in educational work I am inclined more and more to believe that the schools and colleges are not as important to the success of men as we are prone to believe. It does not belittle the schools and colleges to say this, because there are so many who can never go to college, but who may yet attain success. A man's education comes after he leaves school. Give your pupils the impression that they only go to school to learn how to study, for the time they spend in college is but a small part of their life."

Regarding the Schools and Colleges

One of the important questions which will be discussed at the meetings of the Northern Baptist Convention at Atlantic City, will have to do with the future relation of the schools and colleges to our other societies. To state the question in simple language it is this: Shall we continue to include in our united budget, funds necessary to the maintenance of our schools and colleges? Naturally the Baptist people desire to know what the schools and colleges themselves prefer in this matter. Do they desire to be left free to finance themselves, or do they prefer to be included in the united budget? This question was considered very frankly by the presidents at their meeting on January 10, at Chicago. Nearly all of the schools, colleges, and seminaries were represented at this meeting. After considering the matter very carefully a committee was appointed to draw up resolutions. These resolutions were presented to the meeting and were unanimously adopted. Inasmuch as these resolutions represent the attitude of most of the college presidents I am reporting them in full. They are as follows:

Jan. 10, 1923.

To the Association of Presidents of the Baptist Institutions of The Northern Baptist Convention:

Your committee of five appointed to present the findings of the discussion of the session present for your consideration and adoption, the following statement:

As representatives of the educational interests and institutions of our Northern Baptist Convention, we record our profound conviction of the vital importance of education in our denominational life. Without proper emphasis on education, the quality of leadership in our churches and on our mission fields must decline. The future of all our religious work will be determined by the place we give to education in our denominational program.

In view of the gratifying results that have attended the correlation of education and missionary work in a unified budget in our New World Movement, we recommend as follows:

1. That the Northern Baptist Convention be asked to vote an annual budget for education as an integral part of a unified budget. The total amount included for education should be made up of the sums needed for the following purposes:
   (a) The support of the regular work of the Board of Education of the Northern Baptist Convention.
   (b) The maintenance of the work in such institutions as have not yet secured an endowment sufficiently large to fully provide a reasonable current expense income.
   (c) And, for endowment and equipment of our institutions.

2. The total amount of this budget shall be determined after a new and careful study of the actual and comparative needs of our schools and colleges has been made,
   (a) With a view to determining for what purposes and in what amounts money should be raised for the various institutions in the territory of our Northern Baptist Convention.
   (b) And with the further view of providing for each of our institutions such endowment and equipment as will give them standard recognition in the territory in which the institutions are located.

J. W. Bailey, chairman; P. W. Crannell, Claiborne M. Hill, Clifton D. Gray, R. W. Swetland—Committee.

This report was unanimously adopted and was referred to the Board of Managers of the Northern Baptist Convention.—J. M. WELLS, Secretary.

The Baptist

Educating the Baptist Denomination

SOME singular and interesting things emerge from a study of the educational efforts of American Baptists.

The development seems a slow one in many ways. though there have been notable names in scholarship among the Baptists from the first. Roger Williams had his A. B. from Cambridge, England, in 1627; and Dunster, who was really Harvard's first president, save for a brief unsatisfactory administration which preceded his, demonstrated high scholarship and executive genius until he was deposed for Baptist sentiments after twelve years of splendid service. Such names as those of Manning, first president of Brown; Francis Wayland, one of his great successors; Judson, who was valedictorian at Brown, and throughout his life great in scholarship as in missions; and later the names of M. B. Anderson, E. G. Robinson, W. R. Harper, A. H. Newman and many others are milestones not alone in Baptist but in all American educational history. Yet it was two centuries after the landing of the Pilgrims before the first Baptist theological seminary was begun.

Indeed it was 120 years after Roger Williams came to Providence before there was anywhere in America a Baptist academy, and ten years more before the slender beginnings of our first Baptist college, and more than a generation before another college arose. But after the denomination struck its pace in the early nineteenth century there grew up Baptist colleges, universities, theological seminaries, academies and other institutions until the third century at its close finds us with about 200 educational institutions, 38,000 students, and $170,000,000 of property and endowments. Since many of these schools do not depend upon endowments, we find by capitalizing the income of our schools on a 5 per cent basis that it represents the interest on a third of a billion dollars. Still, if any one thinks our educational needs are met let him note that only about one in a hundred of American Baptists are represented by these students, and that nearly $100,000,000 of the $170,000,000 is in the northeastern part of the country, while vast areas and the bulk of our membership are most inadequately supplied.

One is struck by the youthfulness of the leaders in our early educational enterprises. Manning was sent out by the Philadelphia Association at the age of twenty-four, a year after his graduation from Princeton, and visited Rhode Island to arrange with Governor Lyndon and other Baptists for a "seminary of polite literature . . . subject to the government of the Baptists." At its delayed beginning he, at twenty-six, became its successful president. Judson wrote two textbooks in his first year after graduation. Rice was less than a decade out of college when he led in founding the Triennial Convention and, a little later, Columbian College. Harper was principal of the Academy at Granville while still in his 'teens, with students older than he.

The tenuous resources with which these pioneers began is striking. Granville held out for many years a standing offer to name the college for any donor of $10,000. It waited nearly a quarter of a century for it. Shurtleff got its name similarly, and Brown, earlier, gave the name which now represents millions for $5,000. We find in 1812 a proposed educational gift of $2,000 for a Baptist academy in New England referred to as "the princely endowment contemplated by the distinguished benefactor." But money brought 12 per cent and professors' salaries were never princely.

ONE of the most interesting facts of the history is the intimacy between education and missions. Out of the great Baptist beginning of organization in 1814, which was itself due to foreign missions, grew directly a college and indirectly many colleges, state conventions, denominational papers and all of our organized progress for a century. It was Jonathan Going, father of our Home Mission Society, who was a chief advisor in the founding of Denison, Shurtleff, Franklin and other educational beginnings, and who gave his last years to the presidency of Denison. And it was his successor, the statesman home-missionary secretary, H. L. Morehouse, who championed the fight for the American Baptist Education Society with its tremendous direct and indirect achievements.

The whole lesson is one of the close interrelation of our denominational activities. Missions and education go hand in hand. The neglect of either will be the ruin of the other as far as Baptists are concerned. And the need of education is as great as ever it was, especially of an education under Baptist auspices for Baptist pastors and Baptist young people.

Politics or Christianity

QUITE recently we heard a prominent member of the denomination say to a group of fellow Christians, "Just now we are having too much sub-rosa communication in our Baptist affairs." After pausing a minute or more he added, "We ought not to have anything in our concerns that cannot be frankly talked out in the open."

If the truth was spoken it was a word in good season; if it was a misstatement it will serve as a warning and the basis for what we have to say here.

As Baptists it is our very proud boast that we are a spiritual democracy which makes every member a full partner in all the enterprises of the group. A partner is entitled to know all that concerns the administration of the partnership of which he is an integral part. To fail to give the facts to all is to fail in business ethics as well as in Christian living. With this simple conclusion we are sure there can be no difference of judgment.

A real democracy must be built upon the intelligent cooperation of all the fellowship.

We have no real place in our life as a denomination for the politician who is guardedly seeking selfish ends or preferment at the expense of the efficiency and progress of the whole group of which he or she may be a more or less prominent part. To use underground political selfish methods to secure desired ends, even though the ends were good in themselves, should lead to the repudiation of those using such methods. The end does not justify the means in a Christian enterprise, or in any other. We need to put the principles of Christianity into the practice of politics, but God forbid that we should ever put the practices of political life into our Christian cooperative enterprises.

We have a constituency of tremendous initiative and possible development. Our duty is to use every possible proper initiative so that under the leadership of our Lord development will follow and our work at home and abroad, in the local church and in world areas, and in the individual and the denomination may not be menaced by politics but may be helped by a high type of unselfish loving service.

If we love our Lord we shall not be manipulators for personal ends, but, in honor preferring one another, we shall lovingly seek the good of all at personal sacrifice.

Let us keep our Christianity and not displace it by worldly political practices.

Reader, do not look around to see upon whom you can pin these remarks. Pin them upon yourself if possible. The cure must start with you.

The Big Noise

IN a local church some time ago a matter of importance was under consideration. An earnest but unlettered man arose and spoke as follows: "This bunch seems to have the idea that voting a thing is the big noise, but to this fellow, the big noise is not the vote but what you do after the vote has been taken; here we vote too often and don't do nearly often enough."

It is so easy to vote to do a thing and so deadly easy not to do it after the vote has been taken. After a while that sort of procedure gets into the spirit of the institution and affects all the organization and its personnel. Then an institution such as a local church gets into the habit of voting everything and doing nothing or only part of anything.

A large democracy like the Northern Baptist Convention is subject to all the dangers of a local church when it comes to voting and not doing. Mass psychology is an interesting thing and a smart individual can often procure for his cause the consent of a large gathering. But having secured the vote the same individual often cannot get the vote carried into effect.

We must remember that "the big noise" is not in the chorus of ayes upon the floor of the convention but the really big noise is in the army of Christians who go to work to do what is the will of God and the prayerful desire of his people.

When the still small voice has spoken that will of his in the recesses of the heart and life and we do it then the "big noise" has begun, and will go on to a completed task.

We All Matriculate

SINCE we had occasion to write "The Light That Casts No Shadow," hundreds of members of the family have taken the time out of their busy days to write us personal notes of appreciation and cheer. We wish that it were possible for us to acknowledge individually all of these expressions of fellow-feeling. We want each one to know, however, how it steadied the hand and quieted the heart just to understand that folks really cared. These letters and telegrams are among our treasured possessions.

The simple editorial did just what we prayed that it would do. It brought a message of hope and cheer to those who were walking in dark places. A mother writes: "In the two years since my only daughter, my joy and my delight, began her journey of the heavenly land nothing has comforted and cheered me as that description of your wife's home-going. It has been so hard for me to be sure of immortal life, even though I know I believed, and that message made it all so very real to me." Several individuals who have been informed that their days are almost numbered have written. One of them tells of her depression. "The message was just like the sun breaking through the clouds which were hanging over me." From many churches we have reports of a deep spiritual uplift. A pastor in New England writes: "The greatest service I have ever held in my ministry was last Sunday morning's. In it I read your editorial of last week. Scarcely a dry eye and a wonderful spiritual atmosphere resulted."

Sorrow is a school. We all matriculate. One writer prayed for "the perfecting of the character through sorrow, which seems to be one of God's post graduate courses for his people." It is a rich experience to discover that we have a new God—one who stands by "as time passes and as the 'light that casts no shadow' is transfused into the light of the customary day." As followers of Christ we all "know the place whence issue the streamers of the dawn," and in this we rejoice and shall rejoice.

A Page of Opinion

College Skepticism

RELIGIOUS unrest, and in some cases unbelief, has become so prevalent among college students that it presents a major problem to the church. As in many instances of unsound ideas, it has provoked criticism and protest that have done little to reveal the true inwardness of the situation. Albert Clarke Wyckoff, a close student of religious psychology, regards this as a problem of religious psychopathology as well as religion. He gives in the April issue of the Biblical Review (New York), a searching analysis of the nature, sources, effects, and treatment of college skepticism. The general trend of his observations may be gathered from these selected paragraphs:

"As the skillful physician distinguishes between chronic and acute disease, treating each according to its nature, so the psychologist distinguishes between chronic and acute unbelief, treating each according to its nature. It is true that many of the symptoms are the same, for all unbelievers center their fire of denial upon the most conspicuous religious truths, and yet there are fundamental differences. Chronic unbelief is constitutional; acute unbelief is institutional.

"As the chronic invalid comes to enjoy poor health, so the chronic unbeliever enjoys his unbelief. He is an unbeliever, and is proud of it. While the person suffering from an acute attack of unbelief is in real distress of mind and spirit. Chronic unbelief is an adult disease, acute unbelief is a disease of the later adolescent period.

"Acute unbelief being a disease of the later adolescent period, the young are naturally its special victims. They have no natural powers of resistance to its ravages. The rapid development of their personalities into self-consciousness as individuals, their sudden emergence into the new world of social responsibilities, stirs up the struggle for freedom from the authority which up to this time has held them in subjection. The two mightiest regulating forces of which they have any knowledge are parental and religious authority.

"Acute unbelief does not develop into a specific malady, save in exceptional instances, unless the adolescent period is abnormally lengthened by a college course during which the intellectual difficulties of belief are re-enforced and exaggerated by the instruction of the college class room.

"College authorities do not seem to have become sufficiently familiar with psychology to realize that the religious nature of the student is just as important an element in personality as the moral, physical, psychological, and intellectual, and that, in the last analysis, history has proved that the religious nature is able to marshal all of the resources of personality in its service as is no other element. For this very reason it possesses unique powers for assisting in helping to solve the moral, psychological and intellectual problems which are now so pressing.

"Psychology has come to the relief of the religious crisis most valiantly. It has discovered the germ of acute unbelief, isolated it, and pronounced its nature psychological rather than intellectual. It has also traced it to its natural breeding place—the modern college. Of course, there are many other secondary incubators of the bacteria of acute unbelief; the adolescent mind is one of the most fertile, the discontented mind is another, modern literature is another. But no cultural idea of this nature could ever spread to such epidemic proportions among healthy-minded American adolescents without the intellectual support of the college class room. This is why acute unbelief is so distinctly institutional in its origin.

"The adolescent struggle for freedom from parental and religious authority creates an abnormal hunger in the mind of the student for the highly nitrogenous findings of modern science and historical and biblical criticisms. When these intellectual dishes are prepared and served in the best style of professors who are chronic unbelievers, they are liable to tempt the ravenous appetites of adolescents to overindulge.

"If this overfeeding of the students upon new ideas were the only offense of which the college professor is guilty, the situation would not be so bad. But right on the top of this indiscretion many professors commit the additional offense against the religious life of their students of deliberately stuffing their minds with the unripe fruits of immature, religious critical-scholarship theories. Many cases of acute unbelief are nothing less than green-apple colic of the reason.

"These professors have now abandoned the policy of strict neutrality upon this subject of religion, which was so skillfully maintained by Professor James in his book, 'The Varieties of Religious Experience,' and have taken the offensive against the fundamental theistic belief.

"The anti-theistic conclusions of the psychologists are not due to the psychology of religion, but to the religion of the psychologists.

"The romance must again be put back into religious belief. It must be admitted that the deductive theological reasoning which fascinated our fathers and attracted the finest minds of their day to its service makes little appeal to the modern mind. Scientific thinking makes the corresponding appeal today. The truth is, it is not the specific findings of science that grip and hold the adolescent mind; it is rather the inductive method of arriving at those findings which wins them. When this same method is universally employed in the search for and presentation of religious truth the romance will again be put back into religious thinking. But this is not enough. The romance must again be put back into the psychological value of believing, and the consequent defense of the faith. There is something the matter with the religious belief of an age in which there is more adventure and daring in denial than in belief."

The Transitive Power of Christian Education

The early colleges were founded because men believed tremendously in religious principles.

By William Gear Spencer

BEFORE the Pilgrims had been two decades in New England and while the colony was in some measure at least uncertain as to its future Harvard College was founded. William and Mary was founded in Virginia in 1693, and it became "the training ground of Democracy, the inspiration of the Declaration of Independence and the inalienable rights of man." Before the Revolution there were twelve colleges in this country. Every one of them represented practically a contribution of the church for its needs. The American college is probably the greatest gift of the church to the people.

Before the war of the Rebellion there were 262 colleges, and now there are some 600, or an average of about one college for every 175,000 of population. It is worth while learning some of the contributions that have been made by college men of liberal training. The United States Geographical Survey is in reality their contribution and no automobile owner uses a Blue Book without confessing his debt of obligation to their work.

College and Weather

The United States Weather Bureau represents another contribution and no man plans his work for the morrow and scans the page of the evening paper for the weather who does not thereby confess his obligation. Industry perhaps least of all is willing to admit its debt to this cause, and yet the cotton gin was invented by Eli Whitney of the class of 1792 of Yale University, and the electric telegraph by Samuel F. B. Morse, of the class of 1810 of Yale University.

The colleges in the beginning were the product of religious thinking. Some people imagine that there is a contest on between Christianity and what they please to call culture, but the truth is that Christianity has never gotten a firm hold without the coming of culture as a consequence. The early colleges almost without exception were founded because men believed tremendously in religious principles and regarded education as a large contributing factor in their extension. One hundred and four of the first 119 colleges founded in our nation had a distinctively Christian origin. In spite of their diversity, their general character was much the same. Their denominational affiliations did not compel them to set up religious tests for entrance. The colleges have by no means been confined to the Protestant denominations. By 1894, the Roman Catholic church claimed 116 colleges and 637 academies. Numbering among its adherents at that time one-tenth of the population of the country, it had about one-fourth of the colleges.

The mottoes show this religious impulse in expression. The motto of Harvard University is "Christo et ecclesiae" (Christ and the church); the motto of Yale University is "Lux ac veritas" (Light and truth); the motto of Brown University is "In Deo speramus" (We hope in God).

Hence the source of what I have pleased to call the transitive power of Christian education. Let us hark back to the old grammar definition of a transitive verb to get the coloring that we need for this word. "A transitive verb is one which requires an object to complete its meaning." Just as Christianity has never been an end in itself but whenever the Christian spirit has been rightly inculcated it has hunted for some problem of evil upon which to focus its attention and striven there to make its best contribution, so the American college has always consciously or unconsciously through its faculty and students and its alumni, searched for an object to complete its meaning and it has always found one.

The Original Object

The primary object of the American college was the production of an educated ministry. The Pilgrim fathers who first settled the country were men in whose lives religion was the one dominant element. Every sort of sacrifice conceivable almost they had cheerfully made for its sake and because they were conscious that their contributions would be transient and ineffectual without an educated ministry, they founded the colleges to meet that need.

So powerful was the effect of this cause in the teaching tendency of the curricula of the early colleges that it is interesting to note that between the years 1761 and 1770, a ten-year period, Harvard College turned out 29 per cent of its alumni directly into the American pulpit; Yale University did even better and turned into the same channel 32 per cent in the same period; while Princeton with a proportion of 45 per cent, or almost one out of every two, surpassed during this same period both Yale and Harvard. Colgate University graduated up to 1904 a total of 1732 alumni from all its departments and of these it sent into the Christian ministry and its own denominational leadership the magnificent number of 1034. In general the preparation of men for Christian leadership was the chief object of the American college. However, before this time there had been entering in another element which was to make a new problem and upon which the Christian college must be compelled to focus.

Immigration Furnishes an Object

Little by little after our nation was founded, an increasing number of men whose goal was freedom and liberty sought our shores and by 1820, which was the first year in which we have reliable statistics, 8385 aliens had come to this country. The tide was ever increasing and by 1860, or the time of the beginning of the Civil War, had swollen to 133,000, and by 1910 it was 1,041,570 for a twelvemonth. A moment's thought will indicate that beginning perhaps with the year 1820 and growing in direct proportion to the number of aliens entering our borders as the years went by, a wider and more popular education, if democracy was to retain its power, was necessary. Educated men, products of the American college with its transitive power, began to focus upon this problem. This new object absorbed their attention and under the leadership perhaps of Horace Mann more than anyone else, a graduate of Brown University of the class of 1819, the solution of this problem began to appear. The American college must now focus deeply into the undercurrents of our life. Compulsory education for the common people as a political measure for the solution of democracy had become imperative.

We today, as we take for granted the magnificent inheritance of our public schools, are little apt to think that in 1860 there were only forty high schools in our country. So powerful was the educational influence of Horace Mann in reacting upon his alma mater that it is worthy of note that up until 1900 Brown University had turned out approximately 959 men into the ministry, 937 into law, 935 into commercial pursuits, and 933 into teaching. Teaching within recent years has been the dominant profession entered by the alumni of Brown University.

Entrance of Industry Presents an Object

On the heels of the revolution caused by immigration came the revolution in industry. For years during the early history of our country the citizen had been a patriarch. On the ancestral estate was raised the food consumed by the family, here were made the clothes of the family almost directly from the backs of the sheep to the backs of the sons and daughters. Within a generation almost this had changed. We no longer have homes in this country in the good old sense of the word. Home now is a place to which we return only to start out again, or as some one has wittily stated, "Home is the place where you put the things you buy." Specialization has revolutionized the civilized world.

To illustrate, three or four years ago, we were puzzling our minds over whether or not the United States government ought not to own the railroad systems and while we were still arguing about that, along came the automobile industry, which in 1920 while the railroads were carrying two and one-half billion tons of freight, themselves carried a billion tons, and the limit of their expansion has not been reached. The mere mention of these facts suffices to indicate the tremendous sweep of the industrial revolution.

The immediate consequence was the focusing of the American college upon this problem. At first the curricula of the colleges were extended to meet the demands, but soon it became evident that a new type of college was needed and separate institutions which should specialize in the realms of engineering, of agriculture, of law, of medicine, of commerce, of journalism, of pedagogy, of forestry, and a long line of others represent the tremendous transitive power of the American college. A Brooklyn paper today carries the advertisement of a candy college, not a new way by which some student desires to recommend his alma mater, but an institution borrowing an honored name for the purpose of furthering its commercial interests.

One of our foremost colleges for women runs a summer school of a socialistic and industrial character as indicative of its desire to be of further service. Roger Babson, finding not enough in the American College as it is now constituted to meet the most acute problems of large business finance, has founded the Babson Statistical Institute, and it is interesting to notice that so potent and persistent has been the Christian impulse through which the colleges were first founded, down through the long lines of education, that President Colman might well call himself a "missionary" in business.

THE United States average for negro illiteracy is 22.9. Twelve southern states show a higher percentage than this. This would naturally be expected since the northern states have a better type of negro population than in the south. Then, too, the negro conditions in the South are more difficult to improve than in the North. Economic and racial elements enter the problem of elevating the educational status of the negro.

Let us look a little deeper into one of the specialized types of colleges. In strictly engineering institutions last year there were over 51,000 young American students.

The Entrance of Belligerency, Another Object

We have just been through the portals and the fields of war under the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, and many other far seeing statesmen as typical of the best product of our American colleges. We were tardily led to take the part that we should, but scarcely had war been declared when the American college found a new object upon which to focus. Everywhere across the country regimental units sprang up upon the campus. The blare of trumpets instead of the sound of bells summoned the students to their work, and the American Expeditionary Force found its leaders largely from the ranks of college men. Men who had been professors of Greek and Latin became over night professors of engineering, surveying, and what not, wherever they could make their contribution, and if ever in the minds of any American citizen there had arisen the question as to whether education as typified by the work going on in the American college could quickly square itself to meet a vital need, the student army training camps dispelled it. Too short lived they were, it is true, to become valuable as units in our army or to furnish even a laboratory experiment in military life, but long enough lived they were to show that the vitality of the American college in an American democracy is tremendous.

Development of Extension Schools

Nor has the college been content merely to minister to the needs of those who find its way within the walls. Institutions of agriculture, of engineering, of journalism, and of pedagogy have developed extension schools that have a wide sweep and have carried the fruits of education to the very doors of our citizens. The agricultural department of the state institutions regards as its students every farmer within the borders of the state that supports it and does its best to realize on that faith. It is only fair to recognize the fact that the correspondence schools of many of the most standard institutions of our country are typical illustrations of the persistent transitive power of the American college.

The New Task of the College

Alongside many other problems that might be taken up has come what former director of the American Council on Education, Samuel P. Capen, calls the new task of the college.

Offhand any one would say that every state is entitled to its state university, and yet the time has come within recent years when the bulk of our population is now living in the cities and the larger towns. A new problem has therefore been presented. The whole population of Nevada, as he points out, could be comfortably housed in Akron, and still leave some acres of unoccupied dwellings; the population of Delaware would fit quite as loosely into San Francisco. Should Nevada have her state institution and Akron not be entitled to her municipal institution? Here again the vitality of the transitive power of the American college is exhibited. The University of Akron, the University of Cincinnati, the University of Buffalo, the University of Toledo, the University of Pittsburgh, and now Temple Univerthe gift of Russell Conwell to the city of Philadelphia, represent a new objective and a new contribution to it.

It may be well to pause at this point and draw a line of sharp demarcation between the colleges of liberal arts and sciences, however much they may vary among themselves, and the colleges of specialization in industry. The former embrace the ideas that permeate all common activities while the latter deal only with the ideas that concern highly specialized activities, and yet so powerful has been the primary Christian impulse that when a questionnaire was recently sent out to over 7,000 eminent engineers embracing the four leading engineering societies, asking them whether in their judgment, accuracy or executive ability or a knowledge of the fundamentals of engineering and the technique of business and practice or character or judgment was the important thing contributing to the success of their profession, 94 per cent of them in their replies stated that character was the first thing to be considered, and the members of the faculties of the greater bulk of the educational institutions of our country are in general men of superb character, high moral ideals, and profound religious life.

There is an old proverb that runs, "like begets like." If that is true—and proverbs are usually based upon truths that have grown out of the common experience of mankind—then the American college ought to give proof of its transitive power through the lives of the alumni after they have left its walls. History is rich in contributions of this type, beginning with Jefferson, Hamilton, Madison, Monroe, the Adames, Webster, Calhoun and countless others in American politics; running through such names as Cooper, Bryant, Longfellow, Lowell, Hawthorne, Emerson, and Holmes in literature; including such names as Dwight, Beecher, and Brooks as leaders in the ministry, and on down the course of time to the leaders of our present generation, such representative and outstanding men as Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson, Warren G. Harding, Charles Evans Hughes, Herbert Hoover and William H. Taft.

The leaders of our American civilization down through the years have come in the main directly from inspiration of the college halls to their task, and wisdom has proven herself justified in her children.

Education on the Foreign Fields

By Earle B. Cross

THE original program for the evangelization of the world as it was formulated by the Master called for teaching as well as preaching. A lasting church will result from a foundation of intelligent confessors of faith, who are able for themselves to read and comprehend the records of the early believers and especially the truth which was given by the great Teacher himself. Accordingly in places where there is no provision for the education of the people aside from that which may come from missionary influences, the village school under instruction of the local preacher or other worker, stands forth as a mighty bulwark of the gospel. In Japan and in the Philippine Islands, schools are provided by the government to such an extent that there is not much need for schools under missionary auspices except for the purpose of providing institutions with a distinctively Christian atmosphere.

The Woman's Foreign Mission Society has found kindergartens to be a most popular type of service in all fields. Many parents hear of Christ for the first time through the kindergarten or the Sunday school which is always correlated with it. Mothers' clubs which have been built up from the interest awakened by the kindergarten have also proved to be a means of grace to many souls.

A splendid flower of the educational system which has developed on the mission field during the century past is the secondary school. These are variously known as high schools, academies or middle schools, according to custom of the different countries. Most of these are boarding schools to which day pupils are admitted as well. The Christian influences which are brought to bear upon the pupils by the teaching staff and in the course of dormitory life, are a most potent means of winning them to the way of Christ. One missionary writes: "Our dormitory is our greatest evangelistic asset." The secondary school touches the life of the students at a most impressionable age. The result is that Christian schools not only provide excellent educational advantages which are recognized by all, but also cultivate a type of character which is of the noblest and most to be coveted. By educating young people under conditions which lead them to consecrate their lives to Christ, we are multiplying the workers for the fields which are white unto the harvest. Even if the larger proportion of these students go out into the ordinary callings of life, they will go with a sympathetic appreciation of Christianity at least. A great number, however, will graduate each year from our secondary schools as professing Christians. These will be sowers of the seed through all their lives in every relationship. In at least one academy the graduating class is reported as 100 per cent Christians this year, a record like that of Shanghai Baptist College. If other secondary schools do not reach to this mark of accomplishment, yet we are assured that professions of faith in Christ are made by many of the students each year.

It is impossible to tell the story of each of these secondary schools. The several missions have each their stronghold of influence with young people of the teen age. Many of the pupils pursue their studies no farther. Some of them, however, pass from the secondary school into the college. The secondary schools are located as a rule with due regard for the needs of definite regions and serve as feeders to the college in the mission. Thus the high schools of Burma are feeders for Judson College in Rangoon. The six middle schools of East China and also the two academies in the South China mission are affiliated with Shanghai Baptist College.

Among the colleges which are the higher institutions in the system of education, there are three which are distinctively Baptist institutions. Judson College in Burma is the product of generations of labor and prayer. This great institution has come more and more to an important position in the general educational scheme of the province of Burma. It is, in fact, the chief unit in the government's program for the province. In East China, Baptists of the Northern and Southern Conventions unite in the maintenance of Shanghai Baptist College, now twelve years of age. Both of these colleges admit women to study as well as men. Another Baptist college has sprung into being in the Philippine Islands. Approval was given by the board of the Foreign Mission Society early in 1923 for the development at Jaro, a suburb of Iloilo, of a college which should be known as Central Philippine College. The Jaro Industrial School will merge its life in the new venture. Equipment and adequate buildings are still to be provided. Some time must necessarily elapse before the institution can fully accomplish that for which it is primarily intended, namely, to provide for the youth of our Visayan Baptist constituency a college training. Under existing circumstances they must go to Manila, 400 miles away from the Visayan group of islands, where the government university is located. Many others besides Baptist students will avail themselves of the privileges of Central Philippine College, of course.

A Prospective College

Another prospective Baptist college may come into being before long, if the hopes and prayers of our Japan workers can find realization. The Mabie Memorial Boys' School at Yokohama has won a most enviable standing in educational circles in Japan during the four short years of its establishment. If it should become feasible to develop a college there in addition to the high school course which is now being offered, Japanese Baptists would have a denominational college at which students might pursue their studies under Christian influences such as they do not have at government institutions.

There are economies which can be secured by cooperation with other evangelical bodies in the maintenance on the mission field of institutions of higher learning, such as colleges and universities. Equipment is more expensive and professors of special training and excellence who will undertake such work are difficult to find. By uniting their resources in funds and personnel, several boards together can secure mutual advantage in the development of institutions of high grade, and at the same time assure themselves of a Christian atmosphere in the institutions without sacrifice of the particular and peculiar denominational touch on student life. At Chengtu in West China, for example, with four other evangelical denominations we are participating in the educational service of West China Union University. It would be practically impossible for any single board alone to support such an institution with its faculty of sixty well-trained men and women and its varied departments of study. Madras Christian College in South India affords another instance of such cooperation with other denominations. The Woman's Society also cooperates with other boards in the support of colleges for women such as Ginling College in China and the Woman's Christian College at Madras, India.

College Mistakes

J. W. McCall, an attorney of Memphis, Tenn. and a graduate of the University of Mississippi '11, gives in the Baptist Student as his greatest mistakes in college:

(1) Failure to realize regarding time that, "the waters that passed the mill never turned the wheel again."
(2) Too much athletics.
(3) Failure to take enough literary training.
(4) Failure to use library.
(5) Failure to plan course of study in the beginning for a fixed purpose in life.
(6) Studied "lessons" rather than "books."

In connection with educational institutions which are not under mission auspices, the societies are permitted in some instances to maintain Christian dormitories. The particular contribution of the Woman's Society to education in the Philippine Islands is made through such dormitories where a large number of girls in attendance upon the government high schools are finding Christian home influences. In connection with one of these dormitories a student church of fifty members has been organized and baptisms are of frequent occurrence. The two splendid buildings which have recently been erected adjoining the campus of Waseda University in Tokyo, Japan, will house the student activities which have been developed there under the leadership of Prof. H. B. Benninghoff, missionary of the Foreign Mission Society. The work has been promoted by the invitation of the university authorities and has their hearty approval. A Christian auxiliary to this great university of 10,000 students is provided in Scott Hall and Alvah Hovey Memorial Dormitory, where students may find Christian fellowship and religious instruction quite the equal of those in any college in America.

A peculiarly feminine contribution to educational work is the mothercraft school. Several such are to be found under the auspices of the Woman's Society, where wives and mothers, whose general educational advantages have been limited, can secure a training which will enable them to make their homes more truly correspond to the type which the word "home" connotes in Christian circles.

For Special Training

For the special training of religious workers of various types, schools are provided according to the needs of each field, and of such grade and curriculum as may best meet the requirements of the workers. The Woman's Society maintains seven Baptist Bible training schools which specialize in preparing Bible women, church and zenana workers, and the like for their service. There are theological schools also on all the fields for the training of pastors and evangelistic workers for the ministry of the churches. With the advances which are being made everywhere in education, the standards of ministerial education are also being raised. Each student generation brings into the service of the churches a more efficient ministry, with minds trained better to divide aright the word of truth, and to interpret Christ to their fellow men in simpler, clearer terms. The end and consummation of all our educational work in foreign lands finds its climax in this—that whether they play their part in life in the pulpit, in the home, or in the mart, our Baptist young people may be fitted to conduct themselves as Christian men and women of a sound mind and in character revealing Jesus Christ, their Saviour. There is constantly increasing evidence from every land that we are realizing this purpose.

The Big Brothers in Action

The experiences of one of them.

FROM time to time the board of education has endeavored to acquaint the denomination with the facts concerning its growing work among students. We have told the story of the work of our university pastors—the "big brothers" we call them—at the great university centers. But no one can tell the story for them, as can these men themselves. We have asked one of them to tell of some of his experiences with his students. We give his stories just as he has written them. We need not state that he is a mature man with a rich Christian experience; his story will reveal that. He has a wonderful influence upon his ever changing body of students.

We wonder if some fathers and mothers will not thank God, after they have read these stories, that there is a "big brother" at the university where their sons and daughters are in training for life.

—FRANK W. PADELFORD.

SOME years ago a young man came to to the university to study law. His father was a cattle man and this young man had spent much time in the saddle. My attention was called to him and I went to his fraternity house to see him. The next Sunday he was at church. He was a fine fellow but not a Christian. I soon became strongly attached to him. He was a regular attendant at my Bible class. Months passed by during which we became great friends. There was something about him, however, which seemed to prevent me from presenting to him the claims of Christ upon his life, although I was constantly seeking for an approach. After a year I succeeded. He was very courteous but was not ready. He frankly told me that he expected to become a Christian some day but that when he did so it meant "business," and that he was doing some things which he did not know whether he could give up. I still kept hold of him. Another year passed and I felt the time was ripe. We met by appointment and he was ready. Gradually, by being in an environment with Christian young people, his viewpoint had changed. He decided the matter and was baptized. His development was rapid. From president of our university class it was but a step to the cabinet of the Y. M. C. A., then president of that organization. Upon graduation he was made student secretary of the Y. M. C. A. for the state. He rapidly advanced in the esteem of his co-workers. For three years he has been in Egypt with headquarters in Cairo, working among the students there. He is a young man of the finest type of Christian ideals. I have said that if my life had yielded no fruitage but this I would feel that I had not served in vain.

A Right-hand Man

One day during a religious service for students held near the campus I was sitting next to a young man who had been a frequent, though not regular, attendant at my Bible class. He was not a Christian. I turned to him under an impulse and whispered: "John, is it not about time you became a Christian?" At once he whispered back: "I think it is." I said: "Come to my house Sunday afternoon and let us talk it over." He came, and there decided the matter. He was baptized. The following spring he was graduated. Afterward he became an instructor in the University of Illinois. A year or two later I was with Mr. Bryant, the pastor of our university church at that institution. I said to him: "By the way, do you happen to know John—who is a teacher in your university?" "Know him? Well, I should say I do! He is the superintendent of my Sunday school. He is my right-hand man."

Two years ago two fine young men came into my group of young people. Neither was a Christian. So open and frank were they that I had something of the feeling which the record says Jesus had for the exemplary young man who came to him asking the way to eternal life. It was some months before I felt close enough to them to talk to them about their relation to Christ without the risk of driving them away. Finally I invited them separately to the student house to talk with me. Neither was ready to decide, but when the men went away each thanked me and said that many things had been cleared up for him during the two hours that we had spent together. They went away to "think it over." A few months after I asked them to come together to see me. All this time we had kept up our close relations. To my joy both had made up their minds.

In the meantime a younger brother of one of the boys had come to the university. I immediately sought him out and found that he, too, had decided. In response to my first question he said: "I feel just as C. does. I have been trying to live a Christian life and I want to join the church."

The following Sunday, at the invitation of the pastor, these three young men went forward to unite with the church. At the close scores of their student friends flocked to the front to give them a royal welcome.

On Mother's Day last spring these young men were baptized. Their mothers came a distance of 150 miles to be with their boys that day. It was a great glad day.

A year ago one of the young men on our foot-ball eleven began to come to my class. He is six feet, three inches tall, weighs 212 pounds, and plays guard. He is a manly fellow with a fine face and is a law student. We had him with us for dinner one night at which time I found he was not a Christian. A few weeks passed. He continued to come to our services. I asked him to call to see me one day and at nine o'clock the next Saturday he came. The way had all been prepared. He was ready to give his life and service to Christ. Soon after he was baptized.

He is now a member of our class cabinet. The foot-ball season is a strenuous one for the boys on the team. Every afternoon for hours they are on the gridiron in the most strenuous practice. All the home games are played on Saturdays. It is a grilling, exhausting two hours. If any student has a good excuse to stay in and rest up on Sunday it is the man on the foot-ball team. But not a Sunday has passed when this young athlete has been in the city that he has not been in his place at church and Bible class.

He was referred to in our daily paper recently as "the perfect guard." One may ask: "How far do his Christian character and life go to make him that?" Impregnable on the defensive we are looking for him to "hold the line" against the attacks of unrighteousness bye and bye. Quick and aggressive on the offensive now we are expecting him to attack evils as vigorously in the stern realities which face him in his chosen profession.

One Sunday one of our law students with great difficulty prevailed upon his room-mate, also a law student, to come to our Bible class. The next Sunday the young man came of his own accord. That Sunday afternoon I called on him at his room. He was greatly pleased. Stretching himself out on his bed he began to talk. After a little he said: "I suppose you think that we boys never talk or think about religion, but we do." And then he went on to tell me how one of his frat brothers had died, and what the boys talked about afterward. It was a great and illuminating afternoon. He was one of the foremost men in the University—a fine debater. He continued to come to our class. Vacation came and he went home to spend the holidays. While there a revival was going on in the Congregational church. It was his opportunity, as his young lady friend was a member there. He went forward and joined the church. I do not know how much our group had to do with his decision. But I know we have a most devoted and loyal friend in Robert.

"I Should Like to Go"

A few years ago Doctor Lerrigo said to me: "I am in great need of three engineers to go out to the foreign field, and I cannot find them." We had here a young man in the college of engineers who had a considerable experience in construction work. He was a good draftsman. He was eighteen months in France in charge of a corps of engineers. One day when walking down the street with him I said: "Lloyd, you have been over in France, and the world does not seem very large to you now. How would you like to go to a mission field as a representative of our Foreign Society. They need engineers." Without hesitation he said: "I should like to go."

He was engaged to a young woman in our group of Baptist girls. For some time he hesitated to make known to her his decision, thinking she would object. Finally, when he got up courage to do so, she exclaimed: "I am so glad. I have wanted to be a missionary ever since I was a little girl." Two happier people one never saw. They were appointed by our board and are now in Bengal-Orissa. We now have six of our Baptist young people who have gone out from our group to the foreign field in the past few years.

Religious Work in State Universities

By Vernon S. Phillips

MAY 1, 1905, Chas. J. Galpin became university pastor at the University of Wisconsin, cooperating with the First Church of Madison, supported jointly by the Home Mission Society and the Wisconsin State Convention. So far as the writer knows, this was the beginning of the university pastor movement, the first recognition by any denomination of its responsibility in this field. In January, 1923, the Conference of Church Workers in Universities held its seventeenth annual meeting in Chicago with 115 registered delegates, working in forty-one educational institutions in thirty-one states, representing eleven different denominations besides the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. Action was taken providing for five regional conferences covering the entire country and including all state universities. In the last eighteen years our own denomination has provided a board of education which includes this work in its program; other denominations have done likewise; the Council of Church Boards of Education has been organized including twenty-seven denominations; the Methodists have formed the Wesley Foundation in thirty-two schools, the Presbyterians have the Westminster Foundation in seven or eight schools; the Baptists have the Francis Wayland Foundation in two university centers and other organizations for similar purposes in other centers.

We have learned some lessons which have now become axioms and settled principles. Every work has had a free hand to discover plans that might meet a local situation or express the genius of any denomination. Some experiments are now being carried forward about which there is difference of opinion. There are other things, however, upon which all of us are united.

The State University Has Come to Stay

First of all, the state university has come to stay. It is a permanent and important part of our American life. Legislatures are voting larger budgets every year, new buildings are being erected, students by the thousands are flocking to these schools to spend their last years of preparation for their life work. We need not expect to read in the morning papers that any state university has been abolished and the campus divided into city lots. We are to reckon with it as an institution of increasing importance in training men and women for all the walks of life in future generations. Many of these will be leaders in their respective fields.

We were surprised to learn that the students are our own church young people. Once we supposed that the church young people all went to the church colleges and the non-church students to the state universities. We have learned, however, that the percentages are about the same. From 85 to 95 per cent come from our Protestant homes.

We have been interested also in discovering that our faculty people are largely the burden bearers and workers in the different churches. Men and women of note in their professional fields, writers of well-known books, scholars of wide reputation, are more than likely to be found in their churches on Sunday regularly serving as deacons, trustees, Sunday-school officials and teachers. As a rule these faculty members are well informed, read their denominational papers and are in accord with the work of their various religious bodies.

The Local Church is the Key

The local church is the key to the religious situation. There is an important place for the university Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A. and certain kinds of cooperative effort. An occasional mass meeting on the campus has value, but if successful must have an unusual program and much publicity. The chief religious work is to be done by the local churches of the various denominations. Students prefer to be away from the campus on Sunday. They wish to join other groups in which there are older men and women and little children. They wish to hear the organ, to sing the great hymns and to enter with the whole family of God into his worship.

GET back to God and fundamental right!
Build his new house with patience infinite!
Resolve life's vast complexities to ways
More simple, and exalt the days!
Let all life's warp and woof be interwove
With gold of noble thought and radiant love,
So—only so—shall life's new temple stand,
Rock-firm, unshaken, his rightful deodand.
See to it then, ye builders of the peace,
And build with bold emprise life's new-won liberties!
Build his fair kingdom as he first designed
To his unending glory
And the welfare of mankind!
—John Oxenham

The church here has one of its great opportunities. It is not its purpose merely to pluck a few brands from the fire or to save a handful of young people from destruction; it is the work of the church rather to bring to them the great inspiration of faith, the teachings that have made their own denomination great, the sacred names and the noble enterprises of the kingdom of God, to train them in the real service of the church.

Young people are responding loyally to this leadership. Some are giving themselves to missionary service, to the ministry and the various Christian callings. In city churches and country churches we find our young people dependable and effective leaders. Many of our choicest laymen are these alumni.

Each denomination can do its best work by cooperation with the others. To a degree the university is a unit and some of its moral and religious problems must be faced by the united leadership of the churches. In one institution there was a bad situation in the matter of cheating in examinations which did not right itself until the university pastors attacked it as a campus problem. In another school there were abuses in fraternity and sorority life which called for the combined attention of the religious leaders. Evangelistic meetings, life service conferences, religious education programs, campaigns for church and Sunday-school attendance can be best conducted by cooperation.

The School of Religion Is Coming

In several state university centers the school of religion has been organized and is proving its worth. The churches are offering courses in Bible church history, religious education, church and Sunday-school administration. The pastoral approach has been the first expression of church life, the educational approach will doubtless be the next movement. Many students wish to make a more careful study of the Bible and the Christian foundations than either the university or the Sunday school can offer. Certain principles seem clear to those who have been giving thought to the school of religion, namely, that it should be interdenominational; that its students be undergraduates; that its work should be of university grade; that the school should grow in response to a local demand; that all its classes and operations should be off the campus and independent of the university, except that the university should give credit for its courses under certain conditions.

The Church Must Face This Task

The whole state university situation must be faced by the various denominations with resolution and vision. Our nation is sold on education. We are convinced that we must have an educated citizenship. Centralized schools, living salaries to public school teachers, the development of state universities; all these indicate the educational convictions of our citizens. The Christian church must enter into this field in an effective way. The state cannot do the work of the church, but the church must supplement what the state is doing. We are not obliged to erect the buildings, pay the faculty and administer the university. Our sole responsibility as church men is to equip the church and provide for its work in a way that shall really meet the situation.

Churches in these communities must be provided with large funds and high grade equipment. All the work done so far has come through allowances, pitifully small and woefully inadequate. Ohio State University, for example, has a faculty of 600 people, each one trained for his specialty, receiving an adequate salary and working with a satisfactory equipment. The church can never do its share of the work merely by employing some one for part time who is likely to be dismissed whenever denominational funds run low. Our board of education is deeply interested and has been dealing as generously as its funds permit. The church must have abundant means to provide skilled leaders and adequate equipment for the various phases of this task. The strongest

The Theological Seminaries

Are the standards for the ministry keeping pace with the standards for other professions?

By Clarence A. Barbour

THE seminaries have been called the West Points of the church of Jesus Christ. There is trained a considerable proportion of the coming leaders of our churches, men who will have large influence in giving the character to the churches of the future. It needs no argument to prove that the churches sorely need a trained and adequate leadership. In some respects readjustment is necessary to meet the new conditions and the new demands of a new age.

We are faced with the fact that in these days the minister must be many kinds of a man. The field of the ministry is varied, and the demands upon the average minister are multiplied, because the age in which we live is diversified and specialized beyond what any earlier generation has known. The demands have so increased that it is quite impossible entirely to overtake them in any course of three years in duration. The theological school must live its life and do its work in a world the like of which has never been seen. It is a trite word to say that we are passing through the rapids of a turbulent time.

The majority of the seminaries cannot well undertake diversified specialization. Most of them certainly will do well to concentrate definitely and without any measure of apology upon training for the pastorate as their main objective. The graduates should be devoted teachers and shepherds of the people, wise and sane, loving and sacrificial, reverent and fearless. They should be able to present religious truth to men in an interesting, convincing and persuasive way, and so to live among the people as to commend the truth which they present. We may well ask whether the standards for the ministry are keeping pace with the standards for other professions.

There must be ever more insistence upon the importance of the study of the Old and New Testaments. The value of the Bible is not brought out merely by the exegesis of words, but by historical interpretation, combining the exegetical always with the historical in the interpreting process. We may regret that, owing largely to conditions in the colleges and universities, it is not practical for the seminaries to do as great a measure of linguistic work as was formerly the case. There are men with special linguistic ability, and provision should be made for them; but for many students coming to the seminaries with a training furnished by the college and the university of today, more can be done in thorough-going courses based upon the English Bible than in spending an unduly long time over the original languages. There will always be students who can and will pursue linguistic courses with great profit and usefulness, but this is by no means true of all students.

There must be ample courses for a thorough acquaintance with the literature and the interpretation both of the Old Testament and of the New; not simply as a source of theme and sermon material, but for the sake of the actual contents of the scriptures. A reverent knowledge and love of the Bible is indispensable to the minister. If he has not this, he would best give himself to another vocation, for without them his ministry will be sounding brass and a clanging cymbal.

NO AMOUNT of mere piety, no amount of proclaimed loyalty to the "old gospel," and no amount of scholastic and articulated knowledge of the text and of the historical background of the Bible will save the career of the minister from lamentable failure unless he knows how to bring the everlasting power and meaning of the gospel message to the people in terms of their need.

It may well be asked whether there is not grave need of a modified view of the function of the seminary in regard to distinctively theological investigation and teaching. May we have been too eagr to get truth into system, to endeavor with consecrated ingenuity to articulate the system? God has revealed himself mainly in personality, supremely in the personality of Jesus. It is the task of Christian thought to relate the type of personality disclosed in Jesus to the thought and life of the time in which our generation is living. Our problem is that of the realization of the perfected personality of Jesus in the world today. Such a result will not be likely to be reached by a maximum of the dogmatic.

We may well ask ourselves whether there is a tendency to relax in the department of training in the theory and practice of the preparation and the delivery of the minister's message. If a minister fails here, the failure is irreparable. He may deceive himself by apparent success in dabbling in a score of things which other men can do as well as he, perhaps better than he. He may be a highly developed specialist in some scholastic field. But unless he can preach, and unless he is a wise and efficient leader and pastor of his people, the work of ministering to the welfare of the churches so far as he is concerned has broken down. The practical and homiletical values of the Bible should form an intelligent part of his training. We must not send out our men with a half-digested mass of ideas as to biblical values, but with little idea as to the use of those values in the message which they bring to the people. The average man or woman in the congregation needs to be helped to live. No amount of mere piety, no amount of proclaimed loyalty to the "old gospel," and no amount of scholastic and articulated knowledge of the text and of the historical background of the Bible, will save the career of the minister from lamentable failure unless he knows how to bring the everlasting power and meaning of the gospel message to the people in terms of their need. And it may be added, that some of the most marked instances of apparently immediate success have in the long run proved, and will prove, the most dismal and appalling failures.

It is not in my purpose to give an outline or to attempt an exposition of a theological course. Certain features are mentioned which would seem to need special emphasis. With such a purpose a word should surely be spoken regarding the great field of religious education. This has to do with the whole teaching function of the church and of society, so far as it involves religious ideals. Its presence in the curriculum has to do with the furnishing of what may be called a teaching ministry. Not only has this to do with the work of the Sunday school, but also with the instruction of church officers, the preparation of church members for teaching service, the training of Christian people for effective community leadership, the interpretation of Christianity to the layman, and the like; if the pastor fails to have this in mind, no one else in his church is likely to have it in mind or to be able to carry it on. At Rochester we are so thoroughly convinced of the great and increasing importance of this field, that the trustees have established a chair devoted exclusively to training in religious education. Rochester is not alone in its recognition of this need; other seminaries are equally cognizant of it. It may safely be said that this is one of the main efforts which are being made to bring into the curriculum courses whose purpose is the rightful equipping of the minister for the tasks of the present day.

With all of this, and with much more, in view, it should also emphatically be said that our seminaries greatly desire continually to be places for the cultivation of personal Christian character and personal piety. Unless there is supreme loyalty to Jesus Christ, unless we keep the mind and the heart of life open to his presence, we shall deservedly fail. I should know something of the attitude of our theological schools. I can say with the deepest conviction, that, knowing the schools, I know that this purpose is supreme. Our people may rest assured that the faculties of the seminaries are composed of humble, earnest, Christian believers, who are trying to be faithful to the stewardship which has been committed to them. They may not always win universal approval and assent. Such approval and assent are very welcome, but not in comparison with the verdict of him who is our Lord and Saviour.

A University Gospel Team

By Frank W. Padelford

THE charge is frequently made that our young people lose their religion when they go to college. Without doubt that is true of some of them as it is true of many of those who remain at home. But it is not true of all by any means. Nor is it true that all of them lose their deep interest in the evangelization of their fellow students and their fellow citizens. We used to hear a deal of talk about "the godless state universities."

There is a group of young people in the state university of Indiana who are affiliated with the Baptist church and who have demonstrated an intense interest in "spreading the good news." This is the gospel team of the Baptist church of Bloomington, Ind., with their recent pastor, Rev. Rollo C. Speer (top row, fourth from the left.)

During this past year this team has made nineteen visits to the small rural churches of which there are many in that section of Indiana. Sometimes they went in groups of two and often as many as ten went together. It would be difficult to estimate the results of the ministry of such a group of young people with their earnest faith and their zeal for the kingdom. The tabulated results include two Sunday schools organized and two B. Y. P. U.'s, and several conversions. Again and again the reports came back. "It has stirred our young people into new life." During the year two students were converted, one of whom became a valuable member of the team.

The make-up of this team is interesting and indicates how lines get crossed among students. In this group there are representatives of the Disciples, Lutherans, Methodists, Presbyterians, Quakers and Hebrews as well as Baptists, and all seeking to further the interests of the kingdom under the leadership of their Baptist pastor. The group includes honor students, champion athletes, a talented pianist, an accomplished reader, an assistant professor, a licensed preacher, a Filipino who came to America as a Catholic and who goes back a devoted Protestant Christian, and a Hebrew lad who gave his assistance as a violinist.

One cannot read the story of college groups like this, and similar stories can be written from other centers, without a stronger confidence in our young people and in our universities.

The Undenominational Bible Training Schools

True Baptists take to the Bible as hungry sheep to clover; therefore let us give them a Bible training school, for we must have Baptist training for pastors, missionaries and workers.

BY J. J. ROSS

THERE has been considerable criticism of our schools and colleges within the Northern Baptist Convention. No doubt a number of these schools have suffered because of this criticism and some of them have benefitted by it. It is unfortunate, however, that the criticism has been so general, at times bringing all of our schools under the same stigma. It would have been more just to be particular in the criticisms, naming the schools and even the professors who are guilty. I heard one of our Baptist pastors condemn all of our schools without exception as "hot beds of infidelity and immorality." He made no exceptions whatever, and, when approached about the matter, it was found that there were a number of schools about which he knew absolutely nothing. I cannot honestly criticize any of our schools for the reason that I never sat in their class-rooms and neither have I examined the text books used by the professors. Some of the critics claim that they have been in the class-room and that they have read and studied the textbooks. I have confidence in some of these brethren and believe from their criticisms that there is something wrong in some of our schools. At the same time I am convinced that all of the criticisms are not supported by facts. We have many schools and professors in the Northern Baptist Convention who are loyal to "the faith once delivered" and they are centers of spirituality, conviction and devotion. Students who have fallen prey to the thinking, or the lack of thinking, of the "radical professors," leave college or seminary and go into our churches where they seek, according to a fundamental law of generation, to reproduce their kind. It is soon discovered that they are a menace to our churches, for they almost invariably *un*evangelize and *un*spiritualize them. New Testament Baptist churches demand for their existence and mission a spiritual teaching ministry. These students frequently find themselves out of their churches, and then, out of the ministry altogether. This is the tragedy of the life of some of our theological students within the radius of our convention, and many of these men, had they been spiritually and properly taught would have made able ministers of Jesus Christ.

I wish it definitely understood that I have absolutely no sympathy for that teaching, or lack of teaching which knocks the foundations from under our young people, while they are seeking to prepare themselves for Christian service. I sincerely wish that this wrong within a few of our colleges could be corrected. The only way, according to my judgment, to correct this is to spiritualize and evangelize those individuals who are responsible for the wrong. They all need a real experience of Jesus Christ, in his personal, spiritual and central advent into their lives.

There is another group of schools, however, that is a real menace to our churches and missionary work just now. Through criticisms attention has been directed to our own schools with the result that the schools which I am about to mention have been overlooked. The schools I refer to are the *un*standardized, *un*denominational and *anti*denominational, so-called Bible schools. There are two undenominational Bible schools that are not included within this class, the White Seminary of New York and the Gordon Bible College in Boston. These two schools have college standing and seek to be faithful servants of the big Christian denominations of our country. I have several reasons for thinking that the unstandardized, undenominational Bible schools are a real menace to our churches and missionary work.

1. In the first place, they are a menace because of their low standards of admission. The majority of our young people who attend those schools are not qualified to enter our higher schools of learning. Some of these students never passed out of the eighth grade, and, not a few of them, can hardly put two sentences together correctly. They are accepted by the schools, given a short, narrow, unbalanced and superficial course, then stamped with the approval of the institution, and sent forth to failure in some of our churches. They do the churches harm before they leave them and sometimes the churches do them harm before they dismiss them. Many of these students, otherwise good young people, are like Ephraim's cake, "not turned." We demand a thorough course of training for the medical, legal and teaching professions. We would not think of engaging for service, when life and death were in the balance, one who was ill-trained in the medical profession. Neither would we think of engaging a teacher for our secular schools without sufficient training. Why belittle the ministry of the gospel of Jesus Christ by offering and giving such short-cut, incomplete and unbalanced courses as are provided in these Bible schools?

2. Further, these schools are a menace on account of the incompleteness of their courses of study. Generally speaking, I agree with the teaching of those Bible schools as far as they go. But they are a long distance from going far enough in training our young people to be efficient workers in our Baptist churches and Sunday schools. They provide no regular and systematic courses in Christian education, Sunday-school pedagogy, young people's work and Bible ethics. Neither do they provide any satisfactory course on the subject of the church, with its origin, constitution, organization, ordinances and mission, as we Baptists believe the New Testament to teach. I asked one of the teachers in one of the schools, "What is your reply when the question of the church comes up in the class-room?" His answer was, "We refer the answer of the question to the conscience of the questioner." "To say the least," I said, "that is very unbaptistic, for Baptists always refer such questions and questioners to the New Testament." The students—our students — receive no course on the subject of our particular missionary work. It is true that they receive some courses on interdenominational and antidenominational missions. On the question of the church, as well as upon other subjects, these Bible schools are on the rocks and this makes them dangerous to our churches and missionary work.

3. Again, I wish to say that these schools are a menace to us because, by their teaching and lack of teaching, they weaken, and, in many cases, utterly destroy our distinctive, denominational spirit and belief. The dean of one of these schools strongly repudiated this in my presence. But they do it nevertheless. How is this accomplished? It is accomplished very simply and perhaps in some cases without conscious intention. For instance, in their teaching they avoid all reference to distinctive denominational doctrines, with the result that the students are made to believe that these doctrines are unimportant in the Christian system. More than once have I heard students from these schools say, "Anyway, it makes no difference what church you belong to." Then these schools generally invite as their special missionary speakers men and women from some undenominational and antidenominational home and foreign missionary fields. I have heard these persons speak to the students of these schools more than once, and they did not let the opportunity pass without taking a fling at the denominations, attempting thereby to belittle them in their missionary work and exalting themselves in their missionary work. I have heard some very odious comparisons and contrasts drawn by those undenominational missionaries. It is very seldom that any of our mission secretaries, state secretaries, or leading returned foreign missionaries, are invited to those schools to give addresses. Further, these schools generally invite to their platform those who are known to be critics within and of their own denominations. It is very seldom that one is asked to speak to the student bodies in those schools who is known to be loyal and true within his own communion. There is a Baptist minister who is known to be somewhat radical and he was not invited to speak to the student body in any of those schools, but suddenly, without changing his theological viewpoint, he became a critic of a certain "wrong" within our ranks. As soon as this became known he was invited to one of those schools for a special address. He was paraded before the student body as a great hero, one who was standing for the faith, within his own denomination. Did his presence and his address make the students who were members of our churches think more or less of our great Northern Baptist Convention? I will leave the reader to answer.

Furthermore, frequently in those schools the teachers are not good representatives of their respective denominations. I know of one who is a Baptist and perhaps he is a sample of others. He has been an ordained Baptist minister for twenty years. He has been the pastor of some good Baptist churches. In the city where he lives and teaches there are many Baptist churches, and some of them not far from his door. A few months after he entered that school as a teacher, his whole family, except

The Authority of the Teacher

BY THOMAS H. SPRAGUE

IT is impossible to exaggerate the importance, the dignity, the responsibility and the influence of the teacher, whether in the public school, the university or the church school; for the teacher is concerned with the molding of personality and the building of life. Much money is spent on buildings, equipment and books, but greater in importance than any of these is the teacher. It is easy to have the title. It is difficult to be a teacher.

It is interesting to notice the emphasis on teaching as shown by the example of Jesus. In the Gospels there are twice as many references to his teaching function as to his preaching. "Jesus went teaching in their synagogues." "He began again to teach by the seaside." "He began to teach them many things." Nicodemus declared, "We know thou art a teacher come from God." And we read that "the multitude were astonished at his teaching for he taught them like an authority, not like their own scribes."

It is the element of authority which gives a teacher his highest credential. In the Master there was a three-fold authority: the authority of knowledge, of certitude and of character.

Jesus had the authority which comes from a thorough knowledge of the subjects which he taught. His specialty was God. Christ himself said, "but I know him: and if I should say I know him not, I shall be like unto you a liar, but I know him." He did not claim to be an authority on astronomy, on science, on medicine, on architecture, though for all we know he may have been. But in the realm of the knowledge of God he could say "I know him." And when the disciples were in his presence they felt themselves to be in the presence of one who knew.

Jesus was also authoritative because of his certitude. He had a knowledge which was based upon experience. There is no interrogation mark in Jesus. It is one thing to know what a book contains and another to know it from experience.

Not all represented to be truth is to be accepted or rejected from the viewpoint of its bearing upon life. Not all religious truths are necessarily to find emphasis in one's experience before acceptance. A child is taught many things which its mind does not thoroughly grasp or understand. But when knowledge is reenforced by personal experience and we can say from personal observation "I know," it gives one added authority. The authority of Jesus was that of one who had had experience. "I know him: because I am from him and he sent me." He had experienced God.

Moreover the Great Teacher had the authority of character. His personal life gave emphasis to what he said. "Which of you convicteth me of sin." Said Pilate, "I find no fault in this man." As some one has said "each day of his life even deepens our admiration of him, our confidence in his spotless and holy purity."

Now Jesus is our great Exemplar as teacher. Do we have authority in our teaching?

The authority of knowledge is one of our mightiest assets—the knowledge of the Bible, a knowledge never completed, for the Bible is like some vast fountain. We drink from its waters, never reducing the supply and never permanently satisfying our thirst. We should know the child, his psychology, his attitudes, his experiences, his needs. We should know teaching. There is no excuse today for ignorance along this line. The conclusions of an unlimited number of those who have had genuine, successful and ripe experience in teaching others may be had for the asking. To no branch of human study is more careful thought being given than to that of pedagogy. And the church school should not be behind our public systems of education in expecting and demanding knowledge as a prerequisite of the teaching function.

When Doctor Arnold was asked why he continued to be such an inveterate student even in his later years he replied that he preferred that his pupils "should drink from a running stream rather than from a stagnant pool."

We should have also the authority of certitude. Let the truths we teach find exemplification in our life and they will be the more thoroughly impressed on those we teach. George H. Betts in one of his splendid volumes remarks "Truth never comes to the child disembodied and detached but always with the slant and quality of the teacher's interpretation of it. It is as if the teacher's mind and spirit were the stained glass through which the sunlight must fall: all that passes through the medium of a living personality takes its tone and quality from this contact."

Above all the teacher should know Christ, be able to say " I know him whom I have believed." To know Christ is our objective for the scholar and to try to teach Christ without revealing him in personal life will make our teaching as sounding brass or a clanging cymbal.

And this brings us to the authority of character. To teach God's word and not live it is mockery and hypocrisy. Try to recall the teachers you had in childhood days. Do you remember much of what they taught? You do remember them their consecration, their piety, their deep earnest conscientiousness, their love for the Saviour.

Said a worthy divine of bygone days in addressing a class of young men about to go forth to preach the gospel, "Young men paint Jesus Christ upon your banner and then go forth and hold it up for the applause of an admiring world." To incarnate Christ in our life will be the climax of authority in our teaching. Reveal him and win the child for God.

Constructive Teaching

"Whoso shall cause one of these little ones that believe on me to stumble—"

By Frederic J. Gurney

THE most imperative duty, the most immediate obligation, the choicest privilege of the man who has critical, scholarly knowledge of the Bible is to teach it constructively in a Christlike way. A young friend of mine, a freshman in one of the smaller colleges, writes to me: "In our class in the Bible Doctor X is inclined to make light of and to treat with ridicule the truths in the Old Testament that I have loved so much. It makes me resentful, for I feel that if I give up my beliefs and give in to his teaching I can't help but acquire something of his attitude, and this seems to me to lack the real principles, the real foundation of a true Christian character. Doctor X, on the other hand, is a man whom I have come to admire and love both in the class room and outside of it. I had a long talk with him about three weeks ago and he opened up new lines of thought and reasoning, but still I question whether I should give myself over to the newer way of thinking. To me Doctor X's Christ is not the Christ that I love so dearly. I wish I could talk to you about this whole subject."

Now this Doctor X has no right to handle his subject as he evidently is doing. Here is a devout, sincere young person who has grown up in a Christian home and is living a Christian life. This student goes to college prepared to learn and is met by ridicule of sacred things. One of Christ's little ones is caused to stumble because this teacher doesn't sense his job. He thinks he must destroy his students' wrong notions before giving them right ones. Perhaps this student has to some extent misunderstood the professor. If so, it is the professor's fault. He knows that he is handling subjects that are intimately bound up with the holiest things in the lives of the young people before him. His business is to make things plain to them. He is there to teach them and not merely to teach a subject. The Bible was made for man, not man for the Bible. Many a man who has spent years in studying the Bible and religious subjects generally and to whom the newer knowledge and newer methods of interpretation have become thoroughly familiar, utterly fails to realize how completely unknown all this is to the rank and file of Christian people, including the young folk who go to college. But it is his business to realize this. He is put into the instructor's chair for precisely this purpose. A primary principle in teaching is, that a man should duly appreciate the mental attitude of his students. It is his duty and his privilege to give his students something worth knowing and not merely to destroy the mistaken notions that they may have brought with them from home.

This student goes on to say: "Don't think me arbitrary or unreasonable, but as yet the subject is very much unsettled. I question it so much because this attitude has been the source of a very marked indifference among so many of the college students, an indifference with regard to anything of a religious nature." Now if Doctor X had his eyes open, if he appreciated his task aright, if he realized the value of the youths and maidens in his classes and saw his opportunity and his privilege, he would proceed constructively. He would open up the spiritual realities in his subject and portray them in their historical setting, a process which is always interesting to students and which is practically certain to lead them to see for themselves the inadequacy of their earlier ideas and to form newer and better conceptions. This man can get along without ridicule. Quite possibly certain views that some of the students have held are ridiculous but ridicule isn't going to teach them anything. On the other hand, if after a time they come to see for themselves the inadequacy of their old views and meanwhile have gained a clearer understanding of the spiritual lessons contained in what they have been studying, the real object has been gained. The old mistaken or inadequate notions will give place, almost imperceptibly in many cases, to a new and helpful and inspiring understanding of the subject. Every course of Bible study ought to leave the student with a new grasp of truth, a new sense of its value, a new readiness to take it into his life.

The same thing is true of the pulpit. There are men who go into the ministry equipped with the new knowledge and fail in their work because they become iconoclasts instead of builders. The people in their churches and communities look to them for spiritual food and get disturbance of traditional views with nothing to take their place. They expect moral leadership and find themselves in unknown regions with no particular prospect ahead. Other men, on the contrary, have gone into the work with similar equipment of learning and are doing a constructive work and doing it in a Christlike way. These men are making a genuine contribution to Christian life and the general advancement of the cause of Christ.

There has been in recent years a great increase in the study of the Bible in schools and colleges and also much advance in the methods of study in churches and Sunday schools. This is good, very good. There is an increasing number of men equipped with the newer learning going into the serious business of teaching and of preaching; good again. But if these men understand and appreciate their tasks, they will in all cases perform a constructive service and, for the most part, let the people whom they serve do their own destroying of previous misconceptions.

It was my very great privilege to study under that prince of Bible teachers, the late President Harper, of the University of Chicago. Through his instruction my views underwent very great, even radical, change. It came about gradually. He taught, he did not destroy. People lived and events moved before my eyes. New conceptions, new understanding came into my mind and took the place of the inadequate ideas of former days. The horizon broadened and the Bible came to have a new and a grander meaning. Of course not every man can teach as Harper did, but every teacher who is able to use the scientific and historical method can work constructively in his teaching if he will set himself to do so and will realize that he is teaching people and not merely a subject.

Religious Work in State Universities

preachers we have, the most effective Bible teachers, the best authorities in vocational guidance, the most skillful workers with young people; these are none too good to be maintained in these centers.

Ohio Baptists are trying to meet this situation at Ohio State University by the organization of the Francis Wayland Foundation to receive and administer funds and property to assist in Baptist work in cooperation with the Tenth Avenue Baptist Church of Columbus. Its nine trustees are chosen by the Northern Baptist board of education, the Ohio Baptist Convention, and the Tenth Avenue Church. The foundation is in the New World Movement for $150,000. As the money comes in it is being used to acquire nine pieces of property which will give the Baptists a frontage of 172 feet facing the university campus and a depth of 380 feet, including the property of the church. The eight buildings now on this property are bringing in rental, and can be used in part for a dormitory for women, a home for men, a Sunday-school plant, or a home for missionaries, until such time as it may be possible to erect permanent buildings for these purposes. This plan gives us ground room for future developments, makes it possible to experiment with present structures, and gives us rentals as productive endowment.

The state legislature votes an appropriation of about $3,000,000 per year for Ohio State University. This means that the Baptist tax payers of Ohio pay every year more than $100,000 to maintain the university. If it is worth that much, and it surely is, what ought we to do to bring into the university community the message and challenge of our faith in Christ? Our young people are going out, skilled in their various professions, to be patriotic citizens, producers and leaders. Shall they at the same time go out earnest and intelligent servants of the church and its Master? This is the question which no one but the church can answer.

In the days of Roger Williams the Baptists had an important part in deciding that the church and the state must be separate in America. In the days of Francis Wayland and under his leadership, we Baptists had an important part in bringing in those educational policies that have made the state universities. In other words, we have helped in a decision that the church and state must function separately; we have helped in making the state university; we must now have a large part in bringing the message and the work of Christ and his church in a strong and permanent way into university life.

Topic for June 3

LESSONS FROM THE PSALMS
(6) THE SHEPHERD PSALM
Ps. 23:1-6. (Consecration meeting)
"Jehovah is my Shepherd"

There are two passages of scripture with which most people are acquainted. One is John 3:16 "For God so loved the world" and the other is the twenty-third Psalm. From the time we were able to lisp, those of us who have attended Bible schools have been reciting this Shepherd Psalm, quite often to be sure without very much knowledge as to its meaning.

The picture presented of the Shepherd's care is one of the most beautiful in all literature and we have been able to appropriate the psalm for the development of our devotional life whether we were enjoying prosperity, during the periods of quiet, out in the paths of service, or passing through the "valley of the shadow of death." The psalm portrays the intimate relationship between the Shepherd and his sheep. In the midst of the complex situations of today, there is great need for intimacy of relationship between the young life of our churches and the great Shepherd of us all. Study the psalm itself and discover for yourself its richness of meaning.

Still Another Hundred

Young people all over the country are waking up to the privilege of contributing their bit to boost the cause of young people's work in Europe. The money has been coming in quite rapidly of late from widely scattered sections of the country. We are confident that the hopes of the board of managers of the B. Y. P. U. of A. to help the young people of Europe are to materialize. The requests of our brethren across the sea are not falling on deaf ears, and we shall soon see the time when organized young people's work throughout the world shall be a reality. Meanwhile, you locals that have not taken your collection of 10 cents per member, get busy right away. We were unable to get our people waked up to take their collections before the first of May so we shall keep right on for several weeks and trust that money will come in rapidly during the month of May. Notice that this hundred comes from B. Y. P. U.'s scattered in nine different states.

Miami, Ohio, Association

In order to stimulate church advertising, the association paper, Mr. Will Schwemlein, editor, is conducting a contest as outlined. 1. The B. Y. P. U. Society (this includes seniors, intermediates and juniors) which can submit the best exhibit of publicity inches, published in the local paper, B. Y. P. Assembly, Ohio Baptist and THE BAPTIST, between the dates of Jan. 1, 1923, and Sept. 1, 1923, will receive a prize. Clippings for the contest must be prepared in this manner: a. Clip the article and paste on cardboard and on one side only. b. Have the name of the society on the reverse side written plainly. c. Have the date under each clipping.

2. Have the letters B. Y. P. U. somewhere in the article as well as the name of the society.

3. Only societies which have their clippings prepared in the above way will be given credit.

Posters, Posters and Posters!

A prize will also be given to the B. Y. P. U. that can show the best exhibit posters announcing B. Y. P. U. meetings and socials from Jan. 1, 1923 to Sept. 1, 1923.

Save both the clippings and poster till the first of Sept., 1923. Then they will be collected and put on exhibit at the fall rally in Hamilton early in September. Mr. Rowland Singleton, editor of the Epworth League Epworthian and president of the Central District, will be the judge.

Get busy. Ninth street issues a challenge to all B. Y. P. U. societies.

International Sunday School Lesson for June 3

JEREMIAH, THE PROPHET OF COURAGE

Lesson: Jer. 35: 5-19. Golden Text: 1 Cor. 16:13

Introductory

A reading of the book of Jeremiah would be most helpful in the study of the "prophet of courage." It is chiefly his book—autobiographical. The first twenty-five chapters consist mainly of talks by him and the rest give accounts of his life and work. It was in this manner Jeremiah got his message to the people when he could no longer speak to them. For forty years Jeremiah was a prophet, during which time he saw the rise and the fall of the kingdom of Judah. When Jerusalem was seized by the Chaldeans he was carried away into Egypt.

The Lesson

The Rechabites were descendants of the Kenites, dwellers in tents, tilling neither field nor vineyard, nor planting seed—a people whom the Israelites despised as worthy of their contempt. Yet it is from these humble people that Jeremiah draws a lesson. He set bowls full of wine before the sons of the house of Rechabites and invited them to drink of the wine. But they declined saying, "We will drink no wine," because of a command laid upon the family two centuries before and which had been literally obeyed. As well had been obeyed the injunction not to build houses or till fields, until the coming of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, had forced them to leave the country for the city. Jeremiah was moved by Jehovah to emphasize before his people the simple and unquestioning obedience of these sons of Rachab to a human command, whereas Judah had refused to hearken to the word of the living God.

Leading Thoughts

1. "The first and most fundamental principle in Christianity is an intention to please God in all our actions."—William Law. 2. Jeremiah knew God and he had the courage which comes from such an acquaintance. 3. God in the heart of man governing his every thought and deed—that is the message of Jeremiah.

Know Thyself

By F. M. Armstrong

The following questions have been compiled to reveal some of the characteristic results of spiritual vitality, reduced to concrete expression. They are not intended to be exhaustive, but, rather, to indicate a variety of manifestations of practical spirituality. The questions are in imitation of similar ones appearing in efficency tests along various lines, published in The Independent by Edward Earle Purniton. Our honest answers to these or similar questions may serve to reveal to each one of us our real standing in Christian character.

If you can answer, "Yes", to the best that the question suggests, put down the numeral "4" opposite that question. If you measure up to the lower standard only in question or not at all, put down "0". If you measure up partially, put down that numeral between "0" and "4", which you think fair. Add up the column and you will have your percentage.

Points

1. Is prayer to you a pleasure and necessity or a duty?
2. Are your prayers made up largely of intercession, together with thanksgiving and confession, or are they mainly requests?
3. Do you find more inspiration in the Bible than in any other book you read?
4. Do you turn to God first in time of stress, or last?
5. Do you thank God for each success?
6. Can you point to at least two people whom in the past year you have brought into closer relationship with God?
7. Do you worship God in the church service, or hear the sermon only?
8. Can you get spiritual inspiration from wise and ignorant, old and young, or only from your intellectual and social equals?
9. Do the people you live with believe in your Christianity?
10. Have you formulated for yourself at least six principles of Christian conduct, and do you adhere to them?
11. Have you learned at least one new religious truth in the past year, and incorporated it into your life?
12. Have you made definite and measureable progress in overcoming at least one weakness in the last two years?
13. Are God and Christianity natural and inherent subjects in your conversation, or foreign to it?
14. Are you unsatisfied and uncomfortable in the company of those who do not believe in things spiritual?
15. Have you studied your own abilities and found a field for them in Christian service?
16. Are you intelligent and enthusiastic about at least one missionary field or enterprise?
17. Do you conduct your business and arrange your life as a steward of God, or for yourself?
18. Have you made a systematic study of your income and expenses and devoted to benevolence that certain percentage which seems right?
19. Can you differ from a man theologically and have deep Christian fellowship with him?
20. Do you keep the morning watch or have some special time for communion with God?
21. Is your sympathy broader than a year ago?
22. Have you helped at least two people in a practical and material way during the past six months?
23. Is there a spirit of forgiveness in your heart toward everyone, or are there exceptions?
24. Is the determining factor in your life, the will of God for you, or is it something else such as your advancement, provision for the future, etc.?
25. Is there a consciousness of the presence of God in your heart and life?

Total, your percentage

THE 1920 census shows that the southern states had a proportionate percentage of reduction of illiteracy over the 1900 figures that ranges from 66.2 for Florida to 34.5 for Tennessee. Every southern state reduced its percentage of illiteracy in each of the two census reports, 1910, 1920. This applies for total illiteracy, native white illiteracy and negro illiteracy. Special efforts have been made by a number of the states to reduce illiteracy by holding adult schools. While the adult school does not carry its pupils very far in the curriculum, it does render them able to read and write ordinary English. Further, the public school system in the South has made wonderful progress within this twenty-year period.

---

The "Etude" recently conducted a survey to discover the favorite hymns in the United States. The census was quite exhaustive and included the best minds in America. In order of preference, the first ten stand as follows: Abide with me; Nearer, My God, to Thee; Lead, Kindly Light; Rock of Ages; Jesus Lover of My Soul; Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty; Just as I am Without One Plea; Jesus, Saviour, Pilot Me; My Faith Looks Up to Thee; All Hail the Power of Jesus Name.

The Great Atlantic and Pacific T Company

THERE was not a Ripple
On the Pacific ocean of Mrs. Tistbap's calm spirits
As the train went
Surging, roaring, rattling, clashing
(As even enchanted trains will surge, roar, rattle, clash)
Through stunted pine forests
And marshy lowlands
On its way toward.....
Ah!
That magic spot ahead!

It was unbelievable to her
That after all these years
Of being a
Pillar in the house of the Lord
She was now about to have
An adventure out of it—
She, just an insignificant nobody!
Only the day before how her
Flabbergasted family
Had looked at her when
She broke the amazing news:
"If nobody minds, I'm going to the convention.
My suitcase is all packed,
Except for my foulard; of course,
That's just folded, ready to go in Tomorrow morning on top of my Tooth-brush."

"But bless my best brass buttons,
Mrs. T!"
Ejaculated Papa Tistbap,
"What convention?
And where?
And for how long?"
She smiled—a la Mona Lisa—
As the best of wives should, on occasion:
"Atlantic City!" she said
Casually,
Blissfully,
Her mind all made up.

"ATLANTIC CITY?"
Gasped
Gurgled
Groaned
The family, registering enough
Dramatic emotion in their Faces
And tones
To show by those two words
What they thought of the Atlantic Ocean and—their Pacific mother.

But little she cared how they Gasped
Gurgled
Groaned.
She loved them devotedly, but

This department is conducted by Miss Margaret T. Applegarth. Communications to her may be addressed in care of THE BAPTIST.

Who was it who said:
"I could not love thee, dear, so much, Loved I not honor more."
And she, even she, had been appointed
A delegate
To represent the Baptist church of Hickville Center.....
What greater honor was there?
Therefore the foulard went in on top of
The toothbrush
All in good time to Catch the 9:52 for Philadelphia and
All points east.
"Step lively, madam!"

Ah yes, it was an adventure.
But not nearly as much
For her
As for—us!
For you and for me.
We had been making ready for Little Mrs. T. of Hickville Center
All the year:
Was it not
For her that
We dusted off the gavel?
Wrote our reports?
Prepared our speeches?
Arranged our programs?
Added our morning study classes?
Assembled exhibits?
Printed our literature?
Straight from Main Street
She came——
Our constituency!
With all of Main Street's Homely Wholesome Notions
Of what constitutes a Good Baptist.
The hope of the denomination, she!
For no sooner had she shaken out the folds
Of the foulard,
And hung it in the Modest hotel clothes press
Than she went out to
Sniff the salt air, and,
Of course,
To spy out the land,
And spot the "notables"!

"Atlantic City!" she thrilled,
Adding: "At last!"
For down in her heart of hearts
She had been rolling dreams
Of this famous playground
Into how many cookies
And pies?
Ironing visions of it
Into how many of Papa Tistbap's
Starched shirt bosoms?
It is a lovely thing when Dreams come true.
She sauntered blissfully
Toward the Boardwalk
And instantly was—
Lonely.
She had set forth questing
For a sight of famous Baptists,
But she met
Jews and
Rolling chairs,
Syrians and
Rolling chairs,
Actresses and
Rolling chairs,
Japanese and
Rolling chairs,
Bankers and
Rolling chairs,
Turks and
Rolling chairs,
More bankers,
More actresses,
More Jews,
More rolling chairs.
Oh, yes, she was very lonely.

"I promised I'd send the folks
A post-card," she said, and Bought one at a corner stand
Where pen and ink and stamps
Were all convenient.
She wrote:
"This is a fine place. On one side
There's Atlantic Ocean clear out to Where the sky begins.
On the other side, there's shops.
Inbetween, there's a board walk
And me, the only Baptist here so far."

Vanity of vanity, saith the preacher, all is Vani-T!

But that was before she discovered
The Steel Pier,
Where
Baptists to right of her
Baptists to left of her
Volleyed and thundered
As they peacefully waited in Line
For their credentials.
She also waited.
Possibly others were Bored.
Not she!
Not when she could see more Baptists
In this one waiting queue
Than she had ever seen Together
In all her life before.
She liked them—
Thin, fat, fair, forty!
"They're my own folks!" she thrilled,
And, like the Psalmist's little hills,
She would have liked to skip for joy,
Only of course, being a delegate,
She was horribly proper.

But her soul was all on tiptoe
For the joys ahead.
Oh, convention—treat her kindly!
Do your best for Mrs. T. of Hickville Center.
She wanders, open-eyed, in Search of sights; oh, help her find
The sights she needs!
Her second post-card said:
"I'm like a cat in a
Strange garret,
But even if—
Curiosi-T killed that cat, it
shan't kill ME!

Some kind bustling soul directed
Mrs. T.
To the literature exhibits.
She gasped. Why, it was Simply unbelievable
That for a few pennies each
You could actually buy—
Programs helps,
Plays,
Stewardship leaflets,
Short stories,
Gripping facts in tabloid form.
She laid in a
Dollar's worth, lest they be Sold out tomorrow! Then
She wrote her third post-card
To the president of the Hickville Center
Missionary circle:
"Dear Belle: Even if I don't Shake hands with
Mrs. Montgomery
I've bought up the finest batch
Of leaflets you ever laid eyes on
To help us next year.
A catalogue, too, so we
Can order more.
Imagine us Hickville Center folks
Never realizing what
First aid to meetings we were Missing, and all for a few Cents, and
Couched in such a few words!
Brevi-T is the soul of wit!"

From then on her days were Never-ending eye-openers.
Confused with such a feast of Good things
She ventured to ask a Certain Lady which of the Sessions
She should attend, and this Certain Lady
Visualized little Mrs. T's background, Saying: "Tell me about your Home church."
So she told about
How the minister was thus and so.
How deacon so and so did thus and so.
How the young folks did thus and so.
How the ladies were long on socials and short on Missionary programs.
How folks didn't give much
Or know much
Or care much
For anything outside
Hickville Center.
When it was once told she wrote
To Papa Tistbap: "Fancy me reeling
Everything off to a comparative
Stranger, only she declares
The Baptist denomination pays her
Specially to help out such as
We. She surely Helped me, for
Hones-T is the best policy!"

But when she began attending
The suggested sessions
She gleaned
Astonishing facts:
That Baptists had not yet Reached
The high goals
They longed to reach.
She learned of:
Cuts in appropriations,
Needlessly prolonged furloughs,
New projects halted,
Old projects hindered,
Debts incurred,
Interest on borrowed money.
"Sakes alive!" said Mrs. T.,
"These national treasuries
Are just like folks' pocketbooks,
You've got to have cash to do Business!
Suppose Papa T. had to wait
Until April
Each year
To see whether he could pay
His back bills.
It isn't fair!"
Oh, Convention! Convention! It is Worth while
To send Mrs. T. home so brimful of Mingled indignation
And responsibility
That, after the sessions on Thursday and Friday,
She drops a post-card to her
Pastor:
"O Pastor, Reverend Sir, you
Sent me as a delegate, so
Now I have to inform you
That the Hickville Center Baptist Church
Has been sadly Crippling Hampering
Halting
The work of our denomination
Throughout the world. I never Dreamed of this before. Perhaps After all, if it pricks our Consciences awake we can say—
Sweet are the uses of Adversi—T."

And so, from day to day,
Atlantic City did things to the Inner horizon line of this Hicksville Center Lady—
Her vision widened,
Her sympathies broadened,
Her intelligence deepened,
Her love awakened:
From being a shy
Nobody
She became a useful
Somebody.
Her suitcase grew full to the Brim
With all those catalogues,
Reports,
Suggestions,
Programs, etc.
Which we spent last year preparing For this Mrs. T.
She almost had to leave
The foulard and
The toothbrush
Behind.
They did not really matter as much
As when she arrived, for
She was writing home to
Hickville Center:
"Something must be done at once
After I arrive.
Baptists are just folks like
You and me.
We're here to push.
We don't know how to push.
We've got to learn.
I've got some of the best ways
Packed in my suitcase.
We'll have to figure out
How to fit these plans to Hickville Center.
Since there's no time to waste
I guess we can do it, for
Necessi—T is the mother of invention."

The Young Reserves

Don't you think it is fun to read other people's mail over their shoulders, so that the minute they have finished you have finished, too, and can talk things over? One very sad thing for you to read over my shoulder is a very nice poem by June Sawyer, of Greene, Maine, which was not printed among our other Contest poems two weeks ago, by some strange oversight. Perhaps you will enjoy it all the more now.

What Happens When We Climb Dollar Hill

Let us climb straight up Dollar Hill,
And we will have a Dollar Bill;
'Twill help the children who are poor,
And keep starvation from their door.

Dollar Hill has one good rule,
To have foreign children go to school.
They will go to school and learn with a will
And all this done when we climb Dollar Hill.

Then here is an interesting letter, dated April 13, 1921 from Alexandria, Minnesota:

Dear Margaret,

Nothing to do. Oh yes, I need to write some letters. Excuse me for forgetting to write to you sooner. I suppose you know why I am writing. Well, I want to thank you for the stamps. I have been wanting some from China for some time and was glad to get the ones you sent. If you have any more in your mail won't you send me a few, if you remember?

The weather has been fine so far. But today it has been sort of cold. It has been a strong wind. It thundered and lightened here for the first time this year.

My big sister is playing the piano till my ears are almost deaf. She plays in the morning, at noon and at night so you can't blame me. My little sister is tagging around me and gets me nervous. Au revoir.

Your friend, Gordon Anderson.

P. S. How old are you?

I don't know when I have loved any P. S. as much as Gordon's, but I am still wondering just how to answer him!

Boston Letter

Dr. James L. Barton

Our Congregational friends have greatly gained by their denominational policy—permanency in place, plan and personnel. They have had no damaging removals, no upsetting readjustments, no shifting of secretaries at the head of their great enterprises. For years, Doctor Barton and the "American board" have been identical. When you think of one, you also think of the other. The result is, that for some years they have had a leader in their missionary enterprises who is an acknowledged authority in even larger matters than world evangelization is by many supposed to be.

It was eminently befitting that Dr. James L. Barton should be the speaker at the May meeting of our Baptist Social Union. The new president was fortunate in his first program. He made a good impression. Seriousness and character, going with terseness and promptness, evidently make up his type. Consequently we enjoyed our speaker nearly an hour, and got home early.

The Lausanne Conference

"America's Interest in the Lausanne Conference" was Doctor Barton's theme. His early missionary service in the Near East giving him an inside knowledge of the interior Turk, as well as of interior Turkey, and his full intelligence and power to grasp world matters enabled him to talk as few of our statesmen are able to do concerning the intricate eastern situation. The doctor was chockfull of his subject, and possessed of strong convictions as to the duty of Christian America. He thinks Turkey has had sufficient political and diplomatic contact with the nations, and now ought to know something of moral contact and disinterested Christian helpfulness. There, America can come in better than any other nation. We let one great opportunity slip away from us, but should welcome another. The masterly address held us tight in its grasp of moral power and convincing interest. Anyhow, we were made certain that the Turk was bulging large at Lausanne.

Home Talent

The last two Mondays were great days at the Ministers' Conference. We were shown again what home talent can do for us. On Apr. 30 Prof. W. N. Donovan, of Newton, was the speaker upon a subject suggested to him, and upon which he proved himself perfectly at home: "The Most Minor of the Minor Prophets." He made us so confident that the Newton professors can render the ministers a great service, that doubtless other professors will also be drafted.

Doctor Donovan has the easy mastery of the scholar, and charmed his auditors by his full acquaintance with the materials of his subject. Plainly it was the head of the Old Testament department at Newton that we were hearing. He made Joel, Obadiah, Jonah, Micah, Nahum, Habakuk, Zephaniah and Haggai speak like moderns to moderns, and sent many a listening minister to those almost neglected prophecies for timely sermon stuff. A performance so full of human interest, and pervaded with the easy grace of mastership, made listening a delight on "blue Monday."

Dr. A. T. Kempton

The color of Monday was also changed by our own Doctor Kempton, pastor of the Broadway Church, Cambridge. Doctor Kempton was hot from Palestine, the Nile and Mediterranean country. He discoursed so unconventionally and with such intimate warmth about impressions usually left out of platform recitals of travel, that we caught much of his heat and were his delighted traveling companions. Evidently his most vivid impressions of the Holy Land were spiritual. There was a pervading presence everywhere.

The Luxor tombs of the old Pharaohs seemed most to impress him as materials for modern scientific publicity. The success of it has filled the world, as though Egyptian "finds" had never before been achieved. Certainly they have never before been so fully capitalized for tourists, literature and fashions.

We shall be having more of these delightful travel fests, for is not Doctor Heath to have a ten weeks rest with Stockholm in the midst? And is not the redoutable Kenneth C. MacArthur of Cambridge, out with an expectant tourist party for Stockholm, the "land of the midnight sun," and other entrancing pilgrimages in Europe? Home talent will still have the call in the Ministers' Conference when these migratory birds come home to nest.

And The Women Also

Lately our Baptist women have been gathering in large and inspiring conventions—the foreign mission women at Tremont Temple, and the home mission women in the First Church, Malden. One thing the women have and that is leadership. In both societies the best brains seem to come to the top, and to have scope and opportunity in fixing their goals, and in planning successfully to reach them. They were doing so well, that it would have been money in their pockets had some supposedly superior masculine intellects let them alone. But, as has been said, "we have had millions of dollars' worth of experience." If experience is the best teacher, how wise the future Baptists will be! But the women were wise already. Now the men also will be.

The Foreign Mission Convention came first. Boston was a convenient place for it. All streams of travel flow that way. Hence there was a large company gathered, and with such speakers as Mrs. Henry W. Peabody, Dr. Joseph C. Robbins, Dr. D. Brewer Eddy, Dr. J. C. Massee, and various women missionaries, with Miss Dr. Ida Scudder of India, the whole day was supplied with inspirations.

At the convention of the home mission women at Malden, naturally the program was determined by the different racial activities of the society on the

Investments that Bring Comfort

There are definite reasons why the LIFE ANNUITIES of the AMERICAN BAPTIST HOME MISSION SOCIETY are so well received.

THEY ARE DEPENDABLE because secured by ample resources.
THEY ARE DESIRABLE because designated for the promotion of a great cause.

ANNUITIES—ONE OR TWO LIVES

On one life the rate of income varies from four to nine per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

On one or two lives the rate varies from four to eight and three-tenths per cent a year, payable semi-annually.

The rate always depends upon the age of the person when the gift is made. When the rate is once fixed, it never varies, but remains the same.

A survivorship agreement provides a permanent income for two lives. When you cease to enjoy its benefits the same income is continued throughout the lifetime of the relative or friend whose name follows yours in the agreement.

FORMS OF BEQUESTS

I give and bequeath to The American Baptist Home Mission Society, formed in New York in the year 1832, the sum of $..... for the general purposes of said society.

I give, devise, and bequeath to The American Baptist Home Mission Society all the lot and land with the buildings thereon standing. (Here describe the premises with exactness.) All the rest and residue of my estate, of whatever form or character, I give, devise, and bequeath to The American Baptist Home Mission Society.

home field. Here are found the points of contact between the two societies, and an explanation of the commingling of their representatives in the devotional services at both conventions. Mrs. George W. Coleman has long been a leading spirit in the home mission enterprise, and efficiently continues her interest and inspiration. Mrs. Everett C. Herrick of Fall River is a good second, and is fast qualifying for larger duty. Among other speakers were Dr. William A. Hill our missionary education director, and Dr. W. Quay Rosselle, on "The Present Status of Missions."

Youth to the Fore

Newton is feeling the pull of some of the strong churches. Three of the present senior class already are both called and chosen by three of our large churches. An early maturity and competency, along with youth, makes an attractive combination to churches with outstanding, but vacant pulpits. It is not too great a risk under present conditions for strong churches to welcome young leaders. Pastorates are not often prolonged, as formerly, and the results expected by a modern church are mostly achieved through the pull of a trained and enthusiastic leader, and an attractive ministerial personality.

It is curious how in the whirligig of time our church history repeats itself. The writer remembers when, away back in the earliest seventies, Calvary Baptist Church, New York, called Robert Stuart MacArthur from Rochester Seminary; Warburton Ave. Church, Yonkers, called Henry M. Sanders from Union Seminary; and the First Church, Elmira, called William T. Henry from Hamilton Seminary. Then, perhaps some doubted. MacArthur and Henry held their only churches over fifty years, and Sanders held everything in three pastorates.

Anyhow, a like confidence has returned to Zion. The First-Highland Church at Springfield calls Mr. Frank B. Fagerburg, the church at Columbia, Mo., that great Baptist educational center, calls Mr. Luther W. Smith. And the First Church at Watertown calls Mr. C. L. Seasholes. All three of these young ministers are in the senior class at Newton. Two of them—Smith and Seasholes—are sons of Newton graduates. Knowing their fathers, we have the more confidence in their sons. After we have given our sons the best training possible, let us give them our confidence also. All the chances are that they will justify it.

Re-Opening of Work at Elk Point, S. D.

By Earle D. Sims

Elk Point is a thriving town of 2,000 people, in the southeastern corner of South Dakota. Our church was organized there in 1872. We own a quarter of a block on the corner of the square and here we have one of the most beautiful buildings of the state and the largest of the town. An attractive parsonage is located by the church. The church has been one of the strong and popular churches of the state, but for the past two years the church has been without a pastor and the seventeen remaining members had "chronic discouragement" and decided nothing could be done on the field.

March 1, Rev. Earle D. Sims, "church invigorator" of the Home Mission Society and a member of the Englewood Church of Chicago arrived at Elk Point. He found the Baptist people discouraged. They did not welcome the idea of opening up the work again and refused to entertain Mr. Sims or furnish coal or help in the meetings. Mr. Sims purchased a batching outfit and fitted up one of the rooms of the church in which to live. Meeting all the expense and problems himself, he commenced evangelistic meetings. Large crowds attended every service; frequently the big auditorium, with 200 opera chairs and fifty extra chairs in the aisles, was packed to the limit. For one month Mr. Sims preached every night without a movement in the audience. He visited every home of the 395 homes of the town, and found 700 people who had never united with any church! Mr. Sims was ready to give it up, but Rev. S. P. Shaw, superintendent of missions of the convention insisted that Mr. Sims should not give up. He sent him help and the meetings continued every night on into the sixth week! Rev. P. C. Larsen, pastor of Del Rapids Church, spent two days visiting among the people. Mrs. S. P. Shaw came and spent four days in visiting and in song. Miss Eva Button, a graduate of the Training School of Chicago spent a week in visiting, and Rev. L. L. Mann spent three days in visitation.

The revival broke loose in the fifth and sixth weeks of the meetings and twenty-five to thirty people were converted. Ten of the finest people of the community united with the Baptist church. A big baptismal service was

Margaret's Fortune

Mrs. Just-Like-You was an everyday woman, a good housewife and an excellent mother. But she didn't know much about handling finances. She had a little money left her, and she wondered what to do with it. Friend Husband advised, of course, but being a modern woman, Mrs. Just-Like-You wanted to make her own investment. So she took her time and one day she found the very thing she had been looking for—a safe investment that helped others as well as herself and yet paid a high rate of interest.

Her husband laughed at "Margaret's fortune." That was in 1916. But in the business depression of 1920 all his perfectly "safe" investments crashed. Today "Margaret's fortune" is helping put their daughter through college.

Her money is perfectly safe because it is in the hands of an incorporated missionary society whose whole organization stands behind it. Mrs. Just-Like-You was 50 years old when she made her investment, so her interest amounts to 6 per cent.

LINFIELD COLLEGE

Is grateful for the best year in its history.

The faculty numbers twenty; students, 287.

Seniors, 31; Juniors, 42; Sophomores, 62; Freshmen, 101.

Linfield's orator won first place in the State Oratorical Contest in which nine institutions participated, including three state institutions.

The debating teams have been equally successful.

The athletic teams have done well. The basketball team again won the championship.

There are more than fifty young men and women who are preparing for the ministry at home and on foreign fields.

The income has been sufficient to meet the expenses. There are no debts. The condition of the General Education Board that $400,000 be pledged by April 30, 1923, has been fully met. The G. E. B. will add $200,000 as paid pro rata, the time limit being November 1, 1925.

Friends are steadily responding to the needs of this college which is making an earnest effort to live up to Christian principles.

held by Mr. Sims. A large number of the converts united with the other churches of the town and many more are deeply interested and will unite with this church at an early date.

The Ladies' Aid was revived, sixty-five scholars enrolled in the Sunday school and new classes were organized. Fifteen hundred dollars in cash and subscriptions was raised in the meetings for the future work of the church. An annual meeting was held and the church elected all its officers and also upon the recommendation of Rev. S. P. Shaw, a unanimous and hearty call was extended to Rev. Victor Larsen, of Sioux Falls College, South Dakota, to become pastor of the field. Mr. Larsen is a splendid young man twenty-seven years old, and his wife is a consecrated young lady of ability and they are ready for their life's work.

On Apr. 29, Mr. Larsen was a guest of the church and accepted the call. After administering the Lord's Supper Sunday morning Mr. Sims turned over the work to Mr. Larsen, and left a happy pastor and church ready for any task. Mr. Sims has now entered the work at Fairmount, N. D., where our church has been pastorless over a year and has become quite discouraged.

heavenly home. One of Illinois' most lovable and loved of women, one who had labored in many fields of activity, is with us no more, but her beautiful life is living and will live for all eternity in the lives of those she touched. Personally the writer wishes to pay tribute to Mrs. Barber's great help. When first entering the state work it was Mrs. Barber who explained, who advised, who placed such confidence in one so untried, that that very confidence made effort possible. She was a woman of rare leadership. Her public service began in her girlhood days as a school teacher and among the students of the early days were those who afterward became congressmen, university presidents and prominent judges and business men. After her marriage besides being the "queen in a home" always open to her friends and to those in need, she found time to supervise a department in the Sunday school, to head a woman's hospital in Chicago and to engage in club activities. Always interested in mission work, the joy of that service finally crowded out some of the other interests and for twenty years she was treasurer of the Woman's Home Mission Society. Her time was given unsparingly to the Baptist Missionary Training School and students all over the world will remember the rare afternoons spent socially in her beautiful home, and her great interest in each girl. While in the midst of service for the society she loved so well, delivering an address at the Northern Baptist Convention in Philadelphia, twelve years ago her first real sickness came. Since then she has never been able to do as she did before, but her love, her interest and her money have been just as freely given. One of her gifts of special interest to Illinois young people attending the University of Illinois is the pulpit furniture at the Baptist University Church. Mrs. Barber had a joyous radiating personality. She frequently said: "I enjoy my religion so much." Her pastor, Doctor Gilkey, paid her this beautiful tribute. "There was more comfort in her faith than in a dozen arguments; she herself, was the reminder of the nearness of God." Among the flowers she loved so well, surrounded by dear family and friends, with her pastor speaking words of comfort and the chimes in the belfry near by playing her favorite hymn "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," we laid to rest one so dear to all. Heaven is nearer and dearer since Mrs. Barber is there.

Rev. William A. Farren, Brown '75, Newton '79, died in the Sayles Memorial Hospital, Pawtucket, R. I., April 25. He held pastorates at North Billerica for nine years, New London, N. H., ten years, North Attleboro, ten years and Hebronville, eight years. He was a good man and minister, and many are gratefully recalling him.

The East Church at Lynn, that live church with the veteran pastor, Dr. A. E. Harriman, has recently celebrated its forty-ninth anniversary with an appropriate program. It is a thoroughly organized and efficient church and Bible school, and every department betrays the marks of a strong and teaching ministry.

Rev. John Love, of Asbury Park, N. J., who back in the eighties was pastor of the First Church, Chelsea, is here on a visit and on May 5 supplied the church at Reading, whose pastor, Rev. F. M. Holt is now at Swampscott recovering from a severe operation.

RHODE ISLAND

The Annual Business Meeting of the Roger Williams Church, Providence, was held April 30. Reports of officers and numerous committees indicated a year of fruitful service. All bills had been paid and a substantial balance remains in the treasury. A board of senior deacons and deaconesses was elected to assist in carrying out an eight year program.

NEW YORK

The First Church, Brockport, Rev. Henry W. Stevens, pastor, is in a prosperous condition. On a recent Sunday there were seven baptisms. A three-period church school has been maintained throughout the year with splendid results. The pastor is in his seventh year of service.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Rev. P. F. Davis has entered upon his new work at Hatboro. Mr. Davis comes from the Newtown Square Church. On his last Sunday there, four persons were baptized. During his eleven months of service with the Newton Square Church, there were six baptisms, a C. E. society was organized, finances are in such condition that all of the expenses are paid through the regular offerings, $500 was contributed to benevolences and $235 to the N. W. M.

The Mortgage on the Property of the Elliott Avenue Church, Springfield, was burned recently. This is another step toward a much needed new building for which a fund has already been started. The spiritual condition of the church is the best it has been in years. In the last few months, there have been fifty-two additions to the membership, forty by baptism. Rev. Charles R. Drussel is pastor.

On May 1 a Council was called to examine Pastor Loyd C. Meller of the Glasford Church. A number of the churches of the Peoria Association were represented. Rev. D. O. Hopkins preached the ordination sermon. Rev. B. F. Butler, Bradford, was clerk of the council.

OHIO

Rev. F. H. Divine recently conducted a campaign at the First Church, Toledo, to raise $250,000 for erecting a new church building. It will be Gothic in design and will be built to meet the needs of an enlarging program along devotional, educational, social and recreational lines. Special care has been taken relative to Sunday school needs. Modern departmental equipment has been planned. A special feature will be the administration floor which will contain offices, music room, board room, etc. The

ON APRIL 30, THE FIRST CHURCH, AKRON, closed a triumphant year. One hundred and four new members were received during the year, although no special meetings were held. Over $2,000 more was contributed to the N. W. M. than the past year. On April 22 a goal of $3,000 was set for redecorating and repairing the church edifice. Pledges to the amount of $4,100 were secured. These will be paid by August when the church will be closed for the month and the work completed. Rev. Charles J. McLean is pastor.

MICHIGAN

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Bethel Church, Kalamazoo, was held May 3. The clerk reported an increase of thirty new members, twenty-five by baptism. The Sunday school has grown in attendance and interest, the women's union contributed $441 to the work of the church and the combined receipts from all organizations were $4,000. Last fall the mortgage on the church property was burned and extensive improvements have been made on the building. The pastor, Rev. H. Sidney Bullock, is in his fifth year of service.

ON MAY 6, REV. GEORGE VERCOE, pastor of the North Church, Flint, baptized four young people, after which the Lord's Supper was observed. Thirteen new members were received. Pastor Vercoe is doing splendid work.

Stewart, preached. There were twenty-one baptisms during April, and several others are awaiting the ordinance.

Rev. S. W. Phelps is completing the sixth year of his service with the Grace Church, Milwaukee. They have been years of continuous growth. The hand of fellowship was recently given to eighteen persons. The annual meeting was held May 4. Reports given indicated an encouraging condition.

OKLAHOMA

Rev. H. A. Smoot, Parsons, Kans., and Rev. E. A. Petroff, of Blue Mountain, Miss., held a successful three weeks' meeting with the Central Church, Muskogee, Rev. B. A. Pugh, pastor. As a result of these meetings the church is stronger and better equipped for service both in numbers and in faith. On May 6, the pastor completed six years with the church. During that time 762 persons were added to the membership, a three story Sunday-school plant was built and equipped, a mission established in a destitute section of the city was organized into the Immanuel Church with a pastor and full time services and offerings to denominational enterprises and the pastor's salary was doubled. The church now has a membership of 1,000.

Central Association

The first annual session of the Central Association was held with the church at Glenrock, of which Rev. T. S. Dulin is pastor, April 11-12. The new organization is made up of seven churches which formerly belonged to the Big Horn Basin and the Southeastern Associations to which has been added the Emmanuel Church, Casper.

On April 11 Rev. C. M. Thompson, Jr., of the First Church, Casper, delivered an address based on "On the March." The principal speakers on the following day were Rev. A. C. Hodgson who preached the annual sermon; Rev. J. F. Blodgett, executive secretary of the state convention, who reviewed Baptist progress in the state from its beginning twenty-two years ago to the present time; and Doctor and Mrs. C. R. Manley of Ongole, South India, who gave interesting accounts of social and religious conditions in India.

The following officers were elected: Rev. A. C. Hodgson, moderator; Rev. C. A. Bentley, Parkerton, vice-moderator; Mrs. C. M. Summers, Casper, clerk; and C. A. Vogel, Glenrock, treasurer. Special committees were appointed on form of organization, and survey of field with a view to denominational expansion in adjacent territory.

The association will meet next year with the First Church, Casper.

On the editorial page of a recent issue we find the following comment: "William J. Bryan thinks, and did not hesitate to say, that a man who believes the evolution theory to be correct will teach anything for a salary. Rather a remarkable statement to come from a man who was at one time supposed to have good sense enough to be a fit president of the United States, and somewhat uncharitable for one professing to be a good Christian."

Your School

IF you want to be in the kind of a school,
Like the kind of a school you like,
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
And go on a long, long hike;
You will only find what you left behind,
For there's nothing really new—
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your school,
It isn't the school—it's you!—

Alliance at Stockholm on the afternoon of July 21, he will have an unusual gavel in his hand. It has just been received after coming all the way from the Philippine Islands, where it was made by the students in the Jaro Industrial School, an institution under the direction of the Foreign Mission Society. Recently the name of the school was changed to Central Philippine College. In forwarding the gavel, missionary H. F. Stuart wrote that it was a gift to the president of the alliance with the compliments of the college. The letter closed by stating, "Please express the heartiest wishes of this baby college to the Baptists of the world. Like all youngsters we can shout loudly for the great denomination whose children we are."

one, joined a church of another denomination and he had his youngest child sprinkled instead of baptized. He would have gone along with his family, only he wanted to remain in a Baptist church for future personal advantage. I fear he does not support the church where his name is on the roll. The student body of that institution knows about this and the effect upon it is to weaken and destroy our distinctive Baptist faith and spirit. He is a Baptist from convenience and not a Baptist from conviction. Is it any surprise that Baptist young people leave such schools weaker Baptists than when they entered them? The teaching, the lack of teaching, the spirit, practice and policy of these schools, whether intended or not, break down our distinctive Baptist faith, and seek to destroy our particular course of Christian conduct and service. As the "radical" schools need evangelization certainly these schools need education.

4. Further, I wish to support my contention by saying that these Bible schools are disloyal, and create disloyalty, to the denominations from which they draw their students and much of their financial support. This is apparent from many sides. Secretly and sometimes openly they carry on a process of undermining, always destructive of distinctive denominational life with the purpose of weakening confidence in one direction and creating and strengthening confidence in another direction, invariably for their own advantage. This is seen in their students while "in action." I have had to do with eight of these students in the last ten years and we had to discontinue the services of every one of them. They all, except one, were members of Baptist churches and all professed loyalty at the time we engaged them. Some of them reached their limit in a few weeks' or months' time. They all lacked efficiency but were full of an unbalanced spiritual pride. They were adepts in the use of pious words and phrases. They carried a manner which suggested, "Stand by thyself for I am holier than thou." When they got themselves established in their position they began to criticize everything in sight. They boasted of being the only ones who had the full gospel, when in fact they knew very little about any kind of gospel. In some instances these institutions send out mite-boxes to their students and urge them to place these boxes with the members of the young people's societies, Sunday-school classes and women's clubs, if possible, and to turn the proceeds over to the institution for some kind of missionary or charitable work that they are carrying on. I had to do with a young man who did this very thing. It was discovered that he was placing mite-boxes in the homes of the people where he had called. He was asked to gather those boxes and we opened them to find that they contained from one dollar and a half to seven dollars and a half. That young man was dismissed forthwith. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are diverted from our missionary and educational funds in this way. Another one of these students was dismissed because of her disloyalty to the church and every organization within it. The students from these institutions, with few exceptions, both at home and on the foreign field, are found to be disloyal, inefficient and full of unbalanced, spiritual vainglory. The strongest element that opposed our missionary and educational promotional work came from the students and supporters of these schools. I say here is a real menace to our churches and our missionary work.

ADDRESS PRESIDENT GEORGE E. HORR

Now when I say all of this concerning these schools, their teachers and their students, I wish also to say that I personally know a few of these students who are excellent Christian workers and loyal to our Baptist faith and practice. Some of these men are in our pulpits, are strong preachers and loyal to all of that for which we generally and distinctively stand. But they are what they are not because of those schools but in spite of them. They have either pursued an individual, independent course of study, or entered some of our Baptist institutions where they were deepened, broadened and corrected in their views of truth and they have come forth able ministers of Jesus Christ.

Why this article? It is for several reasons. The primary purpose of it is to offer a solemn caution to our churches concerning sending their young people to such schools, and turning to such schools for their pastors and workers. It is also intended as a warning to our home and foreign missionary societies not to send these students to our mission fields until they first have taken a thorough training in some of our Baptist institutions. If the teaching of some of the "radical" schools unevangelize our churches and mission fields these break up, divide, disorganize and destroy our churches.

The secondary purpose of this article is to suggest something to the schools themselves. If they intend to continue in their attempts to train young people for work in our denomination they must raise the standards for admission, extend their courses and provide for distinctive teaching upon Baptist doctrines, polity, practice and missionary history. Otherwise our churches cannot accept even our own good people for Christian service either at home or abroad.

Furthermore, the purpose of this article is again to call attention to the fact that we are in need of a standardized Baptist Bible training school in our convention, not to supplant or to take the place of the theological seminary, not in any sense to provide a short-cut to the pulpit, but to prepare our young people for the seminary in cases where it is necessary. We need this Bible school to train young men and women for Christian center work, for pastors' assistants, Sunday-school and young people's workers and efficient missionaries, both on our home and foreign fields. True Baptists take to the Bible as hungry sheep to the clover and therefore let us give them a Baptist Bible training school, for we must have Baptist training for our Baptist workers, pastors and missionaries.

Our Book Shelf

Five-Minute Sermons in Stories, by Henry T. Sell, New York: Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.25.

One of the best books along this line that has passed through the reviewer's hands. The subject-matter of the stories is such as to have an instant appeal to the minds of young people—they are attention-winners and attention holders. Pastors, Sunday-school and junior society workers will find abundant use for this book.

Christianity and Liberalism, by J. Gresham Machin, D. D. Assistant Professor of New Testament Literature in Princeton Theological Seminary. Macmillan, New York:

Here is a statement of the faith. Those who have had the privilege of Dr. Machin's teaching in Princeton or those who lately heard him in the conference of Feb. 1923 at Moody Institute, Chicago, know that this is a man who feels deeply and speaks boldly. He does not believe we ought to mince matters in questions of doctrine and of Christian method. The issue between the old and the new theology is plain and must be met.

Our greatest enemy, he affirms, is inside the so-called church, and "The greatest menace of the Christian church today comes not from the enemies outside but from the enemies within it; it comes from the presence within the church of a type of faith and practice that is antichristian to the core."

He deals with the two attitudes, the conservative and the liberal, with reference to doctrine. God and man, the Bible, Christ, salvation and the church—these make up his six and outspoken chapters. He represents the two views as growing out of different roots and utterly antagonistic, one orthodoxy and scriptural, the other naturalistic and humanitarian. "In the intellectual battle of the present day, there can be no peace without victory: one side or the other must win." This certainly carries the battle to the gates and right lustily.

The Cook Academy -- A School That Cares

MONTOUR FALLS, N. Y.

Cook Academy is having one of the best years in its history. There are seventy-five boarding boys and sixty-nine day students. In addition to the regular academic work leading to college entrance, two teachers devote their time to our Commercial School and two handle the Voice, Piano, Violin and Orchestra and Glee Clubs. The entire faculty is college trained and able in handling boys. Special emphasis is put on the health and physical condition of the boys. The comforts in the rooms and the dining room service and the athletics give the boys strong, vigorous bodies. The Bible work is handled by the pastor of the local church, Rev. Walter C. Mason, graduate of Cook in 1895. The Y. M. C. A. is under student management and is a strong force in the school. Ten young men are preparing for the ministry, three of whom are at this time looking to the foreign field. Cook has always had high ideals, and the school is holding to the same high level today. The school belongs to the denomination and is striving to be a credit and a help in training leaders in all walks in life. Catalogs will be mailed on request. # THE HIGHEST RECORD IN 109 YEARS

Preliminary statistical reports at the headquarters of the Foreign Mission Society show that on the ten mission fields last year 17,141 converts were baptized on their confession of faith in Jesus Christ.

This is the highest total in the 109 years of organized missionary effort on the part of Northern Baptists

It compares with a total of 12,174 for the year 1921, which was the highest total for the preceding 16 years. The previous high record was in 1905, when 15,626 baptisms were reported.

Reports from the European fields indicate 10,118 baptisms, many of which were undoubtedly the results of preaching tours of the fraternal messengers sent to Europe by the Board of Managers last summer. This makes a total of 27,259 on both European and non-Christian fields.

This remarkable evangelistic ingathering is unmistakable evidence of the blessing of God upon our foreign mission enterprise.

What About the Unhappy Ones?

There is and has been for months, as the news pages of THE BAPTIST show, unusual activity along evangelistic lines. We cannot refrain from calling attention to a phrase common to a large percentage of the news items received. "Pastor —— baptized —— happy converts as the result of the meetings," etc. If all converts are not happy we doubt their fitness as candidates for church membership. Cranky church members may be "unhappy" converts full grown. Pastors, deacons, teachers and all others charged with responsibility for the welfare of new converts should see that all converts —happy and unhappy—are early introduced to THE BAPTIST and Missions. Useful church members are almost sure to be happy church members.

Killam's Kollum

A 10 Per Cent List

A list of new subscribers equal to 10 per cent of the membership of the Market Street Church, Harrisburg, Pa., was received April 27. This is a splendid, though not unusual, list. No paid agent or canvasser was responsible for this splendid result. The church realizes that THE BAPTIST belongs to the Baptists, and they want what belongs to them.

And What Do You Think of That?

Mr. William D. MacLaurin, of Elizabeth, N. J., writes: "I am pleased to enclose my check covering my subscription to THE BAPTIST. I thoroughly enjoy it and look forward to each week when it is delivered. It should be in every Baptist home in the country, particularly Northern Baptists. I was surprised to learn that of approximately 125 families in our church, not more than ten receive THE BAPTIST. I am personally going to make an effort to procure for THE BAPTIST a good number of subscriptions. Baptists who do not read periodicals like our paper have no idea of the great work the denomination is doing throughout the world. If I had to give up either THE BAPTIST or the 'New York Times,' which I consistently read, I would give up the 'Times.'" What do you think of that? Reader, do not forget that our circulation has been built up entirely by voluntary, unpaid workers like the writer. We look for a real list of subscribers in Elizabeth.

"Simon-Pure Business"

Many of our readers have heard of the name J. C. Barline. Mr. Barline is the president and manager of a business concern in Spokane and has taken an active part in the general work of the denomination. He writes: "You may wonder why an ordinary layman should be interested in increasing the circulation of the two splendid periodicals, THE BAPTIST and Missions. You have given the explanation in the third paragraph of your letter. It is a Simon-pure business proposition on my part. I can see no difference between the Lord's business and the wholesale box business in which I am engaged. We must use good business methods in connection with each, and I agree with you that 'the reading of our denominational paper will give intelligence to the individual in our denominational affairs'—quoting from your words." A business man familiar with good business methods does not need to be told that it is mighty poor business to leave the folks who are to do the work, if it is done, in ignorance of that work.

The calendar of the First Church, Melrose, Mass., gives the summer supplies as Rev. A. E. Scoville, Rev. Clarence Hill Frank, Rev. John Freeman Mills and Rev. C. A. Brooks. Rev. P. H. McDowell is the regular pastor.

Rev. M. R. Regan, who has done successful work as pastor of the church at Washington, Iowa, has resigned, his resignation to take effect July 1. He will enter the seminary at Louisville in the fall.

By special invitation from Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, the American Bible Society held its one hundred seventh annual meeting at her home at Sagamore Hill, Oyster Bay, Long Island, on May 10. The society received a letter from President Harding expressing his interest in the work it is accomplishing.

The state of Iowa, which is said to stand at the head in the ratio of the number of automobiles to the population, pays for the distinction, if such it be, with the report of 187 death as a result of automobile accidents last year.

While on a tour around the world, Mr. Frank C. Nickels, formerly president of the Home Mission Society and for many years president of the Minneapolis Baptist Union, was stricken at Hong Kong, and after being taken to the Peking Union Medical College for treatment, finally passed away April 29. His loss is especially felt by the Calvary Church, Minneapolis, where for years he was an active worker.

Mr. D. Cornilescu, who has done remarkable work in translating the Bible into Roumanian, greatly desires a set of Spurgeon's works, with the idea of also translating them. Such a gift would be greatly appreciated and would aid in spreading Christian teachings in Roumania. The books may be sent directly to him at Str. Bursei No. 1, Bucharest, Roumania, or to V. Prodan, International Baptist Seminary, 64 S. Munn Avenue, East Orange, N. J., who will forward them to him.

The forty-third annual commencement exercises of the Missionary Training School, Chicago, will be held June 9-12 inclusive. On Sunday morning, June 10, the baccalaureate service will be held in the First Church. Dr. A. S. Carman, of the Northern Theological Seminary, will be the speaker. June 11 will be class day. In the evening at eight o'clock Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo will give the annual missionary address, and Mrs. Katherine S. Westfall will give the commissions to the sixteen graduates who have been appointed by the Home Mission Society. The speaker on June 12 will be Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery. The commencement exercises except the baccalaureate service, will be held in the training school building. A cordial invitation has been extended to all Baptists to attend.

The hand of fellowship was given to fifteen new members at Cambridge, Mass., First Church, the first Sunday in May. The church reports $9,175 raised in the past year toward the New World Movement.

Rev. Richard E. Day, pastor of the First Church, Riverside, will address the Monrovia Chautaqua on "How to See California." Mr. Day is in demand as a speaker at commencements, chambers of commerce, etc.

The seventeenth session of the summer school of missions (interdenominational) will convene in the Olivet Congregational Church, Merriam Park, St. Paul, June 3-8. The cooperating denominations are: Congregational, Christian, Episcopal, Friend, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian and Baptist. Registration fee $1, or daily admission, 25 cents. A cafeteria luncheon will be served at the church daily. Reasonable accommodations for out-of-town women can be secured at the St. Paul Y. W. C. A. There will be an exceptionally interesting program.

After three months of work there, Rev. J. J. Ross has resigned from the pulpit of the old historic church, of Boston, Ruggles street. The reasons given for the resignation are the location of the buildings, which are in the black belt, the condition of the buildings themselves, and the irksome relations that exist between the church and the Boston Baptist Social Union, which corporation has the administration of the money left to the church by Daniel Sharpe Ford. Doctor Ross brought before the church his statement and resignation on Sunday evening, May 13. The church accepted unanimously the report as a fair statement of the whole situation and then absolutely refused to accept the resignation until thorough investigations are made to see if the location, condition of the buildings and the relation of the church to the Social Union could not be changed. Doctor Ross had absolutely no criticisms to make of the Boston Baptist Social Union, but had every commendation to make of the church.

Tornado Sweeps Campus

A tornado swept over the campus of the Grand Island College between four and five o'clock on Friday afternoon, May 11. A number of students and several members of the faculty were in the administration building and the dormitories, and they witnessed such a scene as is seldom given to one. Window lights were blown from many of the rooms, letting in the wind and rain. A number of the chimneys from the buildings were blown down and the roofs damaged to a greater or lesser degree. The greatest damage, however, was to the gymnasium which was completely demolished. Parts of the roof and cement blocks are strewn about the campus. The power plant is almost completely destroyed, the roof and parts of the wall having been blown down. Repairs will be made at once on the dormitories and administration building, and the cyclone insurance on each of these will cover the expenses. The gymnasium, however, is a complete wreck and will not be rebuilt. There is a $2,000 cyclone insurance on this building. It is hoped that the friends of the institution will rally to the aid of the college and put up another gymnasium, equipped with a swimming pool and shower baths. There is no cyclone insurance on the heating plant, and money will have to be raised to rebuild this structure.

There is a feeling of gratitude on the part of all that no one was killed. The only person injured was Benjamin Hites, one of the students who was in the power house. He was able to protect himself from serious injury, but received a few cuts from flying bricks.

Constants and Variables

THE words of our title are master-words in mathematical and physical science. A constant is that which is unchanging, a quantity of fixed value in a calculation. A variable, of course, is that which has changeable values, as in volume, temperature or pressure. Even among constants there are those which are absolute, fixed forever in value like the cardinal numbers one, two and three; and those which are arbitrary, to which any desired value may be temporarily attached. There are what are called "constants of nature," such as the velocity of light, the atomic weights in chemistry, and the second (based on the average rotation-time of the earth); these are great units which characterize natural phenomena and enter into all the mathematical laws of science.

It is good to know that in the midst of a changing world there are, among the multitude of variables, some constants. Fashions of garb may change from age to age and even from year to year; the young person of today laughs at the oddity of grandma's wedding garment, and in less than two generations some of our present costumes will provoke the amazed mirth of our descendants—indeed they must put a severe strain upon the risibilities of the angels who look down upon us from high heaven today. Business methods, the fashion in amusements, art, music and literature, the curricula and pedagogy of the schools, the practice of medicine and surgery, and the technique of church management all change with startling rapidity. These are variables. But there are constants of home love, of parental tenderness, of deep-seated patriotism, of spontaneous applause for a fine deed, of flaming indignation at treachery, cruelty or fundamental baseness; of instant and generous pity for misfortune, of conscience and latent sensitiveness to God's voice—these are unchanging throughout all years and all human vicissitudes. The parent's heartache is a timeless thing, the same today as three thousand years ago.

"There is no far or near,
There is neither there nor here,
There is neither soon nor late,
In that Chamber over the Gate,
Nor any long ago
To that cry of human woe,
O Absalom, my son!"

Christian people today amid a multitude of bewildering, fascinating or repellent changes in current religious thought, should not lose their footing and be swept helplessly down-stream clinging to the floating wreckage of their faith. To begin with, they should build above the flood-line; have home and business and faith on the safe uplands among the constants and not on the shifting sands and silt of the bottom-lands among the variables. And if they do happen to be caught in the wake of some cloudburst at Hot Springs or Dayton or Johnstown let them not hastily conclude that the American continent has been swept away bodily in the freshet. Let not the one infatuated with some promulger of supposed new truth contradictory to that of the main body of Christians exclaim, like the fond mother of the recruit in the militia parade, "They're all out of step but my Jim." But on the other hand, let not the stalwart defender of the faith hastily put the brand of heresy on any brother who loves, worships and obeys our Lord Jesus Christ, merely because he does not recognize in that brother's speech quite the phraseology to which he is accustomed. That phraseology may belong to the theologians of the sixteenth century rather than to the essence of the gospel. Phraseology is among the variables. It has often been used to disguise some radical departure from the faith and to lull, through familiar sound, the suspicions of the ultra-conservative brother who sniffs in alarm at the phraseology of one holding sturdily to the great constants of the faith but endeavoring to express them in vital terminology of today.

The great constants of the faith as taught in the New Testament, held through two millenniums by true followers of Christ, set free from many accretions and corruptions at the Reformation, and set forth in their most consistent form by Baptists in America for three centuries, have brought our denomination up from a handful of outcasts to a foremost place among the great religious bodies of this continent. Their influence upon America and the world has been incalculable, yet with no dependence upon governmental aid from without or authoritative control from within its own organization.

IT WOULD be a miracle if there were no variable elements within this vast, freely-moving, autonomous body. As a matter of fact there have been a multitude of variables; Calvinistic, Arminian, Six-Principle Baptists; General and Separate Baptists; Particular Baptists and those not at all particular; Freewill and self-willed Baptists; Seventh Day and seven-day Baptists (may their tribe increase!). In the eighteenth century a Baptist association appointed two apostles; others had nine Christian ordinances. But these Baptists doubtless all held to the great baptistic and New Testament constants, and—largely through the integrating force of our missionary and educative tasks—the vagaries and freak types were eliminated, and in the course of the past century our denomination became practically unified. Today, barring prejudices, personalities and issues nonpertinent and impertinent, the vast majority of our denomination hold to the historical constants of the Baptist faith.

It would be an unspeakable calamity, alike to Christianity and to civilization, if the great Baptist denomination were to disintegrate or to lose its identity, its mission and its message either by abandoning its constants or through unduly magnifying its variables.

The Situation in China

THE attack on the Peking express train in China and the taking captive of a considerable number of persons, including fifteen foreigners who are being held for ransom, calls attention in a dramatic way to the fact that China is suffering from the worst political conditions known in that country for over twenty years. In 1900 occurred the Boxer uprising when in some parts of China foreigners were mercilessly hunted down and killed. This outbreak was due to a widespread anti-foreign propaganda encouraged if not instigated by the government. Since 1900 both the national government and the provincial governments have had such a wholesome fear of intervention by outside powers that until within two or three years foreigners have been almost exempt from attack by robber bands. The government has on the whole been strong enough to protect citizens of foreign countries while professing inability to protect its own people. There is confessedly no anti-foreign feeling in China today and yet foreigners are suffering with Chinese from these uncontrolled brigands.

During the latter part of 1922 nine foreigners, mostly missionaries, were held as hostages by a disbanded though organized army which was allowed to ravage openly a whole province for a number of months; and now foreigners are being murdered and others held for ransom in a district almost equally distant from the three strongest military generals in China, Chianken of Paulingfu, Wu Peifu of Laoyong, and Shih of Nanking.

It is not unfair to say that this hold up of the Peking express calls for explanation. Is it true that the government has so lost control of the situation that it could not prevent this incident; or have both the people and the government of China lost their fear of foreign intervention? Or are there political or military parties in China which hope to profit by forcing foreign intervention? It is not improbable that an affirmative reply can be given in part to all three of these questions. The central government is undoubtedly weaker than it has been for a generation. The fear of foreign intervention has been appealed to so often by the government in its efforts to scare the people into keeping the peace, that it has lost its effect. The powers have let slip too many good and justifiable opportunities for intervention for this fear to longer be very effective. It does not seem improbable that some of the military leaders are trying to serve their own plans by thus forcing a threat of intervention.

With the information thus far furnished by the cable news, it is too early to attempt an explanation or interpretation of the present turn in affairs. A test of military power by the armed forces in this very district has been confidently expected for some months. This attack of brigands may serve to precipitate the conflict. There is a quite general agreement among foreigners in China that the present dominance of military forces will not end until the foreign powers find some practical way of lending strength to the forces in China which make for law and order, and that such help from the outside is not only quite justified but that it will in the end be greatly appreciated by the masses of the people. There has been too much sentimentality and timidity on the part of America and other countries about intervention even when such intervention is justified and will be appreciated.

Reality

CHRISTIANITY is either a reality or it is a mockery and a farce. We will go even farther and say that Christianity is a supreme reality or it is the most gigantic fraud and tragedy of all the ages. At once, the heart and mind, the soul and body, the lips and the life of every reader will affirm that Christianity is no fraud or mockery, but is the most real experience of the soul and life as he or she walks with God through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

We want to ask our readers to pause just there for a moment and consider this grave question: "Are we living Christianity so that its reality is apparent to all who witness our living?" Now, there is the rub!

Verbal assertions are one thing, but Christian living is often far away from many people who stoutly affirm that they are Christians. Some time ago we attended a business men's club and there heard a prominent church member make a speech. In the course of his remarks, he said, "Well, Christianity is a good thing to die by." A man who was dealing in business affairs with the speaker and could not trust his word, winked at his neighbor and said in a whisper, "That explains it, his Christianity is for dying by and not for living by." The incident carried its own lesson and we pass it on.

Christianity is real. We know it. Wherever it is found it carries the message of its reality in the things that are done and in the testimony of the whole life. How much this world does need the power of the real Christianity which produces an atmosphere of love and service wherever it exists! We all need to make our Christianity testify more potently so that its reality is impressed upon the world that looks on.

Shall the Church Federation Champion One Rest Day in Seven?

HOWARD AGNEW JOHNSTON, president of the Chicago Church Federation, speaks a timely word in the behalf of one rest day in seven. He says:

"Much recent discussion about blue laws and reports about efforts to stop all sports on the part of church people has clouded the real issue. The great values involved in maintaining one rest day in seven are of such vital consequence to the best civilization and to a wholesome social order that the subject demands careful consideration. It is true that activity is the sign of life; but it is also true that the Creator has written a law of necessary rest throughout all nature, especially manifest in the lives of the highest creatures, and most marked of all in the case of man.

"The fourth commandment is not intended to enjoin worship. That subject is presented in the first two commandments of the decalogue. The fourth deals with the necessity of rest on the part of man and beast. It is no arbitrary law, but rests in the nature of things. In the year 1822 the British government, under the leadership of Sir Robert Peel, instituted a series of tests, running through two years, to discover whether men who rested one day in seven should prove superior to those who did not observe the rest day. After two years those who worked six days only out of seven had accomplished more of a total product, were far better in physical health and maintained a higher moral and intellectual tone. The test involved 2,000 men. Similar tests were made with horses, and they proved that those who worked only six days and rested the seventh accomplished a larger total of work done and maintained far better conditions of health.

"In the days of western migration it is well known that those who went greedily ahead, refusing to rest one day in seven, were overtaken in time by those who observed the day of rest. The people who disregarded the necessary law found their cattle dying in their tracks, their babies without milk, their horses exhausted; while those who rested one day in seven not only arrived far in advance of the others, but in far better condition of man and beast. It is known that car wheels must rest at intervals, or their crystallization leads to disintegration. It is a universal law.

"Yet thousands talk of liberty being contravened when it is suggested that a rest day should be maintained for the general good. The worst slavery the world has ever seen is the slavery of blind selfishness that refuses to see that no man's personal liberty goes beyond the point where it impinges upon the general good. The most glorious emancipation of all civil liberties is that which is brought to us by the institution of a rest day in seven. Especially is this true in our time with its intensity of life, its increase of victims of nervous ills, its feverish haste to push ahead great programs.

"This day is for rest which brings re-creation, reinvigoration, and not just for the physical man, but for the whole man, especially the intellectual and spiritual man in his nobler capacities and higher needs. There is a thralldom to the things of the flesh which ignores the divine possibilities of our immortal spirits. Experience has proved that the best rest comes with a change of routine. The man whose seventh day program is just a continuance of that for six days cannot possibly realize the greatest benefits which the seventh day brings to one who avails himself of its real values.

"This suggests the reasonable way to use the day. If the six days do not allow an opportunity to get out into God's fresh air, part of the seventh day should be spent in recreation involving the out-of-doors. Various kinds of wholesome play may find place in such a program. Manifestly also if the six days are so crowded that no time is available for intellectual improvement, a part of the seventh day should be given to wholesome reading, to music or art. Above all, insomuch as moral and spiritual values must be placed highest in the scale of needs, part of the day should be set apart for moral and spiritual reinvigoration. Jesus, as his custom was, attended the synagogue. He performed deeds of kindness and acts of mercy on that day. He journeyed and accepted invitations to dinner.

"Where then should the restriction be drawn? Clearly at the line where unnecessary acts for selfish gain are performed. The vicious feature of modern neglect of the rest day is the deliberate purpose to commercialize it. Moreover it is pitifully absurd for people to call certain great instances of commercializing the day 'sports' when every one knows that if no money were charged, the enterprise would cease instantly. The Actors' Guild of New York City has been pleading for a rest day in seven. Their task is a most exacting and exhausting one; but the demand is insistent that they shall persist though it means suicide. Let it be noted carefully that the people who are ever demanding 'liberal ideas' about Sunday are the people who are making money by the present day prevailing programs.

"Some things are necessary. Means of transportation, delivery of milk, shipping of live-stock, and a few fields of service. But all who must labor a part of the day, should have their hours adjusted so that they would have some part of the seventh day, or a part of some other day in the seven, so that the demands of the best social order shall not be vitiated. Present customs are certainly threatening the truest liberties of the people at large. Shall we be sane enough, discriminating enough and brave enough to preserve this priceless boon before it is too late?"

The Gradualness of Christian Conquest

"I will not drive them out from before thee in one year, lest the land become desolate, and the beasts of the field multiply against thee. By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land."—Exodus 23:29, 30.

By S. A. Devan

PUT yourself back in imagination to that fateful day when the little band of escaped slaves, barely rescued from Egyptian tyranny, decimated by the hardships of decades of desert wanderings, demoralized and all but despairing, reached the borders of the Promised Land. Canaan lay before them, and it was veritably a land flowing with milk and honey. Untold riches lay concealed in the mountain sides and valleys of that land. Its coasts and its rivers and its caravan routes made it the highway of the ancient world, and in its commercial possibilities the prophetic eye could see the country filled with the untold wealth of the gorgeous orient. There were cities for habitation and there were broad fields for farmsteads. All that was promised in the Promised Land, present and potential, was actually there. No one could doubt it.

They Must Fight

But there was that which these hardened sons of the desert had not counted upon when they left Egypt, which they had too easily forgotten in their dreams of future happiness, and which now filled them with consternation and sickening dread of heart. Canaan was there; that was true: but the Canaanites were also there. The Promised Land lay before them; but they had to fight to get it. And the Canaanites and other peoples in possession of the land had every advantage. They far outnumbered the little people that were emerging from the wilderness. They were superior in civilization. They had vastly greater resources in wealth and armament. They dwelt in heavily fortified and apparently inexpugnable cities. They had chariots of iron. They were cruel and ruthless enemies who would fight desperately for the land they held. Gradually the truth dawned upon leaders and people alike. Jehovah had promised his people a land to dwell in, but they would have to conquer it for themselves.

If such were indeed the feelings that moved the hearts of the Israelites as they stood on the borders of Canaan, their fears would have been heightened and their courage would have flagged more completely, had they been able to look forward into the future. It is sometimes a mercy that we are not able to pierce with our mortal sight the veil which hides the future years. Our very ignorance sometimes permits us to begin tasks when a fuller knowledge of what the future holds in store would leave us paralyzed and useless. Today by a foreshortening of history we speak of the conquest of Canaan as if it were a specific act, a definite event of history, an episode begun, carried out and finished in a clear-cut manner. But a more careful study of Old Testament history tells us a different story. A hundred years from that fateful day when the desert wanderers, with hearts all palpitating, stood without the borders of the Promised Land, what was the situation? A century is a long time, and the last veteran of the original band of invaders is dead—is not the land conquered yet? No. Only a little in the Southland, a portion of the highlands east of Jordan, here and there a town or a valley of Judah or Ephraim.

A Gradual Conquest

A second century passes. How stands it now? Surely the Promised Land has fallen at last into the hands of the people to whom it is promised by the God of history. But no. There has been progress. The penetration of the country is more complete. More walled towns have fallen in subjugation to the invaders. But how far from absolute is the conquest! The most valuable fertile land of all Palestine, the slopes from the mountains of Judea to the sea—that is still in the hands of those strange people the Philistines—and it is to remain in their hands for centuries to come. Stronghold after stronghold remains in possession of the heathen. Strangest of all, to our way of thinking, Jerusalem itself, the Holy City of the future, Jerusalem is still held by the Jebusites, and it will not be till some time in the next hundred years that mighty David will storm the citadel of Mount Zion and capture the City of David for himself and his posterity.

OUR one need of God is a moral need in the strictest holiest sense. The bent of our nature can never meet it. It involves a new nature, a new world, a new creation. It is the moral need not to be transfigured, but to be saved. And the inner authority of the Redeemer is the final authority in Christianity—authority of Christ as Redeemer, as our new Creator; the authority of Christ's person as wholly gathered up and completely expressed in the cross, its work and its gospel.

—Peter T. Forsythe.

Canaan Won by Inches

The truth of history is, that instead of there being a sweeping conquest of Canaan, done once and for all, the reverse was the case. Canaan was won by the Hebrews only after a prolonged struggle, lasting for centuries. It was won inch by inch, foot by foot, yard by yard. Even that slow progress was not continuous, for sometimes the Israelites were pushed back and ejected from territory they had won. Nor was it only by warfare that the land was occupied; much of it was taken by what we would call today "peaceful penetration." It was a long, slow, painful, uncertain and gradual process, this taking possession of the Promised Land. It was "by little and little."

Looking back on that process in after-history, the chosen people were able to see that this wearisome struggle had its place in the plan of God. If the little band who had escaped from the slavery of Egypt and the terrors of the wilderness, expected God to work a miracle for them when they got to Canaan, and to hand over the land to them all at once and without their effort, they were expecting something that God would not do. Later generations saw what had happened in the clearer light of a divine philosophy. It was well that the occupation should be gradual, for the handful of immigrants was not sufficient to fill the walled cities of Canaan. "I will not drive them out from before thee in one year, lest the land become desolate, and the beasts of the field multiply against thee. By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land."

Destiny Is Slow-Footed

Now is not the divine explanation of the gradual occupation, as expressed in our text, in harmony with all that we know of nature, and all that we know of history? God's promised gifts are never put into idle and effortless hands; they are the reward of effort. And the results of effort, all the great changes of nature, and of history, —are these not always gradual and slow? Destiny is slow-footed. Nature takes endless time to accomplish her results. The only swift changes which history records are those which have long since been slowly preparing out of sight.

Now I beg you to transfer your attention from the task of conquest which confronted the refugees from Egypt, to the great task of conquest which confronts the followers of Christ today. The former is the symbol of the latter. Many of our pious old hymns speak of the passage of the Jordan and the conquest of Canaan as if they were types of the Christian's passing from the river of death and entering the Promised Land of heaven beyond. But that is no true interpretation of the symbolism of scripture; and the blunt fact is that we Christians have a good many battles to fight and a good many rivers to cross before ever we come to the last river or climb up on its banks to that other shore. The conquest of Canaan is a type of the occupation of the world by the kingdom of Christ. It can rightly stand for nothing else. As the Hebrews of old halted on the edge of the desert, and with hearts that now beat high with hope and then failed them for fear, as they saw ahead of them that goodly land, flowing with milk and honey, and then suddenly realized that it was full of well-armed, well-fed, hard-hearted heathen Canaanites, who must be dispossessed — so we Christians of today look out on our world. The Canaanites are here, too. The forces of heathenism, of social unrighteousness, of sin and vice and selfishness are all solidly intrenched here; and all its strongholds are stoutly held by men of evil will. We must dispossess them all. We must conquer the country for Christ. We must make his rule supreme. The whole world must be occupied by the conquering forces of his everlasting kingdom.

> THE happiest and most useful Christians are those whose outflow is spontaneous and commensurate with their intake, whose giving in substance and service is proportionate to their receiving. They are channels of blessing. Having received the Holy Spirit in fulness, out from within them there flow rivers of living water. Every blessing received makes a new opportunity to pass a blessing on. Increased ability calls for larger service. As riches increase, the opportunity to help spread the gospel increases. As one's contacts with people multiply and become more intimate, the opportunities to influence them in right directions, to help them to better lives and above all to point them to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world, multiply. He who socially, in the business world, or in any way, moves in a larger orbit in life, has the wider opportunity to let the light God has given him shine upon other lives to their eternal good. Using life's opportunities enlarges life's orbit.— Charles A. Cook in "The Larger Stewardship," Judson Press.

And now we find that history is repeating itself. What took place on a petty scale in the conquest of Palestine by the people of Jehovah, is taking place on a world-wide scale in the conquest of the world by the followers of Jesus Christ. There is no sudden sweep of victory. At best there is only a slow, a discouragingly slow, progress. And sometimes we need, amid the discouraging circumstances of the campaign, to refresh ourselves by dipping into the well of God's truth, by taking a larger look at his ways of working, and by conning again this old lesson of the divine philosophy. As the devout Jew, looking back over his nation's history was consoled by the thought that the painful tediousness and incompleteness of the conquest of Canaan was, after all, part of God's plan; that Jehovah had said at the beginning that their conquest was to be "by little and little"; that the slow process worked for a better state of things in the long run; so we too need to remind ourselves that the progress of the kingdom is like all the other changes that take place in nature or in history, a slow one, bound to be slow and better so. And we need it the more because in our impetuous haste, keyed up with the nervous enthusiasm of this twentieth century, we are apt to want to see everything done in our own generation and forget the years at the right hand of the Most High.

Now let us look at this truth, briefly, as it applies to different phases of the Christian conquest of the world. I take it there are three such phases: The missionary conquest of the world; the intensive expansion of the kingdom; and the kingdom within the soul of the individual Christian.

1. The Missionary Conquest

The first phase of the spread of the kingdom of Christ that naturally presents itself to our minds is that of the evangelistic appeal and its answer in the hearts of men. To spread the knowledge of Jesus Christ and his gospel and win men's acceptance for it—that is the first and most obvious task of the Christian conquest. Strange that it is not more complete after almost twenty centuries! Strange that yet there are millions upon millions of men for whom Christ died, who have never heard one word of him! Strange that mankind, for very joy, has not sounded the word like a tocsin around the globe! Nineteen centuries! Why should it have taken more than a year, or five years at most, to carry that good news completely over the habitable world?

Well might we think thus in our enthusiasm, and then let our hearts sink to despair when we remember how slowly the message has spread and how slowly it is spreading today. History tells us that the progress of the gospel has been slow, that it has been uneven, that it has again and again met with terrible setbacks. Let me mention two such setbacks. One of them took place ages ago, the other but a few weeks ago. The first was in North Africa. That region of the earth was once not only highly civilized, but was entirely Christian. There lived St. Augustine and Cyprian and Tertullian, and many an early saint and martyr. But the centuries came when the members of the Christian church got more concerned about doctrinal controversies than about evangelizing their heathen neighbors. They disputed endlessly and bitterly about the nature of the person of Christ, but forgot to preach the gospel. Their heathen neighbors were ready for some new religious movement. Christianity did not come to them; Mohammed and his followers did come to them. North Africa became Mohammedan, as it is today. And Mohammedanism is spreading down into Central Africa at the present time; and ere long the issue will have to be fought out there between Christ and the Arabian prophet. A continent was lost to the kingdom.

The Kingdom Set Back

I will mention another setback. But a few months since, while Christian nations have been quarreling, down has come the revived Turkish power. It has swept through that early home of Christianity, Asia Minor, killing, robbing, massacring, deporting every person bearing the name of Christian. Smyrna, the last of the seven churches of the Apocalypse to survive, has now gone the way of the rest. The great American missionary effort of the past century in those regions faces a difficult or impossible future. The kingdom of God has been set back.

So the gospel has been spreading "by little and little." Now set back by such events as these, now seeming for long periods to stand still, now slowly advancing. But for our everlasting comfort let us note that through it all the general movement is that of advance. Though the waves sometimes recede, the tide comes on.

Some one has offered the following figures to show the gradual growth of Christendom through the centuries. They are only "round numbers", of course, and only approximately correct; but the important thing is that they are approximately correct. "At the end of Christ's life there were only about 500 followers of his in the world; at the end of the first century it is estimated there were 50,000 Christians; after ten centuries, 50,000,000; today there are some 500,000,000 people who bear the name of Christian."

The other day I heard that veteran missionary, Doctor Cronkhite, raise the question: How much longer will missionary work have to be carried on in Burma? His answer startled me: "It will take only about one hundred years more of the present rate of progress, for us to have a native Christianity in Burma as strong as that in America." A hundred years! That is only a lifetime or two. Sometimes it seems as if the progress of the kingdom were accelerating, and the kingdom is enlarging by leaps and bounds, not "by little and little."

However it be, the future is with us. "By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land."

Prayer

HASTEN the time, O Lord, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. Hasten the time when the bride of Christ, the church which he has redeemed by his blood, will make herself ready for him. Hasten the time when we ourselves shall be sanctified wholly, and purified in preparation for the great hope thou hast set before us. Fill us with that wholesome confidence, faith, and enthusiasm, which—under thee—shall get us the victory. Create in us the ardent desire to enlist our lives in the service of that Kingdom, of the increase of which there shall be no end.—Amen.

2. Intensive Expansion of the Kingdom

There is another criterion than that of the numbers who profess him by which we can judge the growth of the kingdom of Christ. We must not only ask, "How many people called Christians are there?" But we must ask, "How completely is the spirit of Christ permeating the life of mankind?" In other words the kingdom advances not only in extension, but in intensity. We have raised the question of quantity; now how about quality?

Heathen at Home

And our first investigation is discouraging. We are all familiar enough with the "heathen at home." They are here, certainly. In the heart of Christian America, there is sin and vice and injustice and fraud and intolerance and greed—enough to make the heart sick. There is still child labor legally permitted; there is still sweated labor; there is still a monstrously inequitable distribution of the national dividend; there is still not even a cynical pretense of applying the principles of Christ to the great industrial disputes or to international affairs. And history shows that the intensive progress of the kingdom reveals the same unevenness of advance so clearly true of the evangelistic aspect of the kingdom; the same periods of standstill and of retrogression.

But the story does not end here. Over and above the face of unevenness of standstills and setbacks, there is the greater fact of progress. The world of human relationships is being won for Christ, though it be but slowly.

Jesus placed a new estimate on human life, even the humblest human life, that day when he died on Golgotha. And his estimate of the worth of human beings is actually winning its way against the massed ignorance, cruelty, selfishness, commercialism and warfare that have been the heritage of mankind since that dark period before history began. Now see the light spreading! See the spirit of Christ entering, softening, changing human life. Observe the growth of democracy, which, as Chesterton said, is founded not on pity for the common man but on respect for the common man; observe the growth of philanthropy, the increase of scientific knowledge, the care of public health, the gradual abolition of human slavery throughout the world, the increasing war on alcoholism. And then note the rising tide of public conscience in international affairs. One almost feels that he hears the cry of David and his men storming the citadel of the Jebusites.

We Baptists might well observe another set of facts which show very clearly the increasing predominance of the spirit of Christ within Christendom itself. When our Baptist movement began and our spiritual ancestors separated themselves from their fellows, they did so because of their insistence upon certain great Christian principles, which their fellows would not acknowledge. The most important of these principles were: The right of religious liberty, the necessity of regenerate persons, and only such persons, being members of the church. We have lived to a time when those two principles are the very commonplaces of all Protestant church life. Our fight has not only been fought, but won.

We need not dilate longer on this aspect of the growth of the kingdom. "By little and little" our Christ is taking over all the realms of life. He said he would do so. "The kingdom of heaven is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till it was all leavened." His kingdom is not only spreading; it is taking deeper root.

"I doubt not through the ages
One increasing purpose runs,
And the thoughts of men grow wider
With the setting of the suns."

3. The Kingdom Within

Now for a brief look at the third aspect of the advance of Christ's kingdom. We have seen it spreading over the face of the earth, winning over the allegiance of men; we have looked at the process by which the power of the kingdom is quietly at work, like yeast, in human society, raising and purifying it. Now let us look within our own individual hearts.

Each Christian carries the kingdom in his own breast. Christ's rule is there, seeking to win dominance over each desire, each ambition, each thought and emotion, till gradually our whole being shall be brought into captivity to him.

But here too, we find, do we not, that there is no easy victory? No sudden conquest? No quick possession of the promised land? Here too we have our standstills and our setbacks. Sometimes the struggle seems so long and so doubtful, that we are ready to lose heart. The best of men have found it so. The Christian life was not all easy and peaceful, with them, and they have been ready to cry with Charles Kingsley in his dying moment, "Thank God the struggle is over!"

All the more do we need to look back on the divine philosophy expressed in our text. We need not despair at the slow coming of victory; by little and little, God will drive out his enemies from our breast. The ape and tiger will die, and Christ be formed within us. We need not be discouraged, while he is not discouraged with us.

And now for a word of conclusion. The kingdom of God, as Jesus said, and as we have just seen, "cometh not with observation." It does not make such sudden and striking progress that you can see what is happening at the time it happens. There is never anything spectacular about God's work. Is it not a fair lesson then to say there ought not to be anything hasty and spectacular about our work for God? Wise men are distrustful of short-cuts, in everything; but nowhere are short-cuts so pernicious as in religion. We must not expect to do everything "in this generation." Rome was not built in a day, and we need not expect the city of God to be built in a decade. Most of the practical mistakes made in church life since the war, have been the fruit of an unwillingness to make haste slowly. Permanent conquest will come "by little and little."

Furthermore, if the interpretation of the text is a true one, there is no ground for pessimism and discouragement. The morale of the Christian army, like the morale of any other army that ever fought, is not helped by castigations and shrieks of despair. We hear them nowadays from some of our pulpits and from some of our denominational officials. There are brethren who make a specialty of this sort of thing. They tell us the world is going to the dogs with such evident gusto, that it is plain they relish their message. The world is not going to the dogs. The kingdoms of this world are becoming the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, though it be "by little and little." That process can no more be stopped than you can hold back the tide with your hand.

No Excuse for Inactivity

And finally, there is no excuse for inactivity. We are not fighting a losing battle, we are fighting with the Lord of Hosts on our side. Here is a spur to activity. Line up yourself with the universe. Get on the side of gravitation. Fling your life into the ranks of this resistless army.

I am told that on the old Spanish coins before the days of Columbus, was a picture of the Pillars of Hercules, at the Straits of Gibraltar, and beneath them the motto: Ne plus ultra—"Nothing more beyond!" But when the great voyages had been made and the bigness of the world began to dawn on the European mind, the motto on the coins was changed. They bore the same representation of the Straits of Gibraltar, but the motto read: "Plus ultra!"—"More beyond!" For the Christian there is always more beyond. The future of Christianity is not in the past, as some people seem to think; it is in the future where it ought to be. We who will take our lives, our talents, our money, our possibilities of happiness and stake them on the future of the kingdom of God, have all the laws of nature, all the experience of history and all the promises of God, working in our favor. "By little and little" shall the kingdom come, till that great day when he shall take his power and reign forever.

Similitude

He shall be like a tree.—Psalm 1:3

THY leaves are a whispered prayer;
Thy roots are the faith I share.
Thy trunk so straight is the strength
That grows from my faith at length.
Thy branches that shield from the sun
Are deeds of service done.
And the beauty of thy dress
Is the fairest righteousness.

River of Life

BY H. G. PERRY

RIVER of Life, it runneth on,
It runneth on and soon is gone;
Though some are torn by hidden reefs
Or bear a load of cares and griefs,
There's song and laughter all the way
And time for love and time for play;
But joy or sorrow it may be,
It runneth on to find the sea.

The Errand Boy and You

By L. Daniel Sands

I remember with what pride upon my fourteenth birthday I started out to do my first day's work in a factory. I was at last to take my place among the men as a worker. No longer must I be dependent upon my father for clothes and spending money. I was to have money of my own. I was a man—and I wanted every one to realize that fact. As I walked along beside my father I tried to imitate his manner of walking. I swung my tin dinner-pail just as he swung his. In everything I did, with all the determination of which I was capable, I was trying to act like a man.

I believe that my experience is typical of that of the average boy when he starts out on his first job. He has reached one of the most important milestones of his life. In his own estimation he has passed the "kid" stage and has entered into the estate of a man. The fact that his parents and friends fail to appreciate this change only spurs him on to greater attempts to assume all of the external attributes of manhood. This is a fine thing for the boy if his standards of manhood are of a high order, but if he has no high ideal this same attitude of mind leaves him a prey to whatever influences he may meet in his new surroundings.

The Boisterous Minority

In every factory in which I have ever worked there has been a boisterous minority—a group of men and boys who take a keen delight in being "real hard." They are unable to express themselves except by the use of incessant cursing and vulgar indecencies of speech. They are mentally and morally sick and the disease is easily caught by the new boy who enters the shop. I repeat that these men constitute a minority of the men in the shop, but they are a very noisy minority. The decent, self-respecting men go quietly about their work and attract little attention from the young boy who naturally is looking for excitement. Did you ever see gathered at the scene of an accident a group of men which did not contain several boys eager to see everything that is happening? The adolescent boy gravitates toward any group that promises something interesting and exciting. A boy will not be interested in the sight of a respectable working man eating his lunch and reading his newspaper, but he will surely be interested in a crowd of men who are laughing and apparently having a good time. Consequently he spends as much time as he can in this more attractive society. The result is that the boy chooses the leading spirit of this faction as his ideal man, and imitates his every act. If the leader chews tobacco and spits on the floor, so will the boy. How often at noon I used to sit with the gang, puffing steadily at my pipe, and getting sicker every minute. When I could stand it no longer I would knock the ashes from my pipe and stroll away with what I considered to be an unconcerned manner. As soon as I was out of sight I would seek a secluded spot in which to recuperate. The next noon, however, I would be on hand with my pipe, though I expected to be sick again. I hated that noon-hour ordeal, but Tom Young smoked and I was determined to be like Tom Young. Curiously enough my pipe was almost a duplicate of Tom's. I rubbed it with ashes mixed with water to make it look old like his. It was most unfortunate for me that at this time when I was most open to suggestion I should choose for my hero a man who was incapable of appreciating the finer and nobler things in life.

Now if a boy imitates the external habits of such a group it is inevitable that he will also take unto himself their outlook upon life, and here is where the danger lies. It is of little consequence whether he smokes or not but it is of the greatest importance that he shall have a sane, clean philosophy of life. He cannot get it from such a crowd as I have described. I have never spent five minutes with such a crowd without hearing some rotten allusion to sex. I have seen men spend an entire noon-hour telling one dirty story after another, with two or more boys listening with rapt attention. This sort of thing is bad for a man. It is fatal for a boy. In 1920 a boy came to work in a certain factory. He was one of the most promising boys I have ever seen. Today he is a degenerate whom I would not trust with a five-year-old girl, and he got his start from the suggestions of older men in the factory in which he worked.

Aside from the sex influence there is another poisoned idea which a boy is sure to receive from indiscriminate associations. It is the theory, always rampant, that more money or a better job comes either from a "pull" or from a strike. Work as a means of gaining success is not popular with this type of workman. After working in several factories and studying conditions with considerable care, I have come to the conclusion that the boy who is left undisturbed among the influences in a factory for four years will become morally a cripple, and economically a loafer.

There were many good men in our shop. In fact I think the average would be higher than in many shops in which I have worked since that time; but they were so quiet and unassuming that they never came to my attention. The treasurer of our church worked in the same shop but I cannot recall that I ever saw him at the shop. Certainly he had no influence over me.

One Sunday afternoon a man stopped at our house, saying that he was just starting for a walk and to my satisfaction he asked me to go with him. To have my company sought by a man of his age seemed to establish my claims to maturity upon an unshakeable foundation. That afternoon was one of the most pleasant I have ever spent. We had a fine walk over a hill and across the fields to the river where we went in swimming. We came back to his house for supper and before I came home arrangements had been made for another trip to be taken the next Sunday. It was the influence of this friendship which sent me back to school and eventually to college. Tom Young was dethroned and my good friend took his place. Every boy is a hero worshiper. Every boy will imitate his hero. Character is caught—not taught and a boy will catch it more quickly from an older man who will be a chum with him than from any other source. I was talking with a boy in one of the most elaborately equipped buildings for boys' work, in the country. In the course of the conversation he said, "Yes, we've nice stuff here, but that isn't why a boy comes to a club. He comes here to have friendship with a man, but our secretary sits in the office all day with the door shut. I don't come here much except on rainy days." Friendship with a man! Here is the basis of all successful work with boys. I have conducted a thriving boys' club in a cellar, with light from an oil lantern, basketball baskets made from barrel hoops, and for a ball, two pounds of beans in a salt bag.

Four Horseshoes and Two Pegs

Four horseshoes and two pegs in the hands of a man may be of most vital importance in the lives of the errand boys in your factory. Try it. Start a game of quoits for the boys in competition with the other crowd. Show them that clean fun is interesting. Convince them that a good man can be a "live one," and that the noisy rowdy is a false alarm—not to be taken seriously. There is only one indespensable qualification. You must be a real man who will command the respect of the boy.

Granting that you are that kind of a man you have an opportunity to be of very real service to the boys in your shop or office and it is your duty to take advantage of this opportunity. You would be ashamed to stand back quietly while he was beaten by a bully. Can you then remain passive while he is permanently injured by a moral bully? You say it is not your responsibility. Then whose responsibility is it? The most glaring fault of the best people in our country is that they are too quiet. They are not aggressive. Although they constitute a majority of the community they retreat before the boisterous minority. They are not positively and aggressively good. They do not take the responsibility of fighting for the high ideals which they hold. Consequently the progress of their ideals is slow. I say it is your responsibility. You are there. You see him every day. Who can do it better than you can? Get hold of that boy. Take him to a movie, or on a hike, or to a wrestling match. Do something to show that you are interested in him. Don't try to preach to him. Just make him admire you and he will follow you where you want him to go. If you do not make an attempt perhaps no one else will. In that case the boy will pay the penalty for your neglect.

MR. SANDS writes: As credentials—Began work as an errand boy at fourteen years of age. Worked my way through high school and college. One year as Y. M. C. A. secretary. Five years spent investigating industrial conditions, working as laborer, office man, and foreman.

The problem of the employed boy is very real. He usually considers himself too old to come under the control of parental influence or authority. He is also liable to break away from the influence of the church. He has already broken away from the school. Without question the greatest influencing factor in his life is friendship. His friends will either make him or they will break him. Most of us can look back to the time when some older friend patiently and kindly, brought out the best there was in us and held us up until we found ourselves. Is it not your job to give some boy a lift just as some one else assisted you?

It is the most satisfying work in the world. You are proud of your success in business. Be proud of the boys with whom you have been chum and leader. Five years ago a policeman brought a black boy to me. He was accused of complicity in a burglary, but was not convicted. I made friends with the boy and encouraged him to come to the "Y" to see me. He used to come directly from school to see if I had any errands for him to do. I sent him to a store for some equipment, giving him five one-dollar bills as he supposed. I really gave him six bills to test him. He brought the extra bill back to me. On another occasion I gave him an opportunity to cheat but as in the first case he proved himself honest. One day he came in very much depressed. He had been barred from a baseball team because of his color. While trying to encourage him I found that he had never heard of Booker T. Washington. I gave him the book "Up From Slavery" as a present. Soon after that time I lost track of the boy. In fact I did not see him again until a few months ago. After one of the meetings at an older boys' conference I saw a young negro man approaching me. It was my black boy of five years ago. He was well dressed, strong and clean cut, a high-school graduate, well-equipped to make a place for himself in the world.

I can think of no achievement which could give me as much pleasure as I have received from my friendship with this black boy. It required no particular training, no expensive equipment, nothing but friendly human interest and encouragement. The boy is better and I am better because we have known each other.

Somewhere in your shop or office or in your neighborhood there is a boy who needs you. Get hold of him. Help him to find himself. Invest in a boy. The reward will be great and satisfying, both to him and to you.

Contact with God

By Homer F. Yale

A friend who is a preacher wrote me recently that he was thinking of preaching on this subject: "How Can We Have Contact with God?" He wanted me to give him some points, but requested specifically that I leave out the matter of prayer. In fact, he thinks that many people have "slumped off from doing what Jesus said to do, onto prayer as substitute, because it was easier to pray than to do what he said they should do."

I consider the New Testament a very good guide in this great matter, though there are very few people today, even church members, who are willing to take the New Testament and live strictly by its teachings. It is no wonder that we have the crime wave and the divorce wave, and that our boasted "Christian civilization" is fast going to the dogs.

The teaching of the New Testament is very clear as to how to come into contact with God. John the Baptist preached repentance, and faith in the coming Saviour, (Matt. 3:2; Mark 1:4,7; Luke 3:3,16; John 1:27.)

Jesus preached both repentance and faith, (Matt. 4:17; Mark 1:15; Luke 5:32, 24:47.)

The twelve preached repentance (Mark 6:12.) They are instructed to say also, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand", (Matt. 10:7), and that included faith in Jesus.

Peter preached repentance and faith on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:38), saying that they should receive remission of sins and the gift of the Holy Spirit. A short time afterward he preached repentance as the way of getting rid of sin, and said the Lord would come and give seasons of refreshing (Acts 3:19.) He spoke again of repentance as the way of getting rid of sin (Acts 5:31.) In 2 Pet. 3:9 he says that the Lord does not wish "that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

Paul preached repentance at Athens, saying that God "commandeth men that they should all everywhere repent." (Acts 17:30.) He told the elders of Ephesus that he had preached repentance and faith (Acts 20:21), and in his account of his conversion (Acts 26:20) he said he had preached repentance from the first and works worthy of repentance.

In Acts 11:18 we find the Jerusalem church glorifying God because "to the Gentiles also hath God granted repentance unto life."

There are also some significant passages on repentance in Rev. 2:5, 16, 21, 22, and 3:3, 19.

The writer to the Hebrews emphasized faith, saying that "he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seek after him." (11:6.)

One of the most striking passages on this subject is in Acts 5:32, where Peter says of the Holy Spirit, "whom God hath given to them that obey him." Repentance and obedience are therefore very closely related. And John says very plainly in his Gospel (7:17) that obedience is the way of knowledge.

"Absolutely the most important passage in the New Testament on this subject is the one where Jesus tells how he maintained contact with the Father, in John 8:29: 'He that sent me is with me; he hath not left me alone; for I do always the things that are pleasing to him.'"

Repentance and faith go together. There is no use in trying to have faith in God and believe that he will help us unless we are willing to give up all our sins. And there is no use in trying to give up all our sins and be victorious over them without trusting in Christ for his help.

But the great trouble today is that people are not willing to give up all their sins. They are willing enough to believe a creed, to believe certain doctrines about God or Christ or the Bible, but how many are willing to forsake every sin and live according to the teachings of Christ? And how many preachers are preaching the plain teaching of the New Testament that the way to God is by giving up every sin and being obedient?

We need a revivifying of the meaning of the word repentance. It means to give up every sin, to forsake every sin, and do just what Jesus wants us to do. And we need to remember that sin is always selfishness in some form. I recently wrote out the following:

Consecration Card

I am willing to give up every sin—every form of wrong-doing and selfishness, and surrender body, mind and spirit to Christ, to be filled and used by him just as he wishes.

I wish to consecrate to Christ my thoughts, imaginations, feelings, will, aims, purposes, time, talents, words, actions, work, rest, eating, drinking, dressing, habits, pleasures, money and all other possessions, all that I am and have, all that I can be and do, to be filled and directed by him just as he wishes.

This same friend wrote me that if I would put it "as he teaches," instead of "as he wishes," there would be a good deal of difference, "because there is the printed word to go by." And then he says, "But I hardly think you could get any one to sign it in that case." Here is a minister in the active pastorate saying that there are no so-called Christians who are willing to give up all their sins and do as Jesus wants them to do. I cannot believe he is right in this matter, for although there are many church members living in sin, who are not consecrated to Christ, who are not having victory over sin, yet I believe there are some in every church who would be glad to sign this consecration card.

I am therefore going to ask every person who reads this article and who is willing to give up every sin and surrender fully to Christ and be entirely obedient to his teachings and to every clear duty, trusting in him as the Son of God to give victory and to guide in the service of others,—I am going to ask each to send me a postal card with these words: "I will assent to your consecration card and join the Full Surrender Club." Then please give your name and address. My address is Homer F. Yale, Hartwick, N. Y.

When any person forsakes every sin and trusts Christ for help, what always happens? Isn't that always the way that revivals start?

Of course the reason so few are consecrated is because they have not realized the divinity of Christ and his great love, shown by his life and teachings, and culminating in Gethsemane and the cross.

"Thou Crownest My Life"

Reminiscences of Mrs. Nancy J. Tolman,

EDITED BY PERRY J. STACKHOUSE

Mrs. Nancy J. Tolman, born May 1, 1824, died in Chicago, March 20, 1923. Funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Perry J. Stackhouse, of the First Church, Chicago, assisted by Dr. Robert N. Van Doren, an old-time friend.

Mrs. Tolman's life touched the entire history of the United States as a nation. In 1916 she wrote out the reminiscences of her long life. It is a document of real historical value. It is written with characteristic modesty, but it reveals a personality of unusual force and sets forth a character, beautiful in its simplicity and unselfishness.

MY grandfather, William Burns, who was born in Scotland, was of the family of Robert Burns, the poet. He went with two brothers to live for a time in Londonderry, Ireland. From there they emigrated to America and settled in Londonderry, N. H. He was a soldier in the Revolutionary War and also fought in the Battle of Bunker Hill. After the war was over he moved to the town joining Londonderry called Hudson. Here in Hudson my father, David Burns, was born in the year 1787.

I began life's journey May 1, 1824, with my twin sister, in Hudson, N. H. We were the youngest of eight children, three sons and five daughters, and we were named for the wives of the first two foreign missionaries, Nancy Judson and Harriet Newell Burns.

My first recollections were of going to meeting. There were two meeting houses, built just alike, three miles apart. The North meeting house was at the center where my father went. He, being one of the two Baptist deacons, was very regular and strict in his attendance. The meeting houses were built with a door that opened in the center, right into the church. The two side doors opened into a porch in which was a stair leading up to the gallery. The pews were built square with a door to enclose them. The pulpit was built quite high. The singing-gallery was opposite the pulpit and it was the custom to rise up and turn around and face the singers. We had the best singers in town, led by a bass-viol, a violin and clarinet. There were always two sermons with an intermission of an hour.

A Four-year-old Student

We went to school with our older sisters when about four years old. It was a large district school which in winter was attended by older scholars; this made a school of about fifty. We had the best of teachers, for many of the scholars were quite advanced in their studies.

My father's farm was quite productive, on it was grown almost everything that was needed for the family use.

Most of the woolen garments worn in the family were home-made. The sheep were washed and shorn and the wool sent to the carding machines and made into rolls for spinning. Mother had a woman to do all of the spinning and the yarn was then sent to the weavers to be woven into different pieces of cloth.

The New England Thanksgiving was an event of much importance; preparations for it began weeks beforehand. The barrel of boiled cider apple sauce was made, candles dipped and the hogs and beef usually killed. The pewter and brass were all scoured and cleaned, and everything put in spick and span order. The week before most of the pies were made, such as mince, pumpkin and apple. All of the cooking was done in a fireplace, except the baking, which was in the brick oven; the roasting of meats in a tin kitchen, which went across the fireplace; and the baking of biscuits and Johnny-cakes in a tin baker, set before the fire. As many in the family as could went to meeting. The others had to help with the big dinner. All kinds of vegetables were cooked, chickens roasted and chicken pies and puddings baked in the oven. The dinner was one of great enjoyment to all the family. The evening was spent in cracking nuts, popping corn, making molasses candy and playing games. The food that was cooked at Thanksgiving lasted nearly two weeks.

By the time I was ten years of age there were many changes. Whale oil and fluid lamps took the place of candles; most of our garments were now bought at Nashua; matches took the place of flint; stoves, now manufactured in Nashua, took the place of the fireplace. We still kept up the baking of pies, brown bread, Indian puddings and beans in the brick oven.

My mother taught us to live by the Golden Rule. I never heard her speak ill of any one, 'For in her tongue was the law of kindness.'

About this time my grandmother came to live with us. My father, David Burns, was the youngest of her ten children and her favorite child. We thought her very old at eighty years, but she lived to be ninety-four years and six months. I never knew her to be sick enough to have a doctor. She was a remarkable woman in many ways. Her two husbands fought in the Revolutionary War and in the Battle of Bunker Hill. She used to tell us many stories of the war and also of the Salem witchcraft. She belonged to the family of Elliots so well-known in history.

At fifteen years of age we went to school at Nashua to the Academy which was a famous school. At sixteen years I taught my first district school. It was quite a large school of about thirty scholars, ranging from three years old to fourteen. My salary was one dollar a week and 'boarding round.' In the fall I went to Boston to spend the winter with my older sister who was living there, and I stayed two years. In December Elder Jacob Knapp was invited to come and hold a revival meeting there. Most of the churches joined in the services and many hundreds were converted. In this great revival many of my friends and myself were converted.

At this time my twin sister went to the New Hampton (New Hampshire) Female Seminary. We could not both go at the same time and after she was graduated I went to the same noted school.

In the spring of 1846 Governor Slade, of Vermont, issued a call for young ladies to go West as teachers at his own expense. Thirty responded to the call, among them my twin sister Harriet. These volunteers were to meet Governor Slade in Boston at the United States Hotel and receive their orders. He sent them to Albany, N. Y., to be under the training of Miss Catherine Beecher who had lived in the far west state of Ohio and who was the sister of Henry Ward Beecher and Harriet Beecher Stowe. When she parted with them she gave to each one a treatise on "Domestic Economy" written by herself and also a cook-book. They were to go to Chicago by way of the Great Lakes to meet the board of education, who would assign to them their schools. My sister was sent to Gross Point, twelve miles north from Chicago, now the beautiful town of Evanston. Her school was in a log house with twenty scholars. Here she taught about two years when she was married to Mr. Hill of that place. Two years after this he was accidentally killed. At this time my older sister and I decided to visit her.

(Then follows a description of the trip from New Hampshire to Chicago by canal boat, steamer and railroad which took ten days.)

"A Divinity that Shapes Our Ends"

In about three weeks we had an unexpected call from our family friend then living in Springfield. He was attending court and said he had come out to see us to make a proposal of a plan for us to go to Springfield and open a school for girls and young ladies. We had no plans for the future and after talking it over we decided to accept the proposal, feeling that the Lord was directing our steps. "There's a divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them as we will."

Arriving in Springfield I received a very warm welcome from Mrs. Sherman and her two children and she soon made me feel quite at home after such a long journey of five days' travel from Chicago. Mr. Sherman had a plan to finish off the basement of the new Baptist church for our school. He called a meeting of the trustees and told them his plan.

The pastor of the church, Doctor Teastdale, became very much interested in the school plan. He called on us and proposed to be an associate principal with my twin sister, Mrs. Hill, to give the school character and help in the finances and advertising to see to all tuition bills and the needs of the school and share with her equally the profits and expenses; but he would do no teaching. This she agreed to, as it would relieve her of a great responsibility.

The school opened the first of September with eighty scholars and four teachers. Doctor Teastdale had named it the Young Ladies' Institute.

At the end of the second year Doctor Teastdale resigned as pastor of the church and left Springfield. Mrs. Hill went back to New England to spend her vacation and I was invited to visit a friend, who had moved to Upper Alton to educate her two sons at Shurtleff College.

Here I had an invitation to leave my school in Springfield and take a school for life with one scholar, which, after giving it due consideration, I finally accepted. My sister brought back a teacher from New Hampshire to take my place in school.

On the thirtieth day of September, 1852, I was married to Rev. John Tolman, pastor of the Baptist Church in Upper Alton. After a pleasant reception at Mrs. Sherman's we bade goodbye to our many friends in Springfield and left for our future home. We arrived in Upper Alton by six o'clock and went to Mr. Bostwick's mansion, where my husband was boarding. We just had time to change our traveling dress when we were summoned down to tea. Here we found quite a company had been invited to surprise their pastor and welcome his bride. A very happy evening was spent and this ended my wedding day.

My husband's wedding gift was his two little sons, two and four years old, more precious than silver or gold. They were with his sister in the northern part of the state.

My husband had a call to the church in Decatur and we moved there, on the first through train of the Great Western Railroad. There were very few houses to rent, so we were obliged to build. In eight weeks we had a house of two rooms, a fine cellar, and a lean-to, which was very comfortable for a few months. In the spring we added three rooms and a woodshed. The minister was expected to keep open house in those days and we were privileged to entertain a good many strangers.

Mr. Tolman soon realized the need of a new church building, as the church had always worshiped in a hall owned by one of the members. In three years the church building was erected, dedicated and free of debt. A number of families had moved there from different places and the church had increased twofold.

God gave me a little daughter while living here and I felt greatly blessed.

We decided to leave Decatur and go East to visit my parents; my husband also wished to be with his brother who was about to graduate from Madison University, in Hamilton, N. Y. He was expecting to be married and sail with his wife as a missionary to India. When the time came for them to sail we went to Boston to bid them goodbye. Mr. Tolman had been preaching in Staten Island, while waiting, and had received an urgent call from the church to become its pastor. After the farewell services at the church and on board the ship we left for our new home in Staten Island.

I was again blessed by the birth of a little son and now our family was increased to four children.

Another move we made was to the Second Church in Brooklyn, E. D. Soon after this, in 1861, war was declared and now came exciting events. Some of the young people in our church were preparing to go as volunteers and later others were drafted. The war had changed the times and everything had increased in prices, especially clothing.

I always kept a guest chamber and so had the pleasure of entertaining a great many of our own friends, as well as ministers and missionaries, for this was the central place for travelers and visitors. Here we had the best schools for our children and it was a great pleasure to see their improvement.

The last and saddest event of the war was the assassination of the President, Lincoln. The funeral procession was the most impressive and most wonderful sight I had ever witnessed. Not a sound was heard in the streets, but the solemn bands playing their mournful tunes. It was about two hours in passing the point where we stood.

Our next change was in going to central New York, noted for its many lakes and pretty villages. Canandaigua was a large village situated on a lake by the same name. While living here, Henry went to Rochester University. Judson, after leaving the village academy, took a position as a clerk in a hardware store. After living here a few years came many changes. As they were all ordered of the Lord in his service we were content and happy.

In three different places Mr. Tolman had remodeled the churches and added new chapels in the rear. We received many showers of blessings from the Lord and I could say, "He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake."

My husband's last pastorate was in Moravia, a pretty village on Cayuga Lake. While here his health failed and he went for a few months to the sanitarium at Clifton Springs. They told him that he must not preach another sermon for an attack of nervous prostration required a rest for two years. He came home and gave up his life's loved work. After being in New York twenty-five years we decided to go to Chicago to be near our three sons who were in business there. Mr. Tolman was under the treatment of the best of physicians for two years. All failing to help him, he was called home to his mansion in heaven. He had been in the ministry forty years and was sixty-seven years of age.

For thirty years my life in Chicago has been very pleasant, among many relatives and friends and I can say, "My lines have fallen to me in pleasant places." But I have lived to see so many changes, most of my old friends having passed away to their home above. I still have my two dear children to bless and comfort me in my old age and am happy in the thought that I am still spared to be a blessing to them. I have been blessed with good health for ninety-two years and I can truly say, "Thou crownest my life with blessings."

Northern Theological Seminary

In western Canada, away off on a farm that lies thirty miles from Moose Jaw the writer was asked this question. "You are from the States. Do you know anything about the seminary that began in a church?"

Beginning ten years ago with seven students the short history of the Northern Baptist Theological Seminary shows a rapid and remarkable development. It has this year 110 students, and property valued at nearly $350,000 with an indebtedness of only $20,000. The new dormitory building of which the corner stone was laid on the eighteenth of April will accommodate seventy-five students, provide six recitation rooms, a reception room and a large library. The building is three stories high, 175 feet long by 40 feet wide; for it the money given by a generous friend fully provides.

NEW DORMITORY BUILDING, NORTHERN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, CHICAGO

The members of the seminary board are intensely anxious that the school shall now move forward as an increasingly vital factor in our denominational life. Farmers of western Canada knew it by reason of its good theology but the Northern Seminary has other good things to recommend it besides sound theology. It has a splendid student body of high-grade men and a markedly spiritual atmosphere. It is 100 per cent Baptist and upon its board of trustees are a number of oustanding business men. These practical men believe that the students should be trained not only to preach the gospel but also how to meet and overcome the difficulties presented by modern life.

For instance, many of the seminary graduates become pastors of village and country churches. Therefore the trustees feel that a course in rural church work should be provided and it is with gratitude we state that one of the Chicago friends has made possible the introduction of this course with the coming fall term. At stated intervals during the year there will be lectures by a well known expert in country church work. These lectures while intended for the students will be of great interest to pastors also and at the end of the year there will be held an institute designed especially for pastors of our country and village churches. This will last from two to three weeks and special speakers will be provided. The rooms in the beautiful new dormitory building will be placed at the service of visiting pastors.

The seminary is just beginning an extension campaign for necessary equipment, current expenses and additions to the faculty. As the school is too young to have a wide constituency of patrons the raising of this fund will be a hard task but owing to the fast-growing conviction in the minds of Baptists that this institution is destined to meet successfully one of our greatest and most outstanding denominational needs we are glad to say that several good subscriptions have already been secured.

Denison University

The present year has recorded the largest enrolment in the history of the college. The department of Christian education has shown especial growth, and the courses in practical methods with special institutes and outside lecturers cover a wide field. The activities of the student organizations in Christian work have shown unusual progress.

In athletic provisions the college has champion teams in football and basketball. The new Deeds field enables the physical department directing both the men's and women's work to occupy the entire student body with wholesome outdoor sports.

The completion of the new Swasey Chapel is anticipated with eagerness. It will give Denison unrivalled facilities for all its religious services. It is situated on the most prominent location of the campus and will typify the central place that Christian faith holds in the life of the college.

Many noted visitors among denominational leaders, outstanding educators, men of letters and science have appeared before the college. The calendar of student activities has omitted no phase of college interest.

ARVID GORDH

Bethel Institute

The institute is closing one of the most successful years in its history with a student enrolment numbering 315 in all departments, of whom thirty are in the theological seminary and thirty-five others preparing to enter the seminary. A large portion of the student body is preparing for some form of missionary work.

Two new additions to the faculty of the seminary, are Dean Arvid Gordh succeeding Dean Carl G. Lagergren who retired last fall after thirty-four years of service, and Prof. Karl J. Karlson, formerly of Clark University, Worcester, Mass.

The choral society of the institute broadcasted the "Messiah" from station WLAG, May 20.

Visitor's Day, an annual occurrence, was held Apr. 28. Rev. Walter E. Woodbury, of the Trinity Church, Minneapolis, delivered the address.

Four members of the executive committee of the school board will attend the World Alliance: Dr. Frank Peterson, Revs. Eric Carlson, Ragnar A. Arlander and Arvid Edstam.

The school is in need of dormitories, one for boys and one for girls. It is hoped that this necessity will be supplied in the near future.

Hillsdale College

The history of Hillsdale College is the history of pioneer education in the state of Michigan. It was founded in the village of Spring Arbor, Jackson County, Dec. 4, 1844. Devout and earnest men were back of its inception. At the opening at Spring Arbor the college had no money, no endowment, no charter, no buildings, no library, no equipment. There were five students and a faculty of one, the president, Rev. Daniel M. Graham. Much discussion accompanied the removal of the college to Hillsdale in the years 1853-1855. Faculty and students numbering 100 participated with the thirty-five trustees in the completion of a new building and dining hall to accommodate 250 persons, and in the raising of an endowment of $100,000.

Anti-slavery and coeducational from the start, sympathetic with students who earned their way by cutting fire wood or other menial duties, responsive to the nation's call in 1860, the fervent spirit of service which characterized its beginning has permeated its development since and motivates the institution which now has the aid of $656,895 of endowment, a teaching force numbering twenty-eight, a student enrolment of 555 with an enlarged campus exceeding forty acres.

At the beginning of the year, Pres. J. W. Mauck, after twenty years of service became president emeritus and retired for an extended trip to Jamaica and the Canal Zone. William Gear Spencer, a graduate of Denison and recently professor at Colgate and at Franklin, became president.

Kalamazoo College

When it became evident that the receipts from the New World Movement campaign to the college would be insufficient to meet the requirements of the General Education Board in its proposal to make a large gift to the college endowment, it was decided to concentrate all efforts on an endowment campaign and hold the general building program in abeyance.

The General Education Board has promised the college $200,000 toward endowment if the college will provide an additional $400,000. Already $200,000 has been secured in cash and pledges. The college has until June 1, 1924, to raise the money.

While the general building program will be delayed for the time being, there is no intention but that the campaign for the women's dormitory will be continued until that object is realized. Some new pledges have been made bringing the amount pledged to nearly $70,000 of which about $40,000 in cash is in the hands of the college treasurer. Those having the campaign in charge feel that it would not be wise to begin construction until approximately $100,000 is pledged and half that amount paid.

CAMPUS OF DENISON UNIVERSITY

On Sunday, Apr. 22, the ninetieth anniversary of the founding of the college was observed. The faculty and senior class attended in academic costume and the general public was invited. The address of the day was given by Rev. Stewart B. Crandell, '03, pastor of the First Church, Battle Creek.

Missionary Training School

The major part of the field work of the school is now centered at Raymond Institute, Chicago, where a daily kindergarten, regular Sunday school, boys' and girls' clubs, and Saturday industrial school are conducted.

The Spanish field work has been greatly enlarged. Last year an industrial school and Sunday school was held at the Vincennes (Mexican) camp. This year similar work is being done at the Santa Fe camp. Because of existing conditions all the work has to be done in Spanish, and it is here that senior students who have had three hours of Spanish for three years, are of valuable assistance. These students are especially well prepared for work in Spanish speaking fields to which several have been appointed.

The greatest venture for the coming year will be the opening of a one-year church secretarial course. This is the first of its kind to be offered in this country and has attracted considerable attention. The course includes religious education, psychology, pedagogy, church organization, Bible, Sunday-school observation and practice, personal evangelism, English, and business education which consists of stenography, typewriting, bookkeeping and office methods.

The present senior class numbers twenty-seven, seventeen of whom have been appointed to work by the Home Mission Society.

Shurtleff College

President Potter began his eleventh year of service last August. Some of the outstanding signs of progress during the ten years of his administration are: the endowment has been increased from $182,000 to $500,000 in cash and subscriptions; the buildings and grounds from $110,000 to $300,000; and the campus from eight acres to almost twenty-five acres.

The centennial campaign is being launched under the direction of Dr. Myron W. Haynes who conducted the 1919 endowment campaign. The goals of the new campaign are one million dollars for endowment and a half million for buildings and grounds.

The enrolment of the institution has increased from 128 in all departments, to 206 notwithstanding the elimination of the academy. The Baptists of Illinois are feeling as they have not felt for years that their own school is finally coming to occupy the position for which they have dreamed so many years.

Cook Academy

This is a school for boys. The principal and faculty are fond of young men and know how to take a boy and win his confidence so that he can take hold of the business of acquiring an education and make a success of it. Parents are made a part of the family circle and are welcome at all times to consult and suggest in the interest of the boys.

The tuition is $500 per year, payable quarterly. This charge does not cover the cost of maintenance, but a large endowment makes up the deficit. It is the aim of the school to keep the rates low and thus be of greater service.

All the faculty are Christians trained to surround boys with religious influences. The Bible is taught as a part of the curriculum, but the most successful teaching of the Bible is through the indirect method.

Franklin College

Under the direction of Pres. Charles E. Goodell, five new buildings are to be erected within the next two years. Preliminary plans for the raising of a $750,000 fund to defray the cost have been made and Grafton Johnson of Greenwood, Ind., president of the board of directors of the college, has already made a gift of $100,000 contingent upon the securing of an additional $500,000 within two years.

At the present time about 724 students are enrolled in all departments, an increase of 50 per cent in the last five years. On April 30 the first session of the summer school opened with 125 students enrolled. Other summer terms will open May 28 and June 11, and it is anticipated that there will be a total of 500 students in the summer schools.

Fifty-four students will graduate on June 6. It will be the largest graduating class in the history of the school. The seniors recently pledged $1,500 to the $750,000 fund. Dr. C. Wallace Petty, pastor of the First Church, Pittsburgh, will deliver the commencement address. The missionary sermon of commencement week will be delivered by Dr. P. H. J. Lerrigo, and Dr. E. Y. Mullins will preach the baccalaureate sermon.

Berkeley Divinity School

Commencement exercises were held April 29-May 1. Rev. John Snape preached the education sermon. The missionary sermon was delivered in the First Church by Rev. Louis J. Sawyer of the Hamilton Square Church, San Francisco, and the commencement address by Rev. James Whitcomb Brougher. Five men and three young women received diplomas and certificates.

Marked features of the past year were the number of students, the variety and quality of instruction and the enlarged faculty. Rev. J. Bailey, formerly president of the Colorado Woman's College will assume the chair of New Testament interpretation next semester. Special courses have been conducted by Rev. John Snape, Rev. Henry W. Davis and Prof. Earle G. Linsley.

President and Mrs. Hill will go to Europe this summer for travel and to attend the World Alliance. Students presented them a large kodak to take with them. In addition to this, a committee, through Prof. John W. Johnson, gave them a purse of $1,200 contributed by friends as an expression of affection and good-will.

SKINNER MEMORIAL CHAPEL, CARLETON COLLEGE

All in all, it has been a prosperous year for this youthful school which annually increases in numbers, vitality, strength and maturity.

Kansas City Theological Seminary

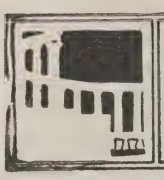
The new site and buildings are engrossing the attention of the seminary. The plans for the women's unit are complete and ground for it was broken May 15. It will be a large colonial home and will accommodate about twenty persons. Similar units will be built from time to time as they are needed and will carry out the home instead of the institution idea.



Encouraging progress is being made in the raising of money. Three-fifths of the money needed has been secured. It is interesting to note that gifts have come from Oklahoma, Missouri, Massachusetts, Illinois, Michigan, New York, Wisconsin and many other states besides Kansas. This is not unusual, however, as less than one-third of the students come from Kansas.

The commencement season is rather overshadowed by the removal and building plans. A feature will be the reception to President Crannell on his twentieth anniversary as president. He has been with the school twenty-one years. He has seen the faculty increase from "two and two-thirds" to seven full-time and seven part-time instructors, the student body from five to eighty-eight, the resources from $100 to $250,000. Trustees, faculty and friends are looking forward to a new era of growth on the new site.

CHRISTIAN TOLERANCE

There has been much discussion in the last few years about the so-called fundamentalists and the progressives in religious circles. Discussion is necessary, and often very helpful in true progress but there are times when it reaches the danger point. Most of the discussion which has come to the ears of the layman is wholesome and conscientious. There are, however, those who stand on the housetops and wave the flag of battle in any discussion, and they are the ones who cause much concern and who clog the wheels of real true progress.

A group of ministers once came to Oliver Cromwell, complaining the Quaker sect was drawing multitudes away from its churches. Cromwell asked: "Do these Quakers teach anything wrong?" "Why,—no." they answered, "nothing that we know of." "Then," said Cromwell, "I advise you so to preach the gospel as to win back the congregation and to add to them. It is better to win new converts than to waste time in wrangling over numbers. Strange that such worthy and truly God-fearing men can undo the good they would do with these squabbles."

No one who believes in progress and who is anxious to see the world grow wiser and better is desirous of a compromise on these great questions just for the sake of compromise, and we do not desire peace at any price, but we do not want war at the expense of Christian fellowship and Christian love. The great road of tolerance and cooperation must be kept open. Our forefathers possessed remarkable forethought—if they had not, they would not have forsaken all and embarked for the new world in search of religious liberty. There are still those who insist that their views are absolutely right, and they are apt to condemn others who do not share their beliefs and interpretations. This attitude deprives the other man or woman of his or her right to religious liberty.

There are great perils in this age of transition. There are those who insist that everything their forefathers taught and believed must be accepted now. On the other side there are great dangers also. Half explained and mysterious interpretations and seekers for something new and different, just because they are different, have caused many of our younger generation to take the Bible less seriously—hence they let down the moral and spiritual bars and walk into the pasture of unbelief and doubt. It is not strange that these younger people are puzzled. No man—preacher or deacon extraordinary—has any right to exploit his belief or his church to the detriment and distress of the great gospel. We cannot lose our poise nor the sublime dignity of the great cause.

We must stand together, not to argue about the things that we may never explain, but to carry forward the messages of truth about which there never has and never can be any question.

Our Baptist denomination is coming together in the great convention at Atlantic City in May. Many of our sincerest thinkers are looking forward with absolute conviction that that convention is going to be the greatest of all—that men and women are coming together possessed with the true Christian forbearance that will mean much to the whole denomination and to the world; men and women determined, we believe, to work out a great program, a program that will help in the saving of souls.

Antagonism must not exist. It cannot exist if we are really to progress. May all those who attend this great convention be moved by the Spirit of God and with Paul, "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called."

THE SLEEPING SICKNESS

This is a great mystery. Various theories have been advanced concerning its origin and cause. In some cases it looks as if the theories were confirmed; but in others both the original causes, according to the theory, were absent and yet the disease has attacked the patient. And the attempts to cure are as uncertain as the idea of the origin. It is humiliating to the physicians, and fatal to the patients. We can only study and experiment until it is mastered.

Something like this is the condition of many Christian people religiously. They sleep and nothing is able to awaken them. Those who have not been attacked by it know that things are "going on" in the world. Not only have the habits changed, but the ideas out of which the habits grew have changed and that is why the habits changed. For example: It used to be thought that the favor of God was secured in large measure if the family altar was kept up. Now it is thought to be a fine relic of former days. Business, coupled with an hour's ride from the home to the office, demands the time that used to be given to this service.

It used to be said that the blood of Jesus cleanses us from sin by a sort of exchange of values—the blood in place of the penalties. But since Doctor Bushnell's time thinkers have been saying that the Creator is not appeased by seeing blood. That language of the Book must be taken as the figure of the Eastern people to express the giving of life.

It used to be said that the Bible is so inspired that it contains truth without any mixture of error for its matter, having God for its author, and that it is to be the standard by which all men are to be judged at the last great assizes. Now it is said that it contains the true ideas of God and salvation, but that it is only a human production and incidentally contains matter that only reflects the ideas of the times.

Any man who is not asleep knows these changes are going on. But many do not realize it. They dream on in utter ignorance of the extent to which this change is modifying the thought and the church activity of the people. I have come back to the pastorate after twenty years of teaching in the seminary and I find that I must, as it were, learn my trade over. The attitude of the young, and to large extent of the middle-aged business men, is so different from what it used to be that I must approach them in a different way. The old exhortations and once-effective arguments have little force now. Once, to quote the Bible was to make an impression. Now they say "perhaps that text is not the ultimate truth."

There is no use in making charges of disloyalty against men who have changed their ideas on these important matters. It only confirms them in their so-called departures from "the faith once delivered to the saints." There is but one way, and that is to study the case and admit what is true in these changes, and try to show the error in what are not true. For any minister to reiterate the old formulas, or for any church to frown on a new idea just because it is new, is to let the truth die on their hands.

But we are in a desperate case. In the first place any old idea that has done us good is parted with only after great struggle. It takes time and patience and love to do it. The minister must not forget the parable of the tares. He may not be so desirous to show his up-to-dated-ness that he pulls up wheat with tares.

But what is most difficult is to get the facts to the people. So far the weekly papers that are the legitimate channel for correcting error among the people and for teaching the truth have been closed to any really fair and unfearful setting forth of the facts. The individually owned papers that might do it are so subsidized by the sleepy that they do not dare to give room for helpful discussion; and the "denominational" papers are so dependent on votes at the convention that they must walk in stocking feet or rubber-soled shoes lest it disturb some sleeper who will awaken in a bad humor and vote to dismiss the editor or cut off the supply of money.

So we watch and pray for some potent awakener which may save the patient and save the church for its useful mission in this age and this world.

Yonkers, N. Y. ALVAH S. HOBART.

The Human Product

As teachers of religion we are interested in a human product. We call it Christian character, although we mean very different things by that term. Should we not mean by it something more than a knowledge of the Bible, or an orderly life, or deeds of charity, or acts of worship? These are all good, but they may all be in vain unless there is something more fundamental. Call it a vision of the larger life of God and an earnest participation in that life. The service which the teacher is seeking to render is to help people to get that vision and to find their place and part in that larger life of God in the world.

This is not at first a task of pointing the way to things far and large, but a matter of opening eyes and turning on the light. It is not at first so much a question of what one shall see as whether one can see at all with the eyes of the soul. There is a curious fact about awakening consciousness that one discovers others before self. Perhaps we should rather say that one discovers self in others, and then discovers others in self; or one discovers both together and each by the help of the others, by a rapid reflective process, as the light reflected from several objects reveals another object.

One cannot well see his own situation until he has first seen others, and so learned to see situations as such. On the other hand one cannot see the full meaning of another's situation until it has in some sense been his own first. So a dual process must be constantly carried on in the growing experience of youth. One side is the seeing of life's varied situations and problems, and the other is reading true meanings and values into them.

In each of the two sides of this process both self and other must appear constantly in comparison and intercourse. One sees his own problem after he has seen it in another. One appreciates its meaning to another after he has felt the meaning of his own problem.

It is the business of the teacher to engineer this double process of self-discovery. The situation in the life of a child is most obscure. He does not know that he has problems. His needs and his troubles must be examined and analyzed, interpreted and restated. His experience must be reconstrued in the light of the teacher's riper experience and judgment, and in the light of cases from the Bible and elsewhere.

One part of the task is to supply the pupil with well-known cases of typical experiences for the light they can shed on his own situations. In that light he discovers new possibilities and problems in his own experience, which he never would have discovered but for the light and suggestion coming from his store of cases. This self-discovery is the process of spiritual growth, at least on one of its sides. It begins with unfurnished, undisciplined, and unreflective childhood. It proceeds under experienced guidance by trial and error, by supervised participation and practice in the activities and judgments of daily life, and by the appropriation of many experiences from the spiritual resources of the race. If the teaching is successful it results in a character and personality after the likeness of the Master, fit and competent to function strongly, truly and lovingly, in the situations which arise in the human world where one moves.—William James Mutch in "Graded Bible Stories," Doran.

By Inspiration Given

(II Tim. 3:16)

"But John is unreliable."—Modern Critic

CAN the Light of Life be fading,
Evanescent thus the glory
That thro' centuries past out-shining
Came from St. John's Christ-Heart story?
Is the Sun of Inspiration
Doomed to suffer weird eclipse
Viewed through glass of human vision—
Sealing, too, th' Beloved's lips?

"For a hundred years not written,
John's dim memory must have failed"—
What is time to th' Holy Spirit,
Had long years his power assailed?
"I will bring to your remembrance"—
Did it mean if promptly written?
Could Christ's promised inspiration
By mere lapse of years be smitten?

"Fools, and slow of heart t' believe
All that Prophets spake of old"—
Might Apostles not receive
Truth the same Inspirer told?
Why place trust in vain opinions
Framed in pride of critic's skill,
Inspiration soared on pinions
Of the Holy Spirit's will.

Lapse of ages casts no dimness
O'er the Sun of Righteousness,
All the Holy Ghost indited
The Good Shepherd's flock will bless—
Trust to what his Word doth say,
"Taught of God"—not John's own story—
Years a thousand as one day
Change not him, the Lord of Glory.

International Sunday School Lesson for June 10

NEHEMIAH, THE BOLD BUILDER

Lesson: Nehemiah 4: 6-15 Golden Text: Nehemiah 4:14.

Introductory

In the year 586 B. C. Jerusalem fell into the hands of Nebuchadrezzar, king of Babylon, and was practically demolished. It was prophesied that in seventy years the people would return to Jerusalem and rebuild it and the temple. Fifty years later Cyrus, then king of Persia, permitted the Jews to return to Jerusalem. Four years later the temple was rebuilt, but in following years breaches were made in the wall of the city and the temple was in sad plight. Of this Nehemiah, cup-bearer to Artaxerxes, king of Persia, learned when his brother and other Jews came to him at the palace. He resolved to go to Jerusalem and make things right. His influence with the king brought him a leave of absence for this purpose and he went to Jerusalem accompanied by a military escort.

Lesson

Nehemiah was a man of resource, determination and caution. He surveyed his field and made his plans before he appealed to the people of Jerusalem. When he did speak it was with authority because he knew whereof he spoke. So effective were his words that they responded with "Let us rise up and build." "So we built the wall," says Nehemiah in his records. "And all the wall was joined together unto half the height thereof; for the people had a mind to work." Then there came the enemies to this good work who conspired against Jerusalem, and worked confusion. Nehemiah's defense against this was "prayer unto God," and "setting a watch against them day and night." The enemy was sly, working in the most insidious way, creating dissatisfaction among the builders. Then came Nehemiah's masterly appeal to his people. "Be ye not afraid of them, remember the Lord who is great and terrible, and fight for your brethren, your sons, and your daughters, your wives and your houses." The result was the frustration of the plans of the enemy and among the builders "every one returned to his work."

Leading Thoughts

1. Nehemiah believed in prayer, but also in works. 2. He was constructive always in thought and in action, hence his power over people. 3. Be not afraid of the enemy; remember the Lord.

The Plumber in Residence

THE plumber is with us always—but there his resemblance to the poor ceases. His sleek little Buick stands often at my door, taking precedence of my modest Ford; and there you have our relative financial status in a nutshell—and a real car.

But although he is with us always, yet he is never really a permanent inmate of our house. A chronic transient, he might be called, and I have often wished that he were actually living under my leaky roof, and could be paid a salary instead of drawing the same amount in monthly installments as income.

When I think of the Rich and Great keeping private chaplains as household pets, or domesticating resident physicians, my soul is untouched by envy. The thought of a clerical ear or a medical eye forever cocked in my direction leaves me cold; but if the wealth of all terrestrial leak-menders were mine to squander on luxuries, my first extravagance would be a Resident Plumber, in whose calling are combined the ecclesiastical and the surgical functions.

My experience of plumbers as a class being limited to one specimen of his race, it may be that I am guilty of exaggeration, or at least of generalization, when I speak of plumbers generically as alarmists; but the impression produced by Mr. Piper (who happens to be my own minister of grace and healer of leaks), when I open the door of his shop to give him an emergency call, always brings to mind Hamlet's disordered aspect as seen through Ophelia's terrified eyes:

Pale as his shirt, his knees knocking each other,
And with a look so piteous in purport,
As if he had been loosed out of hell
To speak of horrors—he comes before me.

"What it it?" he asks hoarsely.

When I report the murmurings and gaspings of my laundry tub, he looks far more apprehensive than Dr. Mendum would look if I had summoned him to investigate my own bronchial wheezing.

"That sounds very serious," Mr. Piper says, frowning and shaking his head; "I can't tell at all what may happen. I must come over at once."

Thereupon he nervously clutches his bag of tools, and in trembling tones calls to some fellow in the cellarage to come and join him at once in this probably vain effort to save the life of my waste-pipe. By this time I am as nervous as he, and we hurl ourselves into our respective cars and dash down the street in agitated procession, dreading to see the patient, for fear that we merely shall be viewing the remains.

It is at my back door that the ecclesiastical aspect of plumbing comes to the front. The attendant boy produces a candle from some hidden recess of his vestments, and, like a faithful acolyte, reverently follows the high priest of plumbing through the kitchen and into the laundry, where both kneel at the washerwoman's high altar and inspect the foundations of her faith—the laundry tub.

At this point the officiating priest is transformed into the surgeon, and the clumsy tools turn into delicate instruments. In his hands the wrench becomes a lancet, and the acolyte seems suddenly transformed into the physician's assistant, whose task is apparently to give ether, for a sponge is produced from some inner shrine and Mr. Piper's hoarse whisper utters the command, "Turn off the water instantly! Quick! I think we are just in time!"

Of course, if this were an isolated experience, it could be borne; but the trouble with my household pipes seems to be organic rather than functional, chronic rather than occasional; and if a resident plumber were always in the attic or the cellar, he could be occupied with the preventive work which we are now told is going to save the human race. Under present conditions, "paying the piper" has come to be something more than a phrase in the family; it has come to be an impossibility—and if he were a member of our immediate circle, our relations would be less strained the first of every month.

The climax to my mortifying dependence on Mr. Piper occurred a few weeks ago, during the middle of a starlit night, when I was awakened by the sound of a steady downpour of rain which seemed to be descending just outside my chamber door. This it was, and nothing more. Investigation proved that the bottom had inadvertently dropped out of a tank on the upper floor, and that the city's water supply was inundating the house in an unexpected deluge.

Ah, then and there was hurrying to and fro, and gathering tears, and tremblings of distress, and cheeks all pale—and all the usual symptoms of acute Plumber necessity. I rushed to the telephone. A sleepy operator finally located Mr. Piper in his suburban bed; and presently the well-known accents of alarm rang over the wire. "Turn off the main!" he commanded (if he had said, "Remember the Maine!" the slogan would have been no more fruitless, for to remember the location of the main was just what I could not do.)

My family were, meanwhile, slopping about in rubbers and wrappers, holding umbrellas over their heads and offering futile directions to one another. But Mr. Piper ruled the storm that had burst from my cloudless ceiling, and gave at long distance the latitude and longitude and deep-sea soundings that finally disclosed the crucial point of my own connection with the city's water-supply.

This was done in so masterly a way that I was able, as by a nautical chart, to wade through the hall, swim down the stairs, and finally dive to the cellar, where I found the key to the situation, turned it, and the waters were stilled. Like Noah, I stood and viewed the desolation caused by the flood; and as I looked at the disheartening pile of saturated rugs and pictures, dripping draperies, and miscellaneous household articles, all jumbled together into a sort of gigantic soggy pudding, I would have given a great deal to be able to retire to a corner, and, like Little Jack Horner, to put in my thumb and pull out—a Plumber!—From the Contributor's Club, —Atlantic Monthly.

The Boy Radio Inventor

By Peggy

I wasn't there myself, but Bill went and lots of grown people went because it seemed the most wonderful thing in the world that any boy, only twelve years old, could invent a radio equipment out of old tin cans and a few wires! Nobody believed that he had actually done it, but when he said that he was hearing music from the big broadcasting station in town, then the boys all got excited and wanted to come over to hear for themselves.

"Just what kind of cans did you use?" asked Bill.

Jeffrey looked bored: "Oh, just any kind! I had one tomato can, one string bean can, one soup can. The only kind of can I couldn't use was one in which oysters or clams had been sealed."

"Why not?" asked Peter Primm, who is Bill's chum.

"Why not? Why, because oysters and clams are such silent creatures that they influence even the cans they have been in; you can't get those cans to transmit a single sound."

Peter looked at Bill. Bill looked at Peter. They both looked at Jeffrey. Decidedly there was more in this than met the eye!

"We would like hear your tin-can radio;" said Peter politely.

"Both with and without the clam cans," added Bill.

So Jeffrey set a date, and Bill could hardly wait. I could hardly wait, either, for I had supposed that of course I could go, but Bill said that Jeff wouldn't want girls around, that Jeff wouldn't know what to do if a lot of girls sat there giggling and drowning out the sound of his tin can radio. Jeff might get rather cross at us. There might be trouble.

I am afraid that I was the one who became rather cross: I drew myself up like duchesses do, when they want to wither a person with a single glance! But Bill is very hard to wither, he really is. However I managed to impress him by saying that if Jeffrey Norris had fitted up such a wonderful radio then I knew Mrs. Norris would ask mother to come over some evening; and mother of course, would say: "I want to bring Peggy with me, if I may." And Mrs. Norris would say: "Oh, please do bring her! A radio wouldn't be a radio without Peggy." It did sound so importantly superior, and even Bill was impressed by it. Although I am sure you can see that I had really "made it up out of whole cloth," as the old saying goes.

Well, in the course of time, three days passed and then Bill announced at supper that Jeff had invited the boys over to a demonstration of his tin-can radio. Uncle Tim was at our house for supper and became so interested that he finally said he would simply have to walk around to the Norris's house with Bill to see this boy prodigy.

I was on pins and needles, for I wanted to go myself; but mother had begged me not to tease Bill; and you know yourself that it never does any good to tease a brother. So I stayed home and made candy, which was the second best thing I could think of doing. Of course, afterwards I was so glad that I hadn't gone; I could act more like a duchess than ever, and poor Bill "withered" almost too easily.

That night, however, he was the most excited boy in town when he came home. You will understand how excited he was when I tell you that he actually did not notice the candy I offered him! For what was candy to him when he had seen that wonderful radio invented from tin cans and wires by a twelve-year-old boy.

"I am fourteen, myself, and it's time I invented something! Why, you never saw anything like it, Dad, there we sat with the receivers at our ears—the receivers were the lids of baking powder tins!—and there sat Jeff's tin cans in a row on a table by the window. It all looked as simple as day! Just a few wires and things. Not one of us thought he would hear a word; but presently we did! We heard every word of the concert at Case Institute! One of the fathers who came out of curiosity had the concert program with him, just to be sure that he really could hear the concert numbers. But he soon stopped wondering, didn't he, Uncletim? 'Humoresque,' 'Ave Maria,' and everything. Oh, it was great? wasn't it, Uncletim? Jeff's a perfect marvel, isn't he Uncletim?"

"Jeff is a marvel, all right," Uncletim agreed. And then with curious dryness he added: "I thought it was strange that neither Mr. nor Mrs. Norris were home, didn't you? I should think that they would have been anxious to share Jeff's triumph with him!"

The Wireless Bug

THIS little ditty that I now pen,
Is dedicated to those men
Who daily gather 'round to crow
About their famous radio.
The "wireless bug" has hit this town
With its insidious bite.
All males from ten to seventy-five
Are hard at work each night.
By day their talk is strange and weird,
Detectors, tubes and stators.
At lunch hour all the food they eat
Is magnetic modulators.
They start out with a simple set,
Soon tune in W J Z.
And as they hear those words in air
Are filled with riotous glee.
A vacuum tube now soon appears
With grid leaks and condensers;
The bug has done its deadly work
They're radio experimenters.

—Telephone Review.

Bill nodded: "Wasn't it a pity? Jeff said that his mother and father were called out of town unexpectedly for a wedding in the family."

"An unexpected wedding?" said mother. "Why Mrs. Norris has been planning to go to that wedding for the last four weeks."

"So I thought," said Uncletim with a twinkle in his eye. And instantly I began to put two and two together: Uncletim did not think Jeffrey's invention was as marvelous as Bill thought it, in spite of the fact that from mere tin cans and ordinary picture wire they had all sat there hearing the Case Institute concert. What could be the matter?

Bill kept on being too excited to want any candy, and Uncletim very carefully refrained from saying anything to dampen his enthusiasm, except that about every fifteen minutes he would put in a quiet word; "Strange that Jeffrey should have chosen the only evening when his parents would not be home!"

Now the funny part of it is that a newspaper reporter heard of this remarkable boy inventor and wrote up the astonishing demonstration for his paper. He wanted Jeff's picture, too, but luckily Jeff couldn't find any except one when he was a baby with curls! Wild horses would not have led him to let that picture be printed in the newspaper even if the reporter had wanted it: "The boy inventor when a mere child," it could have read. However, Jeff did not even show it, so the article about him came out in the evening paper with no picture but a very complete description of his now famous radio.

Belinda, their maid, said she wished the Norrisses could have been home to hear how "the tellyphone kep' aringin' and aringin' whilst the doorbell were pushed most out of its socket with folks coming to see the boy prophet." (She meant prodigy, of course.) Poor Lindy, it was a terrible day for her; she couldn't even get the rooms dusted, she was so busy flying from the front door to the telephone.

And as for Jeffrey, his day at school was one wild round of excitement. Even his teachers were excited. The other boys stood around with their hands in their pockets looking enviously at their great comrade! It was a wonderful day for everybody concerned.

It was really too bad that Mr. and Mrs. Norris had to come home. Mr. Norris is in Uncletim's bank, so when Uncletim came to our house for supper we heard, before any one else, the astonishing secret about those tin cans, those wires, and the baking-powder-can earpieces. For it seems that down underneath the room where Jeffrey's audience sat he had concealed a Victrola, and the Victrola played all the pieces that the Case Institute concert was to give! There was an opening in the floor from this cellar room to the sitting-room above, so that the sounds could easily travel up to mystify the guests. Altogether it was the most absurd and amusing thing that you ever heard of, for every single boy who went to hear Jeff's radio was absolutely sure it was a genuine invention, and the few men who were there happened to be people who know nothing about radios and were therefore easily deceived—all but Uncletim!

Uncletim from the very beginning thought he suspected a trick, knowing that tin cans really could not make a receiving set; and then, when he found that Mr. and Mrs. Norris were away he suspected still more; but when he heard the music itself he was quite sure that it was a talking-machine. The one convincing reason was that he knew one of the players in the Case Institute concert who had told him that owing to the illness of Madam Somebody-or-Other none of her pieces could be given that night, and yet Jeff had her singing them all!

Mr. Norris was undecided what to do with Jeff; but he need not have worried; for Bill and Peter did everything necessary the next day at school. I was so glad I had stayed home to make candy!

HOW CAN WE BECOME TRULY EDUCATED? PROV. 4:19.

"Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom;
Yea, with all thy getting get understanding."

There are a number of ways by which one may secure an education, inside and outside the schools. Some of the brightest minds of the world were deprived of school opportunities, and yet they were educated in the real sense. Of course, these men who were denied a schooling, did not sit around with the idea of absorbing knowledge like a sponge absorbs water. They put forth real effort.

The pitiful sight among Baptists today is that so many of our fine young men and women are not availing themselves of the opportunities for training through the schools. Go into the great universities of the land and you will find Baptists not at the head of the list by any means. Just who is to blame for this sort of thing I do not know, but of one thing I am certain, the whole denomination should seriously turn its attention to the subject of education. This is absolutely essential, if we are to retain our place of leadership in world affairs.

Outside the Schools

Here you will find the majority of young Baptists, and among this number a large group of serious-minded folk who really desire to make life count in the world. Now and then are groups devoting themselves to study in one of the many courses available, and they are making real progress. But, the number is dreadfully small. It is my candid opinion that many of the young people who are so enthusiastic in the work of the churches today are committing spiritual and intellectual suicide. Why? They are not taking the time to study and they are not taking the time for the development of the inner life, necessary for a continuous and effective service. People do not get this poise and balance in one round of activity after another. Men and women of real culture everywhere will tell you that it takes genuine, conscious effort, along with daily routine and aside from the routine to secure such an end.

Inside the Schools

Whether in the high school, college or the great university, the main business of the student is not to learn so much Latin and Greek and mathematics. Necessary, yes. But the big thing is to become versed in the great problems of human living. This is the end of real education. The courses pursued should contribute to this end. A degree from any institution, just to flaunt it into the face of some one, is an attitude absolutely unworthy of Christian young people.

What we need is more education, but ever and ever, an education shot through with the principles and leadings of the Great Teacher. Possibly some of our elders are to blame today because so many of our Baptist young people are being trained in short-cut institutions, which in so many instances, means short-time pastorates. In season and out of season, we should urge Baptist young people to lay the best possible foundation upon which the superstructure of service is to be built. I have seen somewhere a motto "Culture for culture's sake." Our present-day motto should ever be "Culture for service."

Recreational Program of the Boston Convention

The recreational features of the Boston Convention will center in historical pilgrimages. On the afternoon of July 4 the busses will take the delegates to Concord and Lexington, price $2. On Thursday and Friday the trips will be short ones; to the north end of Boston and Bunker Hill, to Harvard and the museums, to the center of Boston, Common and Public Gardens, to the library and Art Museum. There will also be opportunity to visit Salem, $2 round trip. On Saturday afternoon and evening there will be a sail down the harbor with box lunch to be eaten at Nantasket Beach, cost $1.50. The shorter trips each afternoon will be by bus, $1, or by trolley personally conducted. Many may prefer to walk. Those desiring special shore dinners, clam bakes, etc., can be accommodated on a twenty-four hours' notice. Tickets for these various trips will be on sale at Tremont Temple July 4 and 5. It would be better to make reservations at once, however, as the bus lines and steamship people will need guarantees. Address all communications to Recreation Committee, Boston Convention of Baptist Young People, 701 Ford Bldg., Boston, Mass.

B.Y.P.U. European Extension Fund

The interest in the fund is growing as is witnessed by the large number of subscriptions from various local B. Y. P. U.'s throughout the country, seventeen states being represented in the remittances. But the brief time allotted to the campaign was not sufficient for many state organizations to bring the message of Baptist young people's opportunity for service in Europe to the individual unions. Therefore, the time has been extended to July 1 when returns should be in that the Board meeting in Boston may plan future activities. Meanwhile, send subscriptions to Herbert Hines, 193 N. Harrison, Kankakee, Ill.

Boston Convention Rates

All passenger associations involved have granted reduced rates. Those interested in making the trip should inquire of local ticket agents as to fares. Tickets will be sold only on the identification certificate plan. These certificates may be secured from state or provincial transportation leaders, or from Rev. F. F. Peterson, Ford Bldg., Boston, Mass., or from B. Y. P. U. of America, 143 N. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Aurora, Illinois, Association

Claim Street B. Y. P. U. meets on Monday evenings and reports a great willingness on the part of all members to participate in all meetings when called upon. It also finds the idea of a social hour after every meeting to be helpful in many ways. It realizes that the youth of today must have a social side to their lives as well as spiritual, providing that the entertainment is of the kind that glorifies the Lord. The society has a "Flying Squadron" that has occupied the pulpit of several churches in the vicinity of Aurora. It has had three parties to which the church was invited. Contributed $25 to the church toward a new organ blower recently installed. At Christmas time, distributed baskets of food to the poor. Average attendance, thirty.

Ridgewood B. Y. P. U., Joliet. This B. Y. P. U. with "Loyalty to Christ" as a motto and the support of the whole church is going forward. It has abandoned the group plan of leading in favor of the topic card plan. Social hours are successful and society looks forward to broadening aquaintances and cooperation with other societies through 1923. The financial program is a good one. "Never keep your money long, but put it to the work of the Lord." Payment on a pledge toward the new church parsonage completed and also $50 a year paid toward the pastor's salary. Average attendance, thirty.

First Church B. Y. P. U. Joliet, meets Monday evenings, and reports considerable activity. Social hour with eats every meeting night—a good plan to induce fellowship and better acquaintance through the society. Principal aim is to send delegates to the national B. Y. P. U. Convention. A play recently given realized $50 to this end. Ten dollars was given toward a Christmas party given for the children of the Mexican Mission in connection with the church. The entire church was entertained at the observance of watch night. Average attendance, thirty.

Plainfield B. Y. P. U. reports a lull in activities with some difficulty in getting members out to the meetings. Average attendance, less than ten.

New Building Assured for First Church, Toledo

By Albert K. Morris

Something has happened in Toledo which has brought our Baptist work prominently before the people, and has directed the attention of the whole city toward the old First Baptist Church. To many it seemed as if this church had passed its days of greatest usefulness, and like many other churches which experience the losses and fatalities involved in down-town sections, would have to give up its effort after seventy years of service. But we are glad to note that recently a new hope has been born, and now a future awaits it more splendid than the past.

The First Church of Toledo called to its pastorate Rev. Albert King Morris in the summer of 1920. Shortly after his arrival, he began a careful study and survey of the field with a view to leading the church in an effort to build an institutional church in its present locality. This survey and examination continued for a year and extended back over a period of twenty years. The result was the establishment of the conviction that there was but one course to follow if the church desired to extend its usefulness—that was to move to a residential section where 75 per cent of the membership resided and from which 80 per cent of the financial support was derived.

Having caught the vision, it was imparted to the church through a spirit of faith and enthusiasm which was soon fanned into determination. Mr. R. A. Bartley, one of the church's deacons, and his wife presented a $25,000 site to the church. Dr. F. H. Divine was engaged to conduct a building fund campaign, the goal of which was $250,000. Plans were made for the greatest effort of its kind ever attempted in Toledo. Five days after the campaign opened, the announcement of the Bartley gift of an additional $100,000 was made and the effect was electric. By Sunday night the whole amount, $250,000, was subscribed and the building of one of the most beautiful and serviceable church in this part of the country was assured.

The building, shown on the front cover, is designed in English Gothic style. The exterior walls are to be laid in rough Sandusky limestone of random sizes and color, and trimmed with cut Indiana limestone.

The tower, rising 107 feet from the ground, is so arranged as to be of real utility, as well as beauty. Each floor will be used for a definite purpose. Provision for the installation in the future of bronze musical chimes will be made.

The auditorium is planned to seat about 800, including the main floor and gallery. The arrangement of the baptistry, with dressing rooms and necessary equipment, is excellent. The organ and choir plans will be given all the grace and dignity possible and made to lend strength to the atmosphere of worship.

There will be an excellent gymnasium to serve for social functions, banquet and dining room, men's class and club room, and the general play room of the church. The Sunday school will have a modern departmental arrangement. The departments have all been placed according to the suggestions of the best Sunday school authorities in the country. One noteworthy feature is what might be called the administration floor which will contain the office, study, board room, ladies' parlor, kitchenette, music room, ladies' rest room, telephone booth and general church parlors.

The heating system will be a combination of direct and indirect with a fan system of ventilation.

The building is to cost approximately $250,000, including equipment.

The English Anniversaries

By W. T. Whitley

Some troubles, like commentaries, are international and interdenominational. One has to do with reunion of the churches, the other with fundamentalists and modernism. Ever since the Lambeth Conference of bishops, there has been much discussion, both local and general, as to the possibilites of churches uniting. In England the bishops have made overtures and because they have emphasized their points, while members of the Free Churches have responded, much unrest has been engendered among those who want open diplomacy. At last the Free Church representatives have taken the initiative and have asked the bishops to consider five points; they have also intimated that it would be especially convenient to have an answer by the end of August. These five points may be as important as the five points of Calvinism and they concern not Britons alone. Thus: How are the elements of congregational and presbyterial order to be combined with a "representative and constitutional" episcopate? What do you consider the status of the existing Free Church ministry? The Free Churches are in fellowship with kindred communions in other parts of the world; have you considered the bearing of this fact? The union between church and state in England, what do you propose? How shall we safeguard the evangelical principles of the Reformation?

Many people thought it was high time that such questions should be put and answered: the report of the Baptist Union Council showed that their wishes are to be gratified. But one man has come to be understood as standing for a policy, and since he is public orator of the University of Cambridge, he is fairly capable of stating his position in unmistakable terms. The assembly elected him as vice-president of the union, and a year hence, Doctor Glover will enter on a year of office as president. There were other excellent candidates, and many wished to recognize good service in the work overseas; but while this was reflected in the first scrutiny, Doctor Glover was elected by an extremely large vote. Baptists want plain answers from the bishops on points that are fundamental to us; we have attended to their points very amply.

On another matter you are even more closely connected. Men have been concerned with other points that are fundamental with them and afraid of modernism infecting our churches and missions. They have raised grave troubles in evangelical Episcopal circles, and have damaged the support of the Church Missionary Society. They have fallen back on the methods of Athanasius and Constantine, framing a creed, and wanting everybody to express adhesion to it: such conduct is explicable among members of a state church, but is quite unbaptistic. To reassure some doubting souls, very clear utterances have been made both by the Baptist Missionary Society and at the recent meeting from the platform of the Baptist Union when Doctor Fullerton charmed all hearers with his exposition of our faith. There can be no doubt as to where Baptists stand, though we shall always refuse to be dragooned into signing a creed we do not compose and though we regard it as tyranny over conscience to force it on others.

One unpleasant episode sprung out of this matter. Ministers and secretaries have been deluged through the post with acrid pamphlets attacking teachers abroad and at home. It has been necessary to print quotations made in this pamphlet side by side with the original passages. A reference made by the president, in his address, to garbled quotations as dishonest, brought such a storm of applause as is unusual and reassured all who wondered whether calumny might not have done some harm. It has done great harm—to the accuser.

The report of the council seemed not to be understood, or at least to be overshadowed by other matters. It is good to know that there has been a slight increase of everything, except of pastors in charge; but the actual work of the union was hardly referred to. Think, that 600 ministers are now aided out of central funds created this century; that 180 aged men retire on a pension to which they have indeed subscribed but which is tripled by the denomination; that 120 widows are similarly benefited. Consider that the problem of transferring from one place to another is so far solved that only 1.5 per cent of the ministers fail to make connection. Lay preachers, schools, women, are all federated happily and are doing good work of all sorts under the shield of the union. Training is available for all, and the Women's Training College reported that fifty churches now have sisters at work.

It is, however, the ministry that has been receiving most attention, and the president took the unusual course of concentrating attention upon it. It seems that in thirty churches there are twelve pastors at seminaries, eight more who have not been trained, while the odd ten churches have to be grouped or supplied by lay preachers and students. It seems that the seminaries have not room enough for students who can supply the annual loss by death or age or emigration. The seminary principals say that the men who come in have not had a proper college education first, and that before they can take a three-year theological course, a two-year course in arts is needed: if this were lifted off the shoulders of the seminaries, so that they could do their proper work, they could cope with the situation. Meantime all honor to the men who try to serve the churches, untrained as they are: but as you and we found in the war, it is terribly hard to improvise out of raw material. Out of those who are actually at work, only one-third can manage to study efficiently.

Careful plans have been made, and endorsed by the assembly. It is one of the freaks of public action that a minor matter linked with these plans took all the attention and probably not a hundred people have yet realized what the denomination has committed itself to though all was printed at length. Matters of both principle and practice were thus accepted. The ministry is defined as an office within the church, conferred by the Holy Spirit and attested by a particular or local church; that it is a sacerdotal order is expressly denied. Ordination is defined as the act whereby the church delegates to a person ministerial functions which no one can properly take on himself. Suggestions are then made as to the best form of an ordination service, including the observance of the Lord's Supper.

Constructive proposals are made as to the recruiting for the ministry, from the Bible classes, the great schools and colleges, the lay preachers. A "college Sunday" is suggested, not to gather funds for any one seminary, but to educate the churches as to their responsibilities in providing candidates. Pre-collegiate and post-collegiate schemes of study are to be mapped out. For all these purposes a new committee will be established representing the seminaries and the union. It may be that twenty years hence, our sons will look back on this year as to be compared with the time when the Philadelphia Association decided to seek a charter for a Baptist college.

There were meetings enough to keep a team of three busily employed, with very little overlapping. One of the great institutions is the missionary sermon; this year, as an innovation, it was preached by a missionary. We have been very catholic and have generally invited a leader from another communion who was sound on missionary matters. This year we honored a man who has spent his working days in India, has been the secretary on the field, refusing even to come back to similar office at home. Herbert Anderson has a great reputation, but many of us were surprised to find how widely spread. The church was full long before the hour. It is one of the many signs that we are outgrowing our premises, perhaps even our towns. Perhaps we shall have to take a leaf out of your book, cast round for an Atlantic City and hire its leading theaters.

One of the joys of the year has been to see how the young are catered for. Sunday schools, camps and other insttutions are fostered regularly. Two or three great meetings were arranged specially for them. And on the platforms we had many young men speaking. As our Elijahs go down to the Jordan, there are many eager Elishas waiting for the mantle, able to wield it with dignity and power.

Annual Meetings

This is the time for the annual meetings of the churches, since most of them now end their fiscal year with Apr. 30. In Milwaukee, three churches have held their meetings, viz., Tabernacle, Grace and South.

Grace has had an exceptionally good year; has received a goodly number into the fellowship of the church, and had a balance in the treasury after all bills were paid. Pastor Phelps is in his sixth year and is happy. The church sent him to Atlantic City, with all expenses paid, as is its custom.

Tabernacle is beginning to feel the throb of new life under Pastor Speer, who began his work with them Apr. 1. It is making its financial campaign just now, and has formally voted to give as much to denominational benevolences as it spends for its own work. The budget for the year is $15,000. It is undertaking a campaign of enlargement in a near down-town location.

South held its annual meeting May 14. The year closed with a small balance in the treasury. Something near $33,000 passed through the treasurer's hands during the year, about $25,000 of which was for the new building. The church begins its year with much encouragement in its new location. Within seven Sundays after entering this new field the Sunday-school attendance had reached the mark which it had been in the old field. When it is realized that fully one-half of the Sunday school had been left in the old field to become the nucleus of the South Side Christian Center, this is certainly encouraging. The church is more united than for several years past, and the large number of young people are planning and working to make the church a vital factor in the new field. The church voted to send Pastor Shaw to Atlantic City, with expenses paid.

The Baptist Union

The Milwaukee Baptist Union held its annual meeting on May 15. This organization is now being felt in the life of our Baptist work in the city. The budget for the coming year is more than $10,000, which includes all expenditures.

This year the work will include negroes, Poles, several projects of extension, and the experiment of a Christian center at the old South Church. Besides this, it is fostering the church vacation school work, and this year there is a possibility of at least eight schools out of the twelve churches.

The annual meeting was held at the North Avenue Church, and was largely attended. Dr. H. C. Gleiss, of Detroit, was the speaker of the evening and his message was timely and helpful. The board of directors and the officers of the union, together with a few invited guests, met Doctor Gleiss at a noon luncheon at the Stratford-Arms on the day of the annual meeting. Pres. George L. Tifft was elected for the third time. Under his leadership the union has made some remarkable achievements.

Other Notes

Pastor V. N. Robbins has been asked by the church at Hudson to recall his resignation which he has done. It is very gratifying to the church and to the state that Pastor Robbins is to remain with us.

Rev. C. M. Salter has accepted the pastorate of the church at Appleton. This is an important field with many problems which we trust will be solved under Pastor Salter's administration.

Pastor George C. Alborn, of Wauwatosa, recently celebrated his twenty-fifth anniversary in the ministry. He was a member of the Free Baptist body and had much to do with helping bring about the union in this state. For several years he was the office secretary of the convention, and many years had been the recording secretary of the convention. His work in Wauwatosa has been crowned with many victories.

Field Secretary Ralph Barry recently assisted Pastor Graham and the River Falls Church in a series of meetings. There were twenty-five professions of faith.

The World Wide Guild girls at Warrens have undertaken to care for the church building for the summer in order to earn money with which to help some of their number to go to the Green Lake Assembly.

Rev. H. A. Essex is to supply the pulpit of the Cassville Church. It is hoped that he may find it in his heart to accept a call with these good people.

Pastor C. E. O'Bierne has begun his work with the Knapp-Woodville-Cady Creek parish. He opened his ministry by baptizing five persons. This is the result of placing Pastor O'Bierne in a needy field for two years. Now, this field must be divided and two men will do the work which he has been doing alone.

R. E. Gronseth has accepted the call to the Darien Church, and M. D. McDanel to the Wisconsin Rapids Church. These brethren graduate from the Northern Baptist Seminary in June.

Rev. J. B. Gleason, who has been the University pastor at Madison for several years, has accepted the position of executive secretary for the Wisconsin Christian Endeavor organization and begins his work Aug. 1.

Pastor E. A. Spees has begun his work at Mauston. Easter Sunday the church presented a pageant which was so largely attended that it had to be repeated later on so that all who cared to might see it. He is expecting large things to come to pass at Mauston.

District of Columbia

By H. W. O. Millington

The Metropolitan Church at its quarterly business meeting in April unanimously voted an increase of $400 to the salary of Pastor John Compton Ball and that he be sent to the Northern Baptist Convention at Atlantic City. It was also decided to purchase the property to the east of the present Sunday-school building that provision might be made for the rapidly growing Bible school. We are happy to report that the purchase has been made at a cost of $20,000. The purchase adds 5,000 square feet of ground to the church and when the additional building is erected will give a solid frontage of 155 feet on A St. The church now owns three-fourths of the entire block on A St. between Fifth and Sixth streets.

An unusual number of our churches are engaged in building enterprises. The Takoma Park Church, Rev. W. E. La-

Rue, pastor, has just arranged for the building of its auditorium and the lower part of its Sunday-school house at a cost of $65,000. It is expected that ground will be broken on May 20. Our Italian Mission is also entering upon a building enterprise in the construction of its Sunday-school house at a cost of $20,000. The financial obligations attendant upon this undertaking are to be met by the Italians themselves, which is probably the first time in the history of our work among Italian speaking peoples that this has been done. The Petworth Church is nearing the completion of a splendid edifice. This church is only ten years old, but in this short period it has wrought wonders in both a spiritual and material sense. Rev. F. Paul Langhorne has given a splendid demonstration of wise Christian leadership. The Congress Heights Church is making substantial progress under the leadership of Rev. E. E. Richardson. This church erected a Sunday-school house a few years ago and is entering upon the construction of its auditorium. When this is completed the church will have a most attractive and convenient property. The Wisconsin Avenue Church under the pastoral care of Rev. W. H. VanHorn is forging ahead. The progress of this church in recent months is quite encouraging. The people are entering upon a building enterprise. They have a splendid lot and with the completion of their building will, doubtless, take a great hold upon the rapidly growing community at Tennallytown. Our Immanuel Church is hoping to continue the construction of its new building which, while pretty well along, is yet far from completion. The building is sufficiently far advanced, however, to give indication of the imposing appearance it will make when finally completed. Rev. Gove G. Johnson is to be congratulated on the near completion of this great undertaking. The Anacostia Church has just purchased pews for its auditorium and when these are put in place will have a most comfortable room in which to worship. Rev. A. Richardson is doing good work as pastor. The Bethany Church under the pastoral care of Rev. H. T. Stevenson is contemplating the erection of an auditorium in addition to the Sunday-school building which has been used for some years. Congregations are large and there is evident need of enlarged accommodations. The church is in the midst of a splendid community and has a prospect of indefinite growth.

Annual Meeting of the Detroit Baptist Union

The Detroit Baptist Union, in harmony with other denominational agencies, closed its fiscal year on April 30. On Tuesday afternoon and evening, May 8, the annual meeting was held in the Woodward Avenue Church. This has grown to be the outstanding event among Baptists in Detroit.

The business session is called at 3 p. m., but for half an hour preceding, a devotional period is provided led by some choice soul, this year by Mrs. Herman Lang. Her choice of hymns and scripture and beautiful exposition prepared every heart for the session that followed.

President William S. Power presided with grace and tact.

The reading of minutes was quickly done when Doctor Gleiss gave an enlightening résumé of the doings of the board of trustees and the superintendent during the past quarter. The board of trustees is a carefully selected group of pastors and laymen, twenty-five in number, with twelve to fifteen additional committeemen who meet monthly and carry the burden of the responsibility and labor involved in an ambitious evangelistic, missionary, educational and constructive program in this great city. There are always several items of business touching property interests because even the board of trustees cannot transfer real estate or make mortgages without the authority of the board of managers, the larger body.

Rev. R. L. Bradby, pastor of the great Second Church and superintendent of the work among the negroes, gave his annual report covering the assistance given for new houses of worship for our negro brethren, the work of the Christian center and its wide-spread influence along social, domestic, educational lines for the negro group and then gave the latest word as to the present migration of southern negroes who are coming to Detroit by the thousands. Detroit already has thirty-nine negro Baptist churches besides missions and Sunday schools. What must we expect in one or two years more? The great industrial plants of Detroit are calling for these vigorous workers by the hundreds and the wages offered are almost beyond belief as compared with southern wage scales. Then there are greater freedom and educational opportunities. It means a tremendous responsibility for Baptists as a very large percentage are either members of, or inclined toward, the Baptist church.

The Women's Auxiliary, through its secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Gleiss, reported for that representative body of faithful women, who saved the day for us this year by making it possible for the retention of every one of our women missionaries. Saturday afternoon, April 28, at the First Church, under their auspices there was held a unique service at which 400 children representing eighteen nationalities, were brought together in a program of intense interest, given by these scholars from the Sunday schools of our Baptist foreign-speaking groups. There was an exhibition from the industrial schools maintained, much music and songs and flags and marching that finally brought them to the dining room where ice cream was distributed. Large busses were provided by the city to transport the children to and from the church. Mrs. George D. Huston told that story.

The big event of the afternoon was the presentation of missionary pastors and the women missionaries by Superintendent Gleiss and each in his or her own way told of their individual task. There are twenty missionary pastors and seven women missionaries employed in the metropolitan area. These were thrilling recitals even though brief and the extent of the work being done was a revelation to many of those in attendance. Every undertaking is prosperous, but the calls for greatly needed houses of worship and additional workers were challenges that well-nigh broke the hearts of those present as the limits of our resources are so meager. Doctor Taylor offered a most touching prayer at this juncture, asking of the Father of Mercies that unknown resources should be vouchsafed to meet the great needs of this rapidly growing city.

Dr. M. C. Pearson, executive secretary of the Detroit Council of Churches, spoke of the great pleasure it gave him to be present, as he is every year, and how large a place the Detroit Baptists have in the large Protestant program in Detroit.

The afternoon session covered four long hours, but it seemed all too short to include all that should be said and done.

At 6:45 a reception was held in the Memorial Hall of the Woodward Avenue church with Doctors Taylor, Smith, Gleiss, Pearson, officers and missionary workers in line.

At 7:15 the great company to the number of over 500 sat down to the dinner the ladies of the Woodward Avenue church had prepared.

President Power called for order at 8:15. Superintendent Gleiss gave the annual report of the board of managers. It was a résumé of the past year's work—the treasurer's report showing receipts and expenditures of over $300,000. New church edifices for Royal Oak, at a cost of $85,000; Redford, at a cost of over $65,000; Northwestern, at a cost of over $87,000; Grand River Avenue, at a cost of nearly $10,000; Second Polish, at a cost of $25,000; and a new building for the St. Clair Heights church, now in process, to cost $35,000. A site has been secured and paid for for the greatly needed First Polish church and Christian Center on the West Side, plans prepared and only waiting for needed funds to proceed. This is the largest Polish Baptist church in any city in America. A new church has been organized at Dearborn, a fourth Roumanian work begun, a new Ukrainian, a choice site secured for a much needed work at Gratiot on the East Side, with several mission Sunday schools already begun and many more needed. It has been a great year—the greatest in all the history of the Detroit Baptist Union. The report went into the remarkable evangelistic results, the church school, young people's work, and vacation Bible schools. Rev. B. T. Leonard, religious work director, is doing a fine piece of work in his important department.

Then there was a look ahead—an objective that calls for much more than a million dollars. Mention was made of the need for a children's home and a Baptist hospital and other challenges that confront us at the opening of a new fiscal year.

To prove to Doctor Gleiss that his services are appreciated, it was voted to send him to the Baptist World Alliance, at Stockholm and to the continent. Treasurer Matheson assured him that not a cent of the missionary funds of the union would go to pay his expenses, as loving friends had provided the money.

Dr. John E. Smith, the lately appointed director of Baptist work in Michigan, expressed his amazement at the breadth and quantity of the work being done in the Detroit Baptist area. He spoke of the coming session of the Michigan Convention at Hillsdale and reminded his hearers that he was proud that Detroit is in Michigan.

Dr. M. C. Pearson, executive secretary of the Detroit Council of Churches, told of his work and how sixteen denominations were presenting a solid Protestant front in Detroit and how much he appreciated the spirit and effectiveness of the Baptists.

When President Power introduced Doctor Taylor, president of the Northern Baptist Convention, every one stood and waved him a Chautauqua salute. His theme proper was a recital of how he came to go to Europe last summer, of the trip, his visit of the Baptist statesmen in England and then on to the continent and the weeks spent in Czecho-Slovakia, of the political, economic and religious changes that are coming in that newly formed state in Europe, and what a large place the Baptists are playing in the equation. It was a wonderful story told in a fascinating manner which held the great company spellbound, as he mingled amusing experiences with the thrilling and the almost tragic.

Convention of Rocky Mountain District of Women's Home and Foreign Missions

By Mrs. John Grainger

The convention of the Rocky Mountain District of Women's Home and Foreign Missions came to a triumphant close on the evening of May 2, after a time of spiritual feasting that united the women of the three states, Colorado, Utah and Wyoming, into one great band for the Master's service.

Every one privileged to attend this convention pronounced it one of the greatest and most spiritual conventions. The spirit of the Master brooded over the women of the Rocky Mountain District as they gathered in the First Church of Cheyenne, Wyo., to discuss and plan the furtherance of his work. The women of Cheyenne First Church proved themselves daughters of the King, ready and able to serve at any task, great or small, required to make the meeting one of unsurpassed harmony. Not one ripple marred the spiritual atmosphere. Delegates were met at the trains as far as possible. Meals were served in the gymnasium of the church. This gave much time for conferences and allowed the women to become acquainted as we can only become acquainted when gathered about the table with the Lord of hosts presiding over all. God bless the Marthas of the convention!

The president, Mrs. F. I. Smith of Denver, presided. Almost a hundred per cent of the members of the board were present. "Go forward," the slogan of the convention, was the subject of the spirited and inspirational addresses given by the leaders.

We felt that as we planned our program for the coming year:

Brooding above the women as they gathered to work and plan
Was the Master, saying: "My daughters will do the best they can."
And how his heart was gladdened as he looked down from above
On that mass of happy women—each doing a service of love.
And each had her task—you yours—and me mine—
And each did her prayerful best—
To glorify the Master—in this district of the West.

A banquet for the World Wide Guild Girls was a feature of the Tuesday evening program. One hundred women and girls gathered at the tables and feasted body and soul.

The officers who will form the board are: Mrs. F. I. Smith of Denver, president and chairman; Mrs. Robert F. Jones of Denver, administrative vice-president; Mrs. J. A. Weaver, foreign vice-president; Mrs. E. T. Wilson, home vice-president; Mrs. J. E. Hughingson, treasurer; Mrs. D. D. Gross, recording secretary; Mrs. Charles Smarjian, secretary.

District secretaries of the various lines of work: World Wide Guild Work, Mrs. R. S. Hobson, Denver; Children's World Crusade, Mrs. C. M. Stoltz; White Cross, Mrs. Thomas Garrett; student enrolment, Miss Maude Ditmars; prayer group leader, Mrs. B. F. Fry; extension secretary, Mrs. J. E. Reynolds. With the exception of Mrs. J. A. Weaver, all of the above women are of Denver, Colo. where headquarters are located.

State secretaries are: For Colorado Mrs. J. I. McGonigle of Pueblo; Wyoming, Mrs. John Grainger, of Cheyenne Utah, Mrs. F. R. Payne, of Salt Lake City.

All of the chosen officers were unanimously elected and the work of the Western District was gladly trusted to their hands.

MAINE

The Emmanuel Church, Portland, has projected a building campaign. As a preliminary step the services of the architectural department of the Home Mission Society have been engaged. When the building is erected, it will probably be unsurpassed in beauty and equipment by any church in New England.

Farmington: The work of Pastor Andem and of his wide awake church is significant, not only for the breadth of its community service, but for its helpful ministries to the students of the state normal school. A large number of these are in attendance at the Sunday school and all church services, and many have been baptized into the membership of the church, while yet others have united with their churches at home. What a pastor and a church may do for a school is well exemplified at Farmington.

Waterville: On Sunday, May 6, after a helpful and tender sermon, Pastor Warren Quarrington of the First Church extended the hand of fellowship to thirty-two persons, most of whom had been recently baptized. Several college students were in the number.

The associations are in progress. They are characterized by good attendance, spiritual interest, and manifest desire to meet the conditions of the advancing kingdom, at home and abroad. Rev. A. C. Darrow of Burma, Miss Clarissa Hewey of China, and Miss Ida M. Cheesbrough of New York, are aiding in the meetings.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

The annual meeting of the Women's United Mission Society was held recently at the First Church, Nashua. The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Mary B. Macomber, New London; first vice-president, Mrs. Alice Folsom, Nashua; second vice-president, Mrs. Isaac Higginbotham, Portsmouth; secretary, Mrs. W. C. Goodwin, Northwood; treasurer, Mrs. Andrew L. Felker, Laconia; literary secretary, Mrs. Susie Hadcock, Manchester. A splendid program was given, including two plays and a W. W. G. banquet.

MASSACHUSETTS

The early resignation of Dr. J. J. Ross from the pastorate of the Ruggles Street Church, brings to a head a condition that has been slowly gathering for several years. In one respect, it is the old question of a changed environment; in another, the newer question of outside control. The entire district around the church has become virtually a black belt. Eighteen thousand out of 20,000, the pastor tells us, are negroes who are well provided for in their own churches. Thus the problem of another location and that of freedom to meet it with their own leadership as well as with financial help from the Social Union, has to be faced. In its control Ruggles Street is virtually a Social Union church. Even when the pastor is fine spirited and fair and the Social Union committee likewise, as they are both now, it is difficult to escape a delicate and awkward situation. Dr. Ross's resignation coming so soon, will bring up for consideration all sides of the arrangement which will have full and frank Christian treatment. All of the Baptist community warmly welcomed Dr. Ross, convinced that he was an ideal leader for that hard and interesting field. And it is hoped to keep him in Boston.

Rev. George O. Lawson has rounded out three good years at the Union Square Church, Somerville. Everything is strengthened and the response to the pastor is quick and full. He appeals strongly to young men, many of whom have been baptized. A new Sunday-school building is projected, and funds are growing. The church property is kept up to date and modern. Pastor Lawson has marked confidence and affection, and is too modest to say much about his success.

At Maplewood, in the Malden district, Pastor H. C. Abbott reports substantial accessions in church and Sunday school. He is in his sixth year, and deepens in his devotion to his people and in his gratitude for their hearty co-operation.

The Boston Baptist Bethel and City Mission Society gave its annual meeting in the nature of a "Baptist get-together in the Dudley Street Church on May 1. All the many sided work was set forth and emphasized, and inspirational addresses given by Miss Marion W. Lathrop, Mrs. Florence C. Thomas, Dr. J. C. Massee and Dr. Hugh A. Heath. The new pastors who are backed by the society were present and spoke informingly about their plans and encouragements: Rev. C. L. Chamberlain, Fields Corners; Rev. H. L. Chapman, Boston Bethel; Rev. E. T. Loomis, South Boston, and Rev. C. E. Vermillion, East Boston. There has recently been a full change in the administration of the society's affairs, but Rev. Charles L. Page continues in the directorship of the field work.

NEW YORK

Despite the fact that conditions near Waverly have been unsettled because of the railroad strike, the First Church reports that $5,366 was raised for current expense and $2,687 for the New World Movement. During the past six months a week day school of religious education has been conducted with success. A board of religious education was elected which will have charge of all educational activities of the church. A special committee was appointed to collect all pledges to the New World Movement during the coming year. The hundredth anniversary of the church will be celebrated in June, 1924. During the four years of the pastorate of Rev. Walter Henry Dallman, steady progress has been made.

Harold Titus, a senior at Rochester Theological Seminary, was ordained at the Lake Avenue Church, May 10. President Clarence A. Barbour delivered the ordination sermon. Mr. Alfred E. Isaac was moderator, and F. G. Reynolds clerk.

The commencement class this year at the Biblical Seminary, New York City, will be the largest in the history of the school—forty-eight persons. The baccalaureate sermon will be preached on May 27 by President Wilbert W. White at the Swedish Bethesda Church. Commencement exercises will be held May 29 at 8 o'clock in the Central Presbyterian Church. Dr. R. H. Knubel, president of the United Lutheran Church, will be the speaker. This year has been an unusually interesting one at the seminary, one of the notable events being the exceptionally splendid series of lectures given by specialists from outside the seminary. Several men have been added to the faculty. The summer term will open June 20 and continue to July 21.

The First Church, Buffalo, recently presented the pastor, Rev. Samuel Russell, a car for his use. Besides paying his expenses to the Northern Convention, it also gave Mrs. Russell $250, so that she and their daughter might also attend.

NEW JERSEY

The annual meeting of the First Church, Pleasantville, was held recently. The total income from all sources was $4,500. The income four and a half years ago was $1,799. Of the amount given by the church, over $1,000 was contributed to the New World Movement, Russia and the Near East. This is commendable when it is remembered that this was accomplished by an active membership of only eighty-five, although the actual enrolment is 115.

The closing exercises of the International Seminary will be held May 31, at 3:00 p. m., in the First Church, East Orange. The address will be given by Judge F. W. Freeman of Denver. Friends of the seminary are invited to attend this meeting. The board of trustees will meet at the seminary on the afternoon of the same day. Rev. Joseph C. Hazen delivered the annual sermon May 20 at North Orange Church, of which he is pastor. On the evening of the same day, Dr. James H. Franklin preached the missionary sermon in the Peddie Memorial Church, Newark.

WEST VIRGINIA

The Temple of Charleston recently held its annual meeting. The year showed a unprecedented gain in membership, more than 500 new members having been received. Despite cramped facilities, the school attendance is near the 700 mark. A $40,000 budget of current expense is being carried. It is expected that $125,000 will be contributed within the coming year for the building fund. Associate pastor, Rev. Ralph C. Ostergren, gave a splendid report covering the year as related to the completion of the pastorate of Rev. E. Le Roy Dakin and the beginning of that of Rev. Clarence W. Kemper four months ago. During that time eighty new members were received, and the recent organization of Martin's school mission as a definite branch church of the Temple, will add thirty or forty more members. The present membership is 1,350. A contract has been let for $312,400 for the new buildings exclusive of furnishings.

EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA

The annual meeting of the Ebenezer Church, Pittston, disclosed a healthy state in finances and work accomplished. Six thousand dollars was raised for all purposes; $1,250 for missions and benevolence; all bills were paid and a surplus is in the treasury. Sixteen new members were added to the membership, fifteen by baptism. Rev. James Taylor is beginning the fourth year of his ministry. In that time one fourth of the present church membership has been received, a new parsonage bought, the church redecorated, the mission-giving increased ten times, and a large place made for this old church, now in the Italian quarter, in the religious life of the city. This church has the largest Sunday evening congregation in the city.

WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

The annual business meeting of the church at Monongahela was held May 9. The Sunday school has an enrolment of 415 and the church a membership of 501. During the year the building was repaired and painted, new hymn books were purchased, a new organ was installed, and equipment added to the church school. Reports show all bills paid and a balance in the treasury. Pastor Havard Griffith has been chosen a member of the Ridgeview Assembly faculty and will be an instructor in church history.

The annual meeting of the First Church, Clarion, was held May 2. The meeting was of unusual importance due to the fact that the mortgage which has been held on the parsonage for seventeen years was burned. The year closed with all debts paid and $366 in the treasury. It was voted to start an improvement fund to enlarge the church building. A committee was appointed to formulate plans which will be presented for approval. Last year the heating system was improved at a cost of $529, and money has been promised for other minor renovations. The present pastor, Rev. Charles F. Smalley, has been with the church four years. During that time a debt of $5,300 has been paid, a furnace installed in the parsonage and the attendance at the services increased. There is growing interest upon the part of all members in the general work of the denomination.

The First Church, Greenville, held its annual meeting May 9. The financial report showed a total expenditure of $8,400, $5,000 of which was used for current expenses and the remaining $3,400 was contributed to benevolences. About $2,500 was given to the New World Movement. Seventeen new members were received during the year. Reports from the various organizations indicated unusual activity. The pastor, Rev. Harvey W. Funk, suggested several goals for the coming year, including advances in evangelism, education and benevolences.

Mississippi Valley

OHIO

The East Cleveland Church closed a successful year. Reports indicated that over $27,000 had been raised for all purposes, $11,000 of which was contributed to the New World Movement. During the year there were sixty-five additions to the membership, thirty-five by baptism. The Sunday school is well organized, graded, and meets in five separate departments. The church was organized in 1900 in a growing residential section of Cleveland. It now has 530 members and property valued at $150,000. The pastor, Rev. Millard Brelsford, is beginning the fifth year of his second ministry with the church.

One of the features of the work of the First Church, Lima, is the publication of a weekly paper by the publicity committee of the church, which consists of five young business men. The front page of the paper is devoted to local Baptist news, the back to world wide Baptist news and missionary work, while the center pages contain a sermon by the pastor, Rev. Warren L. Steeves. Besides being mailed to every member of the church, the paper is distributed at the hotels. Mr. Steeves also writes a weekly sermon for the newspapers.

Dayton Association

The ministers of the Dayton Association held their last meeting before fall, May 7. Pastor Brown of Xenia gave an excellent and helpful address on personal evangelism. The report of the churches show a decided increase.

The following brethren were elected: Pres., W. F. Staley of Central Church, Dayton; vice-pres., Charles Walsh, Sidney; secy., J. E. Fosnight, Colorado Avenue, Dayton; treas., F. F. Fenner, Piqua.

The First Church, Dayton, held its annual meeting May 11. Nearly three hundred persons were present. This church is a large donor to the New World Movement, besides many of its members being liberal to private enterprises. A local budget of $27,000 was adopted with enthusiasm. Dr. W. H. Geistweit has the endorsement of the whole church for a splendid program.—Philip Bauer.

INDIANA

Rev. D. Heitmeyer, who has been pastor of the church at Linton for three and a half years, has accepted the call of the First Church, Crawfordsville. He will begin his new work June 10. During his pastorate at Linton, 145 new members were received, the church house was redecorated and repaired, a parsonage was purchased, and contributions to benevolences increased 200 per cent.

Rev. R. B. Deer has entered upon the third year of his ministry at the First Church, Terre Haute. During the two years, 128 people have united with the church by baptism, 112 by letter, 41 by experience and 3 by restoration, making a total of 284; the income has increased 75 per cent; the church has paid 90 per cent of its pledges due on the New World Movement. Ninety-six people have signed the tithers' pledge and every department has made marked progress.

ILLINOIS

The First Church, Freeport, recently held its annual meeting. The total budget for the year was $10,826 of which $3,065 was for world missions, and $2,294 for the building fund. The church subscribed $4,000 to the Shurtleff College endowment fund in cash and pledges redeemable in five years. The clerk reported the membership as 434. The most important business transaction was the unanimous vote instructing the board of trustees to acquire more property in a suitable location for the erection of a modern educational building. According to tentative plans the building will be constructed on the order of an apartment building, of brick, and will probably cost between $40,000 and $50,000. Rev. Frank G. Sayers is pastor.

THE FIRST CHURCH, CARBONDALE, was fortunate in securing the services of Rev. J. B. McMinn for evangelistic meetings the latter part of September, 1922. His work was so satisfactory that a call was extended which he accepted. There have been eighty-four additions to the membership, and the treasurer reports that there is a substantial balance on hand in the current expense fund. The church recently purchased a large dwelling for a parsonage at a cost of $10,000.

ON MAY 6, THIRTY-FIVE NEW MEMBERS were received by the First Church, Chicago. Under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. Perry J. Stackhouse, this church is making steady and substantial progress. Since the beginning of his pastorate nineteen months ago, there have been 100 additions to the membership. During the past year $23,000 was contributed for current expenses and benevolences, and nearly $7,500 has been pledged for the new Sunday school and community house. The new building will probably be completed in the fall.

THE MISSION UNION OF THE Chicago Association held its last all-day meeting before the summer vacation on May 8 at the Evanston Church. Forty-nine circles were represented. Doctor Proctor of Shanghai College delivered an address on education in China, urging union schools and colleges. Other speakers were, Rev. A. H. Gage, Mrs. A. F. Beckford and Rev. J. M. Hestenes.

SINCE THE ORGANIZATION OF THE University Church at the University of Illinois in 1912, forty-five students who have gone from the church are now either in the ministry, missionary service, theological seminary or in responsible positions on college and university faculties in the United States, Canada and the Orient. In addition, many in other professions are in places of active leadership in churches all over the country. Four college men have recently been received into the church by baptism. This summer eight students will go as delegates from the church to the Lake Geneva Student Conference, and two will attend the state summer assembly. Rev. Martin S. Bryant is pastor.

THE FIRST CHURCH, DECATUR, recently sold its down-town location and purchased a site in the residence section of the city. On this site the church expects to erect a modern building to cost approximately $150,000. Work will begin on the new edifice at an early date. Rev. T. H. Marsh, the pastor, is in the eighth year of his ministry. A greatly enlarged program of activities is anticipated with more efficient equipment. As the result of special meetings recently conducted by Evangelist J. L. Meads of Chicago, there were twenty additions to the membership.

MICHIGAN

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE Ministers' Aid Society of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin, was held in Fenton at the Minister's Home, May 2. The following officers were elected: Pres., F. P. Beaver, Dayton; vice-pres., W. W. Smith, Detroit; treas., Grant J. Brown, Flint; recording secy., Rev. J. W. Priest, Sturgis; auditor, Willis Hough, Detroit. The following new trustees were elected: Rev. H. S. Hyde, Racine; Rev. Perry J. Stackhouse, Chicago; and Rev. George A. Sheets, Rock Island. The home is in good condition. There are thirteen occupants and four others will enter soon. Miss LaTourette is the capable superintendent of the home. Sorrow was felt at the loss of Mr. Bruce Macdonald, who for fourteen years was the treasurer of the society, and Dr. Judson B. Thomas, who had served as trustee for fourteen years. The meeting this year was of unusual interest because of the presence of Dr. P. C. Wright of the M & M Board.

AT A RECENT MEETING OF THE MARSHALL Church, it was voted to release Pastor J. Burt Bouwman for five months of the year so that he can continue his work at the University of Chicago. During that time he will spend four days at the university and the remainder of the week with his church. The other seven months of the year will be devoted entirely to his pastoral work. During the last two years in Marshall, Mr. Bouwman has been working for his master's degree at Kalamazoo which he expects to receive at the June commencement. Mr. Bouwman's family will continue to reside in Marshall.

A SPECIAL MEETING OF THE KALAMAZOO River Association was called at Marshall, May 7, for the purpose of ordaining Mr. Richard Oosting. There were fifteen delegates present. Mr. Oosting is a graduate of Kalamazoo and the University of Chicago, and is a close friend of Rev. J. Burt Bouwman, who preached the ordination sermon. Rev. E. W. Powell of the First Church, Kalamazoo, was moderator, and F. T. Downing, clerk. Mr. Oosting has received a call to the pastorate of the church at Shinnston, W. Va.

IOWA

REV. A. G. LAGERQUIST, one of the state district superintendents, reports favorably from his territory. During April he visited thirty churches and attended the B. Y. P. U. associations at Malvern and Massena.

REPORTS INDICATE THAT the Iowa Falls Assembly will be well attended this summer. Rev. V. N. Witter, director of religious education, is arousing enthusiasm for the meeting.

PASTOR STAPLES OF CENTERVILLE is completing his eighth year of service with the church. He baptized seven young people recently.

REV. L. W. CHILDS closed his ministry at Udell and will take up his work at Blaksburg in connection with the pastorate at Unionville.

REV. G. W. FOGG recently finished his work at Corydon and is open for another pastorate.

THE CHURCH AT SEYMOUR is looking for a pastor, Rev. C. G. Heady having recently closed his work on that field.

TWELVE NEW MEMBERS were given the hand of fellowship May 6 by Chaplain J. Orrin Gould, pastor of the University Church, Des Moines. The annual meeting was held May 9 and reports given indicated splendid progress. During the past six months thirty-four new members were received. The church has a life service league of seventy members, probably the largest organization of its kind in the state. The first representatives from the church to go on the foreign field will be Mr. Bernard W. Armstrong and Miss Rhoda Brokolm, who sail early in September for Africa.

REV. ROY E. YORK, who has been doing some active work in the South with Ft. Worth, Texas, as his headquarters, stil wishes to be addressed at Iowa City. At a meeting recently held at Hobart, Okla., there were ninety conversions.

Rev. H. B. Cox has been pastor of the Calvary Church, Davenport, for six months. The church is now out of debt and on a substantial financial basis. As the result of an evangelistic campaign held recently, twenty-four new members were received.

During April, Rev. J. F. Catlin, pastor of the First Church, Council Bluffs, baptized fifteen candidates, received eight new members by letter and two by experience. At the annual meeting it was voted to increase the pastor's salary $100 per year. The amount raised during the year for benevolence was $2,569. The church expects soon to let a contract for its new meeting house.

The women of the Walnut Street Church, Waterloo, worked strenuously to raise money for the Continuation Fund. The total amount secured was $1,341. The money was gathered from mite boxes, two W. W. G. chapters, the Crusaders, a church supper, bake sale, musicale and pledges. For the past six weeks two mission study classes have been conducted on Sunday, which proved helpful. A play, "The Pill Bottle," was given May 6.

MINNESOTA

Calvary Church, Minneapolis, celebrated its fortieth anniversary May 3-7. The sermon on May 6 was given by Dr. John A. Earl on the subject, "Call to Progress," based upon the history of the past forty years and the outlook for the future. A communion service was held in the afternoon. At the evening service a number of pastors and laymen delivered appreciative estimates of the value and worth of the church to the city, community and the world. The exercises closed Monday evening with an anniversary dinner served in the fashion of forty years ago. The church is expecting to erect a parish house which will contain adequate equipment for an enlarged program of social and educational work this coming year. Rev. John H. McLean is in his fourth year of ministry.

NEBRASKA

Early in the year a committee outlined a spiritual, educational, social, numerical and material program for the First Church, Kearney. A printed copy of the program was given to every family. The program provides that the state denominational paper goes into every home and that the circulation of The Baptist and Missions shall equal 15 per cent of resident members. Provision was also made for a school of missions and a vacation Bible school. Evangelism has been especially stressed with successful results. Rev. D. I. Boon is pastor.

Twenty-four new members recently received the hand of fellowship at the First Church, Fremont. The total membership is 390, of whom ninety-one have been added during the past two years. Reports showed that $30,000 was given to missions, current expenses and the building fund. Rev. Fred Young is pastor.

KANSAS

Thirty churches were represented at the annual meeting of the Southeastern Kansas Association. These churches reported a membership of 6, 507, a net gain for the year of 506. The Sunday schools reported an enrolment of 5,765, a net gain of 1,386 over last year. During the three years Doctor Tanner has been superintendent of missions the association has doubled its membership, and in appreciation of his services it was voted to substantially increase his salary. Last year he made 2,200 visits, and in his evangelistic program over 300 persons were baptized. There are many strong churches and leaders in this association.

As the result of special meetings conducted recently by Rev. J. J. Griffen, Garden City, there were twenty additions to the membership of the Lyons Church. The church entertained the Arkansas Valley Association April 24-26. Progress is being made under the leadership of Pastor S. F. Busfurd.

Rocky Mountain States

COLORADO

On May 6, fifty new members received the hand of fellowship at the First Church, Colorado Springs. There have been seventy-seven additions to the membership since January 1. The El Paso Sunday-school association held its annual convention with the church May 8-9. Rev. Charles A. Fulton is pastor.

MONTANA

At the annual meeting of the First Church, Billings, reports showed that the total membership is now 514; $39,359 was raised for all purposes; the first unit of the new $100,000 church building will be ready for occupancy early in the fall. The pastor, Rev. William Drummond Whan, will soon enter upon his fifth year of service.

WYOMING

State Convention

The twenty-second annual convention of Wyoming Baptists was held in the First Church, Cheyenne, May 3-4. It was considered by the "old timers" to be the best state convention ever held. This was due in part because the convention was preceded in the same church by the annual meeting of the Rocky Mountain District of the women's societies, because of the splendid representation from the various churches and because of the splendid spirit of unanimity which prevailed throughout the meetings.

Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Manley of Ongole, India, were guests. It is hoped that they will be able to return to the state assembly meeting this summer.

The climax of the meetings was reached on the closing night when the convention showed its appreciation of the services of the executive secretary, Rev. J. F. Blodgett, who has acted in that capacity for ten years.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Pres., Mr. E. Y. Booker; vice-pres., Mr. A. S. Jesing; recording secy., Rev. R. H. Moorman; treas., Mr. H. K. Burdick.—R. H. Moorman.

Michigan State Convention

By George H. Waid

The Michigan Convention held its eighty-eighth annual meeting May 14-17 at the College Church, Hillsdale.

Ministers' Conference

The Ministers' Conference under the presidency of H. A. Waite, of Owosso, opened the sessions Monday evening with an address by Rev. Albert Johnson of Chicago on the subject "What Shall We Do in the Present Denominational Crisis." Rev. W. T. Woodhouse, of Ionia, spoke on the topic "On the March;" Rev. E. Dawkins of Royal Oak, "The Ten Per Cent Baptist;" Rev. E. R. Allen of Bay City, "Baptist Foundations" and Rev. Albert Johnson of Chicago, concluded the sessions.

The following officers were elected: Pres., A H. Hanley, Saginaw; vice-pres., W. A. Bliss, Belding; secy.-treas., A. W. Lyons, Muskegon Heights.

The Women's Sessions

The Woman's Mission Society of the state held its usual inspiring sessions on Tuesday morning at the College Church. Mrs. Edward Wilson presided. Reports were given by the various secretaries. All departments showed material gains and progress. At the roll call all the associations were represented by secretaries or delegates. Miss F. E. Grant reported for the Continuation Campaign, especially the campaign for the new dormitory for women at Kalamazoo College. The amount pledged is $62,000 for that enterprise, of which $40,000 has been paid. All the officers were reelected.

Convention Sessions

The large College Church auditorium was filled early for the opening session. Pres. Ralph E. Jennings of Paw Paw called the convention to order, and W. G. Spencer, the new president of Hillsdale College, gave a hearty welcome to the Baptists of Michigan. President Jennings gave his address in vivid fashion on "The Career of an Average Baptist Layman." The convention sermon was delivered by Rev. H. M. Ford, lately pastor of the College Church, Hillsdale, who spoke in part of the universal prayer, "Thy Kingdom Come."

The Tuesday evening session was appropriately an educational night. Doctor Spencer was the host of Dr. Allan Hoben, president of Kalamazoo, who spoke of the unfinished temple at Jerusalem and the discouraged people as depicted by Haggai, and applied this trenchant lesson to the unfinished educational task of Baptists in both colleges of Michigan.

On Wednesday morning, Dr. John E. Smith gave a report of progress and work in the state. Following this report, short addresses were given by field workers, Rev. G. W. Laurence for the rural department; Rev. M. L. Williams for religious education; Rev. F. L. Currey for evangelism; Rev. C. R. Jones for the upper peninsula; and Rev. Joshua Roberts, who has labored eighteen years with the state convention, spoke of the conditions in the northern part of the lower peninsula.

A new feature of the convention was the holding of the chapel exercises of the college each morning in the auditorium. The delegates repaired to the galleries while the students entirely filled the main floor and choir platform. Doctor Hoben led the exercises on Wednesday morning and Doctor Spencer on Thursday. This is the usual daily college exercise and the delegates were strongly impressed.

Mr. Smith G. Young gave the treasurer's report. The total income for the year was $102,204 of which $40,796 was received from the General Board of Promotion. The salaries and expenses of the field forces were $27,466, and the salaries of the missionary pastors were $24,724. The permanent funds of the convention amount to $97,575. About $20,000 was spent for new buildings. Dr. Lemuel C. Barnes, of the Home Mission Society, was a welcome guest and speaker. The afternoon sessions were devoted to conferences.

The fellowship suppers were combined under Toastmaster Grant M. Hudson. Following supper Dr. L. C. Barnes delivered another message of inspiration on "Michigan Eastward." Dr. Franklin W. Sweet of Cleveland spoke on "The Kingdom of Heaven is at Hand."

On Wednesday the following officers were elected: Pres., George A. Prescott, Tawas City; first vice-pres., J. R. Estes, Muskegon; second vice-pres., Mrs. Smith G. Young; third vice-pres., W. G. Spencer, Hillsdale; fourth vice-pres., F. B. Bachelor, Kalamazoo; fifth vice-pres., L. A. Sharp, Alma; sixth vice-pres., H. C. Gleiss, Detroit; seventh vice-pres, W. W. Smith, Detroit; rec. secy., George H. Waid, Capac; treas., Smith G. Young, Lansing.

Promotion committee members: Mrs. Edward Wilson, Detroit; R. E. Jennings, Paw Paw; Miss Florence Grant, Birmingham; S. B. Crandall, Battle Creek.

Place of next convention—Kalamazoo. Convention sermon, George Dawkins, Royal Oak; alternate, H. A. Waite, Owosso.

The only address on Thursday was given by Mrs. G. G. Crozier of Assam.

The attendance was reported as 426 from outside Hillsdale and thirty-nine local registrations, making a total of 465.

On Thursday evening, Dr. Mark Sanborn, Detroit, spoke to a large gathering of young people on the present day challenge to Baptist young people.

Guests of the convention were: Rev. G. G. Crozier; Mr. and Mrs. Collett, home on furlough from the Bengal-Orissa field; Mrs. Milo J. Coldren also from the Bengal-Orissa field, but now retired; Miss Pott from Hopi Indian field Arizona; and John C. Rooney who was not deterred by his recent illness from attending the convention.

The resolutions committee reported through Rev. C. S. Burns, Ypsilanti After expressing its appreciation of the hospitality of the Hillsdale people, the committee urged the churches of Michigan to fulfill their New World Movement obligations; endorsed the stand taken by President Harding favoring entry into the world court; urged proper law enforcement; endorsed the organization of the Lord's Day Alliance; and urged attendance at the Kalamazoo Summer Assembly.

All the meetings were characterized by a harmonious spirit and a feeling of cheerful optimism.

Missions in Hungary

By Attila Csopjak

THE consequence of the world war was that Hungary has lost two-thirds of its territories and 60 per cent of its population. Before the war there were 24,000 Baptists, now there are only 7,000. The interest in the gospel is, by the blessing of our good God, now very great. The number of our members increased during two years 30 per cent. In the year 1922—according to our declarations till now—1,075 persons were converted and desired baptism. Now there are 9,209 Baptists in Hungary. Including the number of our children and friends confessing our principles, we have in our religion approximately 16,000 souls. In our school for preachers there are twenty-two scholars who will be taught by the lectures of five professors. The progress of our literature is astonishingly favorable. We have three Hungarian newspapers and one German newspaper. The Peace Messenger—one of the Hungarian papers—will be issued in 4,600 copies twice a month. Therefore, in regard to the 9,200 Baptists every two members will receive a copy of this paper. But this paper will be sent also abroad, so we can count a copy

CONDUCTED BY WILLIAM LESTER

HOW TO CHOOSE ORGAN MUSIC

By Edwin H. Pierce

In churches worthy of the name, and I do not refer to any one denomination, the communicants regard even the church building as a holy place, where they may realize the presence of God. They wish all the surroundings and conditions to minister to this end, including the architecture, the ornaments, their own deportment while present, and above all, the music. This demands music of particular type, sharply distinguished from that in use for secular purposes. Its original basis was the ancient "Gregorian tones," and in early ages it was even distinguished by its style of counterpoint, the "chord of 6-4 on the dominant," for instance, being tabooed as too worldly. While it would be a pedantic anachronism to insist on these particular rules at the present day, the spirit of the requirements remains the same, even though the technical method has changed. The great and central point of the service is not the sermon, but the sacrament, called in both the Anglican and Roman Church, "holy communion." To dignify and worthily embellish this, is the true and greatest function of church music. The remainder of the music should never on any account be allowed to overshadow or be out of keeping with it. Just as an artist in painting a picture, after noting where the strongest high lights were to be, would be careful not to kill their effect by too great brightness elsewhere.

We note with astonishment that one writer allows himself to speak in a slighting manner of what he calls the "offertory," which he defines as "dropping coins on a collection plate," and as being "too silly to merit serious consideration." He recommends the use of a waltz, as suitable music. I have indeed heard a waltz used during a collection taken up to buy flowers to send to a sick brother in a fraternal organization, and the effect was very pleasing, but to use it in a church would be the height of impropriety. The collection of the alms is an integral and essential part of the ritual of the sacrament, and has a symbolic significance on which I shall not enlarge here, except to remind us that they are presented at the altar as an offering to God. If any of the congregation are "soured by the necessity of giving," it simply shows that they have no business to be present. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver." Incidentally, I have noticed that those religious societies which have cut out all the beautiful sacramental ritual, always seem to have a much harder time to secure liberal giving from their own members, and are reduced to all sorts of humiliating and irregular devices to extract money.

In the matter of ministers who, as a writer complains, try to domineer over organists, there may be some who are occasionally arbitrary and notional, but on the whole an organist cannot do better than to follow the suggestions of the minister, if only on the score of an artistic ensemble of effect; for the minister knows what is to be the nature of his sermon, and what mood it will be desirable to create in his listeners. If the minister and the organist work together as a unit, the whole service will be coherent and well-balanced in form, following out the principles of Wagner as illustrated in his music-dramas—a union of the arts, not a piece-meal assembly of fragments.

That the musical portion of a service should be beautiful, I wholly agree, but should it be a sensual and worldly beauty, or one spiritual and uplifting?—The Etude.

MUSIC'S KIN TO RELIGION

Writing on "The Ministry of Music in the Church," in the Presbyterian Magazine, Dr. W. P. Merrill, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church of New York, claims that music, because of its catholicity, has peculiar value in the life of the church. "There is nothing in all the varied realm of human interests so closely akin to religion as is music," he affirms. "In all the world there is nothing so much like prayer as music is. We find our way into the one as into the other."

Doctor Merrill thinks it probable that music has an increasing part to play in the religious life of humanity. "Never was there more reverent, sincere longing after life with God than there is today," he writes. "Yet never were men more dissatisfied with definitions and creeds, and attempts to express in precise language the deep realities of the soul's life and the unseen world. What Donald Hankey called 'the religion of the inarticulate' is prevalent. Here are apparent infinite possibilities for the ministry of music. For music is essentially symbolic in character. That it has a message and a meaning no one can doubt. Yet it offers itself to each soul freely, leaving each to construe that meaning freely and as he will."

"When we sing, we are one," he points out. "High Churchmen, who would not allow ministers of other communions to assist in their services, permit ministers and laymen of other varieties of Christian experience to lead in their singing, through the hymns they have written. A congregation that would be shocked if a Roman Catholic priest took part in the worship gladly sing Faber's 'There's a Wideness in God's Mercy'; and some who would not dream of inviting Unitarians into their pulpits find joy and satisfaction in singing Oliver Wendell Holmes' great hymn, 'Lord of All Being.' Even more marked than the wide appeal of hymns is the catholicity of music itself. It is the great universal language, never needing translation. Christians in Asia or Africa sing words unintelligible to us; but we catch the tune, and our hearts join with theirs in the emotions awakened by 'Rock of Ages' or 'Jesus, Lover of My Soul.'"

Doctor Merrill suggests that the director of the music ought to mean at least as much in the life of the church as an assistant minister or an elder, that church music should be cultivated as a means to religious life, and that no matter how poor a church may be, it should use worthy music, and eschew that which is cheap.

vention into closer cooperation. A committee from each body has been appointed for this purpose. Although the membership represents eighteen different states, there is a desire to increase the proportionate attendance from the Baptist homes in Wisconsin.

The work of the Christian associations constitutes the center of interest in activities outside the class-room work. In every way the academy is emphasizing the idea that the education of boys and girls of high-school age should include insistence upon the highest possible scholastic attainment together with definite emphasis on the religious element.

In the past two summers Wayland Academy has built and equipped a laundry, a new athletic field and remodeled the boys' dormitory.

Stephens College

Under the direction of Pres. James M. Wood, Stephens College, Columbia, Mo., has reached a place where it is recognized as being on a level with the older colleges of the Atlantic seaboard. For so young a college it has had remarkable growth. It was founded in 1833. Twenty-three years later it was taken over by six members of the Baptist church. In 1870 J. L. Stephens gave the first gift toward an endowment on the condition that the state convention adopt the institution as the official Baptist state college for women. This was done.

At first the college was elementary, but under the guidance of the University of Missouri, it became a junior college with emphasis centered wholly on the freshman and sophomore years. To provide accommodations for the large number of students enrolled, approximately $500,000 has been spent in the past five years by the board of curators. Nine years ago there was an operating deficit of $15,000 on a faculty payroll of $16,000. For the past six years the college has been operating with an annual surplus of $1,000 to $1,200, and the faculty payroll has increased to $98,000. The enrolment is now 520.

The college is endeavoring to emphasize the importance of daily work and to eliminate as far as possible the attention given to grades, marks or standings. The student, therefore, is given credit strictly on the basis of the amount of work done.

The administration of the college is in the hands of fifty educators who have made an extensive study of the history and purpose of education, especially the education of women. In selecting the faculty, only men and women who are leaders in their fields are chosen.

Peddie Institute

Twenty-three years ago the school consisted of two buildings and there was a student body of eighty. Today there are sixteen buildings and an enrolment of 350 with a faculty numbering thirty. Definite steps are being taken toward the erection of a new administration and class-room building at a cost of approximately $300,000. When this project is completed there will be few, if any, secondary schools in the country whose material equipment excels that of Peddie.

PEDDIE INSTITUTE ADMINSTRATION BUILDING

Much of this progress is due to the present headmaster, Dr. Roger W. Swetland, who this year is celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of his stewardship. When he assumed his duties in 1898, the school was conducted on the coeducational plan. A radical change in policy was affected in 1908 when the coeducational plan was discontinued and was launched as a preparatory school for boys only. The soundness of this decision has been demonstrated many times within the past decade.

The Florence A. Roberson Memorial Infirmary, erected in 1919, is one of the finest buildings of its kind on school or college campus. The latest devices of medical science have been incorporated in its structure and it affords the best possible protection for students and members of the faculty.

Beyond the Sunset

I WATCH the sunset as I look out over the rim of the blue Pacific and there is no mystery beyond the horizon line, because I know what there is over there. I have been there. I have journeyed in those lands. Over there where the sun is just sinking is Japan. That star is rising over China. In that direction lie the Philippines. I know all that. Well, there is another land that I look forward to as I watch the sunset. I have never seen it. I have never seen any one who has been there, but it has a more abiding reality than any of these lands which I do know. This land beyond the sunset—this land of immortality, this fair and blessed country of the soul—why, this heaven of ours is the one thing in the world which I know with absolute, unshaken, unchangeable certainty. This I know with a knowledge that is never shadowed by a passing cloud of doubt. I may not always be certain about this world; my geographical locations may sometimes become confused, but the other—that I know. And as the afternoon sun sinks lower, faith shines more clearly and hope, lifting her voice in a higher key, sings the songs of fruition. My work is about ended, I think. The best of it I have done poorly; any of it I might have done better, but I have done it. And in a fairer land, with finer material and a better working light, I shall do a better work.

—Robert Burdette, in a personal letter shortly before his death.

Fresh from the Field

Prof. E. O. Sellers, connected with the Bible Institute of the Southern Convention at New Orleans, will deliver the baccalaureate sermon at the Sophie Newcomb College of Tulane University.

The William Parker McKee Hall of the Frances Shimer School was dedicated May 18 with appropriate services. Dr. Theodore G. Soares delivered an address on "The Outlook for Education in Our Day," and Dr. J. S. Dickerson on "The Future of Frances Shimer School."

Rev. Harry S. Mabee has accepted a call to the First Church, Madisonville, Cincinnati. For three and a half years he has been director of the Weirton Christian Center and pastor of the church at Weirton, W. Va.

Bonar Law has resigned as prime minister of England. The reason for the action given is ill health. Stanley Baldwin is the new head of the British ministry.

Dr. H. O. Rowlands gave a helpful address on expository preaching at the Chicago meeting of the Ministers' Conference, May 21. Doctor Rowlands still continues to minister to the Tenth Avenue Church, Columbus.

The date of the founding of Shurtleff College was given as 1862 in the advertisement which appeared in the Educational Number, May 19. The correct date is 1827.

A recent report of fire underwriters gives the total loss by fire of church property for a single year as more than $6,000,000. Only about one-half of the loss was covered by insurance. What an unnecessary strain this loss has placed in hundreds of communities. Is your church property adequately protected?

The University of Iowa is to be the recipent of $2,000,000 for its medical research department from the Rockefeller foundation. This amount was to be donated provided a similar amount was voted by the state legislature. The latter stipulation was met and arrangements are under way for extending the plant.

Rev. Carl Bassett, field evangelist under the department of evangelism of the Home Mission Society, has been engaged in assisting a large number of the weaker churches in small rural communities in Arizona, Utah and Kansas —churches which would not have been able to conduct evangelistic campaigns without this help from missionary sources. Six hundred professed conversions in these meetings during the year. In one Mormon community a Sunday night service had been advertised extensively and a crowded house was expected. But on the Sunday night in question a group of people stood outside the church and politely informed all who came that the preacher was sick and the service cancelled. The evangelist was nearly sick when he learned why his crowd had failed him. But as a recompence for all bitter experiences the evangelists found the children in every community his boosters and when organized in choirs, as was frequently done, they became his best workers.

The annual convention of Minnesota Valley Baptist Young People will be held at Winnebago, June 8-10.

Rev. B. F. Martin, pastor of the Immanuel Church, Ft. Wayne, Ind., died recently at his home in that city. Mr. Martin was well known in Illinois and Wisconsin having held pastorates at Berwyn, Joliet, Moline, Chicago, Springfield and Oconomowoc. He had been in the ministry thirty-four years.

Rev. W. A. Hobson, for twenty-three years pastor of the First Church, Jacksonville, Fla., recently tendered his resignation. During that length of time, the membership has grown from 160 to 1,400; the property value from $1,500 to $200,000; the contributions to all purposes from $2,000 to $20,388.

The "St. Louis Star" gives the following interesting statistics: In 1918 an average of $32 was spent on each of the 20,000,000 public school pupils of the United States; but in the same year an average of $610 was spent on each of the 224,000 college and university students, exclusive of the expenses of the students themselves. The present agitation for limiting college enrolment is due to the fact that college revenues have not kept pace with the increase of students. The colleges and universities do not have the $610 to spend on each student and they do not know where to get it.

His Garments

By Lucie Gill Price

GOD I have not seen
Except in spirit:
But his garments hung
In the sky today,
Patent to every one.

I knew they were his Because no human hand
Could weave such fabrics—
No mortal chemist
Mix such dyes,
In shades of gold and gray,
Purple, rose and ivory.

Low they hung in the blue expanse
When the rain was over
And the sun had gone west
To spend the night:
And I knew,
Though darkness gathered 'round,
That God himself
Was not far away.

Rev. L. W. Terry, for forty years active in Baptist work, died recently at his home in Sunnyside, Cal. He had held pastorates in Edgar, Grand Island, Falls City, East Lincoln, Nebr.; Des Moines, Ia.; Denver, Colo.; and Sunnyside. He also served for ten years as executive secretary of the West Washington Convention. Mr. Terry was born in Norwich, N. Y., May 6, 1857. His youth was spent in Wisconsin and Illinois. After graduating from the Morgan Park Seminary, he entered the ministry in 1884. Mr. Terry was especially active in promoting the welfare of farmer organizations in California. He is survived by three children and two brothers.

Dr. M. D. Eubank left for China on May 17, sailing on the Empress of Russia from Vancouver. He expects to be away about five months. He says: "My plans are to visit the mission fields in Japan and China. I will spend some time in Shanghai and East China. I will visit Canton and Swatow, then North China and then the work in Japan."

In the Southern territory of the Baptist Convention there are more than 5,000 homeless churches. The congregations meet in halls, school houses and other buildings. There is now considerable agitation looking toward the housing of a number of these churches, especially those which seem to have a real future. A total of 28,000 churches are listed in the convention.

The teachings of Jesus practically applied in industry were efficiently set forth at the annual get-together of the employees of the Bi-Pocket Envelope and Printing House, Boston, Mass. The proprietor, Rev. Lyman R. Swett, who has served twenty years in the ministry, has developed his business on the Christian principle of the Golden Rule. A resolution was passed by the employees expressing their complete satisfaction of their relations to each other and to Rev. L. R. Swett.

The Rockefeller Foundation, chartered by a special act of the New York legislature ten years ago, has expended a total of $76,757,040, according to Edwin R. Embree, secretary of the foundation. Mr. Embree's statement indicates that the international health board, which was established as a part of the foundation in 1913 to demonstrate the methods and costs of controlling certain diseases, has cooperated with twenty-seven American states and fifty foreign governments. The annual expenditures have increased from $133,237 in 1914 to $1,842,249 in 1922.

For the second time the tomb of John Bunyan in Bunhill Fields' Burial Ground near London, has been renovated and rededicated. Among those who took part in the service, which was held in Wesley's Chapel, were Doctor Horton, Doctor J. C. Carlisle and Mrs. John Brown, whose husband wrote a biography of the author. It was mentioned that "Pilgrim's Progress" has been translated into 114 languages and dialects, which record is surpassed only by that of the New Testament. The tomb was previously restored in 1862 by public subscription.

Last year a Bible reading contest was held at the International Seminary, East Orange, N. J., with such satisfactory results that a similar contest took place May 10. Three first prices of $10 each and three second of $5 were awarded. One of the Russian students, who was brought to this country from a prison camp, upon receiving his money, gave it to a teacher that it might be sent to Russia to buy Bibles. Brookline Church, Emmanuel Church, Brooklyn, and Dr. J. Ackerman Coles contributed money for the prizes. Doctor Coles was present at the contest and has established a fund of $1,000 of which the interest will be used for Bible recitation prizes and Americanization work. Doctor Coles stated he would give an additional bond of $1,000 as a nucleus toward a woman's dormitory in the event of a woman's department.

Out for 10 Per Cent

The young people of the First Church, Pitman, N. J., are promoting a club of subscribers for THE BAPTIST and they are out for 10 per cent of the members as subscribers. Here are some reasons they give for subscribing:

1. To be a loyal and informed Baptist.
2. To study your Sunday-school lesson.
3. To assist preparation of B. Y. P. U. topics.
4. To supply your home with good religious literature.
5. To furnish mother with suitable children stories.
6. To know what's what among the churches.
7. To deepen your spiritual life.

Now is the time to subscribe or renew for the club offer of $2 for a year's subscription is truly a bargain. Subscribe!

Killam's Kollum

Great Scott

Great Scott again represented THE BAPTIST at the Northern Baptist Convention. He has made many friends during the year he has rendered this service to THE BAPTIST and therefore to the Baptists. He is the pastor of the church at Petoskey, Mich.

"The Exception"

THE BAPTIST was called by one of its admirers "the exception to prove the rule of deficits." Some folks have been trying to swell our heads by saying that the editor has accomplished this. This is far from the truth. It is our subscribers who like the paper well enough to pay for it who are responsible for a reasonably good financial showing. This should lead you, kind readers, to read your date label and if that is satisfactory send us a new subscriber.

They Missed the Baby

Since we are so large a part of the editorial staff it did not seem wise for THE BAPTIST to publish the miniature daily edition this year. The limited space in the Convention Bulletin made it necessary to greatly curtail announcements and other unofficial matter. It's nice to be missed. We had a number of orders for copies to be sent home as in other years. We did not keep the cash.

It Is Largely Habit

We can get used to almost anything. Some of our readers who suffered at first from the strong meat dished out to the saints who subscribe for THE BAPTIST would now faint without it as a regular diet. We have for seven years breathed the smoke-laden air of the Chicago loop and the sea breeze or something at Atlantic made us feel as if we had been "gassed." Yes, we can get used to almost everything. We may even get so that it is a pleasure to pay promptly for a religious newspaper.

Watch Barline

This is just a warning. J. C. Barline and the convention in which he lives, have gone farther than any other in a real business program in behalf of THE BAPTIST and Missions. We will tell you about it soon.

Doing Does Things

The Brotherhood of the Baptist Temple, Charleston, W. Va., uses 700 of the church's bulletins in the hotels on Saturday nights. This same church reported 315 members received last year, and 1,247 received in a little less than four years. Surely the activities of this brotherhood are getting things done. If we have anything worth while it pays to advertise it to every possible prospective purchaser.

Pre-Convention Meetings

EACH year we find the period covered by the meetings in connection with the Northern Baptist Convention lengthened. It has seemed necessary to have numerous pre-convention meetings. There are various group meetings of workers of the societies and of the boards. These are of great value and can be held at a minimum of additional expense. There are also conferences on evangelism and Christian fundamentals. Then, too, there are the stated meetings of the executive committee of the convention and the various meetings of the administrative committee and of the Board of Promotion. Few of our members, even those who attend the meetings of the convention, realize how great is the multitude of the tasks which are grappled with outside the sessions of the convention.

The Conference on Evangelism

The conference on evangelism was held again this year and a number of pastors, evangelists and general workers spent a day in most helpful fellowship.

The Conference on Fundamentals

The annual pre-convention conference on fundamentals was held on the steel pier on the afternoon and evening of May 22. The plan of the meeting was somewhat changed from that of former years. In the afternoon there were ten ten-minute speakers. All of the addresses were of high order and set standards which, for the most part, would be approved by Baptists generally.

Rev. M. L. Wood of Huntington, W. Va., spoke upon "Our Heritage from the Fathers." The prominent features of which are soul-freedom first, which was wrested from the unwilling hands of ecclesiastical and civil authorities by our Baptist fathers. The struggle began in England where Baptists made a strong appeal for soul freedom. Milton tells of this struggle and failures when they found "new presbyteries but old priests writ large." It remained for the American Baptist fathers to secure religious freedom both for themselves and others. The whipping posts of Massachusetts and the jails of Virginia could bear mute testimony to the fidelity of these fathers. All can come directly to God.

Mr. Wood also emphasized the fact that our fathers contended that faith rested upon sure foundations. Not upon the decrees of councils or the dogmas of a so-called holy church, but upon the revealed will of God as set forth in the inspired scriptures—our faith, also Christian experience. What is Christ to you?

Still another element in the heritage from the fathers is the ideal of a spiritual church with a world vision. We also have a rich heritage in the scholarship of men like E. G. Robinson, John A. Broadus, Henry G. Weston, Galusha Anderson and Augustus Strong.

Rev. A. R. Stark, of Cambridge, Ohio, in discussing "Our Heritage to Our Children" said he would take the heritage from the fathers as set forth by the former speaker and pass it on to the children. He stressed the necessity of giving our children the conception of Christ which alone satisfied Jesus himself. Current opinion in his day accorded a high place to Jesus—the highest place, but Jesus was not satisfied with it; not until he heard from the lips of a disciple "Thou art the Christ the son of the living God" was he satisfied.

Such a personal faith in Jesus Christ unites a man to Christ. Salvation is not by a system of truth or teaching, but by faith in Christ. Salvation is not by theology but by personal faith in a personal Christ and personal faith in Christ as the Son of the living God. This is the heritage we should leave to our children.

Mrs. John H. Chapman of Chicago gave a timely and helpful message on "Make Our Schools Safe." We hope to print this address in full.

Prof. John H. Strong of New York had for his subject "Give the Bible First Place in Our Schools." By first place he said he meant central place. He made clear that in order to give the Bible a central place in our schools we must put into Bible chairs men who have learned the secret of the Bible from the Bible—men who have learned its secret from the inside. Then let them have the fullest technical equipment—No man can impart the supernatural in the Bible who has never known a miracle in his own life.

Professor Strong was not sure that he was a fundamentalist, but he was sure that he was an essentialist. He said it was the duty of Baptists each to appraise his own life, keep his eyes on the chairs of the Bible in our schools and to defend the faith. Rev. David L. Jamison, of Albany, N. Y., in his address quoted passages from books and addresses of several professors in our schools and seminaries which he said indicated their unfitness to teach in Baptist institutions.

Maximillan Schimpf, of New York, contended that it was not only the privilege but also the duty of givers to designate their gifts.

Rev. Russell Brougher's address on "Restore the Evangelistic Message was well received. It was a plea to give the first duty of the church the central place in the work.

The other speakers—Charles Jones of Boston, Wm. T. Sheppard of Lowell and Joshua Gravett of Denver—delivered straight messages on the great themes which are the common heritage of Baptists.

The evening session was given over to two well-known laymen—Henry Bond of Vermont and Charles R. Brock of Colorado. Mr. Bond spoke on the duty of the church of the present to the church of the past and to the church of the future. He said "forgetting is not a modern weakness." Men have always been prone to forget the events which have influenced their lives. He dwelt upon the cost of the church not so much in dollars as in sacrifice and blood. A proper estimate of the church will lead us to give first things first place. We must not hesitate to tell men and women outside of Christ that they are lost. At the same time we should not forget that Jesus dealt with social conditions which needed correcting. The church of the present must perpetuate the kingdom of God. It should not limit its expectations. The church should today make larger use of the business experience of laymen, and should study carefully the problems of decreased church attendance.

His call for frequent reports of exac ways in which the money was contrib uted by the churches met with hearty ap proval. He wanted plain, simple an unequivocal reports. He summoned th church to a new devotional life by givin more attention to cultivating of famil devotion and private prayer. Sunday even, is being lost as a day of worshi and devotion. The church of the futur will be determined in no small measur by what the church of today passes on t the children.

Mr. Brock's address was roundly ap plauded. We hope to give a digest o the address later.

The addresses of the conference wer of a high order and met with the ap proval of the delegates generally.

We greatly regret that an otherwis helpful conference was marred by the un seemly statements of its chairman, Dr. J C. Massee. He went to the slums for hi descriptives of certain of his brethren an the language used is unfit for a famil newspaper.

We believe the time has come whe such terms applied to brethren shoul not be tolerated in any session of th convention or in any gathering held i connection with it.

The Baptist

Shall We Abandon the Prayer Meeting?

MANY might be disposed to put the question as one of fact—have we abandoned the prayer meeting? It is beyond question that in some churches, especially in some denominations, the prayer meeting is a thing of the past, regarded as an anachronism, whether it died of inanition or was deliberately sunk without a trace. There are those in such churches who may regret the passing of the institution but who regard it as a fait accompli, and appear to take the point of view of one of our wisest old leaders who would remark in a board meeting concerning discussion which still reverberated after a decisive vote had settled the controversy, "Brethren, it's of no use barking at the hole the woodchuck came out of!"

But it is not true that the prayer meeting has died out in the Baptist denomination. Churches where it is still a going concern may be counted by the thousand, where those who have definitively abandoned it may be counted only by scores, though it is true that in some churches it "has a name to live and is dead;" and there is a no-man's-land where it is difficult to tell whether it is dead or alive. Many a Baptist church today, however, has a splendid, well-attended, spiritual and deeply interesting prayer meeting. A visitor to Calvary church, Washington, reports a prayer-meeting attendance of six hundred, and there are churches where the old mid-week meeting vies with the Sunday morning service in attendance and interest. In some churches the meeting has a revival spirit the year around. Great numbers of churches retain the meeting much as of old, and would never think of abandoning it, even if it never rises to the heights of efficiency.

But if we change the point of view from the church to that of the individual member the question immediately becomes much more poignant—shall we, Baptist church-members, abandon the prayer meeting? It strikes home to a million consciences, for it is probably true that in the average Baptist church not one in ten of the membership is a regular attendant on the prayer meeting. "Were there not ten cleansed? Where are the nine?" It is to be feared that a majority of Baptist church members do not regard this significant service as in any real sense a regular engagement, or if it is, it takes precedence of nothing. They freely accept social engagements and even set their own social functions for that evening. Sometimes the pastor is asked to officiate at a wedding at one of his church homes at the very hour of the meeting. A Baptist deacon has been known to excuse his absence from the prayer meeting by pleading a slight indisposition and adding, "Why I couldn't even get out to my lodge that week."

It must be admitted that in many churches the prayer meeting is unspeakably dull at times and in some of them all the time. Few attend, and many of these are of "the lame, the halt and the blind." One or two prosy brethren monopolize the time; an inarticulate sister prays inaudibly; a blundering accompanist assassinates a good hymn, or there is a deadly iteration of the same few puerile hymns at each service. The leader may have neither spiritual nor mental power nor a winning and sympathetic personality. The impending bankruptcy of the prayer meeting leads many an active pastor to set himself to save it from dissolution, and this is well. Change, brightness, sympathetic adaptation to the needs of the people, a genuine devotional spirit, a broadening of the contacts and the program of the meeting, these are some of the resuscitation methods which may work a miracle upon the prayer meeting which is almost in articulo mortis.

BEYOND question the mid-week meeting should be a representative gathering of the church as a whole. The leadership may be varied, though caution should be observed in securing outside speakers, especially those with a hobby. The pastor should deny himself a too-full exposition of the scripture or topic. Many crude participants may be better than one finished address—unless it be of the sort that is finished in ten minutes. Free participation of the members is of utmost importance, yet the reluctant brother must feel sure that no pressure will be brought to secure it. The women's society should sometimes have charge, sometimes the young people's society. Not alone foreign missions but every activity of the denomination should have adequate presentation, perhaps in a monthly "outlook meeting," and there should be meetings for tender and sympathetic discussion and predominantly for prayer of a definite character directed to various phases of the church's own work, something quite other than the business meetings.

The recent setting apart of a mid-week "church-evening," beginning with a supper, including a study hour for the mission class and other classes, the devotional or prayer-meeting hour, and perhaps opportunity for a social time at the close, has made a notable transformation of many churches. It is a splendid expedient, provided it does not minimize or virtually abandon the prayer meeting, the devotional expression of the church's life. It would be a bad bargain to exchange it for a study class, a popular forum or a "Dill Pickles Club,"—that Chicago substitute for the worship of God. With all changes let us keep central the prayer meeting, with its much prayer, heart-to-heart experiences and intimate, informal news of the sick, of strangers or other common interests. Abandon it? Never!

Denominational Sentimentality

SENTIMENT is very useful in its proper place, but when allowed to become overemphasized it is extremely dangerous, and quite often a complete barrier to any real progress.

Just a short time ago we heard of a church that had been marking time for six years or more waiting for an old man to die. The aged brother had been a very valuable church member in his day, but now was sitting "on the lid" of the church and dulling its prospects while he waited for his end. When urged to prevent such folly the church leaders, with the assent of the pastor, said, "No, we will not do anything to hurt the dear old brother." In the meanwhile that local church was prevented from even acquiring a new site or planning a new edifice because the brother referred to "had always attended services on that lot and was baptized in that very baptistry in that dear old church building." When death does come to the old man he will face God really responsible for a lost battle because even now the local church is hopelessly out of the race for usefulness in that city where it is located, while its present property has been decreasing in value. A lot that could have been bought for $11,000 six years ago will now cost these people $80,000. They cannot buy it and where they now are is an impossible situation for a church. Sentimentality must not be allowed to ruin the cause of our Lord. We need not be cruel or hasty, but our love for our Lord and Master must be great enough to allow us to do unpleasant things for him, and even to incur, if necessary or unavoidable, the enmity of some whom we have loved for their life's and work's sake in bygone days.

In the wider circles of our denomination we sometimes lose a battle because we allow sentiment to govern instead of common sense and Christianity. Above everything else we must not lose the battle for our Lord. No man, no woman, no matter who or what they may be, is to be given preference or retained in a position if it means a lost battle for the Lord Jesus Christ.

Sacrifice, not sentiment, must be the goal of every soul who loves Jesus Christ. We must subordinate sentiment to effect. During the war a great general was relieved of his command and a younger man put in his place "for the good of the cause." A newspaper reporter asked the retired general if he had any complaint to make on account of his removal. "No," he said, "I am a soldier and am willing to suffer anything in order that the cause of my country may prosper."

Shall not a Christian give as good a witness for his cause as did that patriot? The cause of the Christian is the all-important one.

A Definite Objective

WHEN a train leaves the terminal station it is starting out to reach a definite destination. It may have some difficulties on the road, but sooner or later that train reaches its goal.

When a bank opens its doors and asks for business it has a definite objective and in consequence it uses every effort to attain its legitimate ends. A scholar starting to school does so with the intention of going through the presented course and coming out of the institution with the diploma that betokens a finished task.

We are afraid that many a local church has no definite destination in mind when it starts out on its journey, and in consequence it never really gets anywhere worth while in the eyes of its constituency or the outside world. When the doors of the edifice open for business at various times, has the average local church as definite an objective as has the bank we referred to? We fear not. It does have a general objective, but it is not specific enough to be dynamic. We fear that many a local church does not use the means at its disposal, such as personnel or advertising, as does a well-managed bank in its determination to prosper.

The individual Christian is a scholar in the school of our Lord. But the normal local church allows its membership to be untaught to such an extent that a terribly large proportion of its people fall away long before the day of graduation.

We plead for a definite plan and program in every local church. We ask that definite goals be placed before every member and that we begin again really to teach our people the way of the Lord Christ. It will be very easy for some people to assert that our local churches are properly teaching their membership. But we fear that the go-as-you-please ways of many a church prove to the contrary.

The world of today needs all that the church of Christ should have to give to it. Furthermore, the church needs to give all that is in its real program in order to be obedient, cross bearing and of dynamic growth. Definiteness of teaching, of expectation, and of achievements will greatly help the whole situation.

Statistics a Superficial Test

IN AN editorial on "What Do Church Statistics Mean?" the Federal Council Bulletin says:

"The question is not how many belong to church but how much does church membership mean. This is something on which no census can be taken. It is even possible that growth in numbers might mean genuine loss. Surely it would be a loss if it were to lull us into a sense of smug self-satisfaction, or to delude us as to what constitutes real success. The final answer to the question as to whether the church is fulfilling its mission is not the extent to which we have brought the community into the church, but the extent to which we have put the church into the life of the community."

The Growing Power of Religion

VICE-PRESIDENT CALVIN COOLIDGE recently addressed a gathering in Albany. He emphasized the place that religious beliefs and religious life had in the making and maintaining all that is best in American civilization. "Religious beliefs and convictions are not a power which is diminishing, but a power which is increasing," Mr. Coolidge asserted. "The standard of conduct which they require was never before so universally recognized and accepted. It sanctifies every place of worship. It is revealed in every institution of learning, it supports every activity of government, it sustains every economic structure. In domestic affairs, in international affairs it is more and more the reliance of mankind. The evidences of it are increasing, the results of it are increasing. More and more the people are living under the conviction that it is righteousness alone which exalteth any nation.

"Surely the recognition of this fact, which stands out above all others, ought to make these days of abiding satisfaction and of continuing faith and determination for the American people.

"It was because religion gave the people a new importance and a new glory that they demanded a new freedom and a new government. We cannot in our generation reject the cause and retain the result.

"If the institutions they adopted are to survive, if the government which they founded is to endure, it will be because the people continue to have similar religious beliefs. It is idle to discuss freedom and equality on any other basis. It is useless to expect substantial reforms from any other motive. They cannot be administered from without. They must come from within.

"There will be a proper use of our material prosperity when the individual feels a divine responsibility. There will be obedience to the law when the individual feels that government represents a divine authority."

What Really Matters

COMMENTING on the recent assembly of Presbyterians in Indianapolis, the Philadelphia Ledger says in part:

"It is evident that many representative minds in the great council of the Presbyterian church meeting at Indianapolis do not feel that controversy over dogma is what greatly matters to the church at present. A tired, war-sick world is weary of differences and is looking for the operation of those influences that bring the minds of men and of nations to be as one in a great household. Those who emphasize the creeds and definitions that divide men are not those who best serve the race. . . .

"The grave danger of making the church too theological is that it may in time come to consist of a bewindling band of theologians. The list of empty pulpits is alarming. The meagerness of the pastoral supply prospectively available leads one to ask, 'Who will be the ministers of the future and what will be the influence of the depleted churches?' Rightly or wrongly, the forms of worship are on trial with the man in the street—if he troubles his head about them at all. The religion that comes anywhere near him will not spend its time in debate over doctrine. He must have for his spirit better daily bread than polemic oratory. He looks for a religion of a practical beneficence that heals and blesses."

Prohibition in England

CRITICISING an article on "Will England Go Dry?" by the Right Hon. C. F. G. Masterman in the New York Times, Mr. Charles Stelzle says, through the columns of the same paper:

"When England gives its workingmen and others a real opportunity to vote upon the question, it will probably be found that Mr. Masterman is entirely wrong when he declares that 'a plebiscite on prohibition at the present day would probably show something like ten to one against'—for in Scotland, where the working people are much as they are in England, it has been repeatedly demonstrated even in industrial centers that a very large majority of the people are opposed to the saloon and in favor of prohibition. And Mr. Masterman should not forget that Lady Astor was re-elected to Parliament by a very substantial majority, after she had come out squarely against the liquor business. All of which proves that there is at least a strong tendency in England toward prohibition."

What Is Greatness?

THOSE chosen by the National League of Women Voters as the twelve greatest living American women are as follows: Jane Addams, philanthropist; Cecilia Beaux, painter; Anna Jump Cannon, astronomy; Carrie Chapman Catt, politics; Anna Botsford Comstock, natural history; Minnie Maddern Fiske, stage; Louise Homer, music; Julia Lathrop, child welfare; Florence Rena Sabin, anatomy; M. Carey Thomas, education; Martha Van Rensselaer, home economics; Edith Wharton, literature.

In regard to this list the Northwestern Christian Advocate says: "It will be observed that all the above named have become 'great' through professional accomplishments. Their large benefit to society is unquestioned; but one is forced, when he studies the list, to ask, what is greatness? Like goodness, it is not dependent upon publicity. . . . Where one woman of the land is known, there are a hundred who are obscured by circumstance, but among that number are those who have planned and worked and wrought in masterful fashion. Mothers of large families are there, who on small incomes and in a difficult environment, have maintained ideal homes, raised children in ways of rectitude, planted imperishable ideals in their souls, and bestowed a character that compelled success in the outer world."

President's Address to the Northern Baptist Convention

Atlantic City, May 23, 1923

By Frederick E. Taylor

FOLLOWING the example of my illustrious predecessors I shall at this time bring to you the message of the president.

Last year at Indianapolis, when you honored me with the office of the president of the convention, I was deeply conscious of the honor, and I have never ceased to be sensible of the great responsibility which the office carries with it. To the best of my ability I have tried to serve the convention up to the present moment. Hearty thanks are due the officers and members of the First Church of Indianapolis for the gracious way in which they have carried the work of the church in order that their pastor might be released for the service of the convention. Many things have had to be left undone, and perhaps many more might have been done much better, but where there have been mistakes or errors they have been of the head and not of the heart. The loyal support of everybody with whom the president has had to consult has been delightful; and the immediate response to every call for assistance on the part of the leaders in our work has made the task a pleasure.

The Committees

While, so far as I know, every committee of the convention has faithfully performed the duties required, I cannot refrain from expressing my appreciation of the remarkable service rendered by the committee on future denominational program under the leadership of Dr. J. F. Vichert. The fidelity of the members; the large amount of thought and time given to the meetings; the deep devotional atmosphere which characterized every meeting, will long remain fragrant in the minds of the members of the committee. At their last meeting, after two days and nights of hard service, one of the members—the pastor of a great church—arose and thanked the president for naming him as a member of the committee, and, in a voice vibrating with feeling, expressed his thanksgiving to God for the privilege of the fellowship of those never-to-be-forgotten days. Every soul in the room was in hearty accord with the sentiments expressed. Whether the report of that committee shall be accepted or rejected you will determine; but be sure of this: The work was done in absolute dependence upon the leadership of the spirit of God, and we shall do well to consider it in the same spirit when it comes before us.

I suppose that every president who has preceded me has felt the sympathetic and tireless cooperation of our corresponding secretary, Dr. W. C. Bitting. But whether that be true or not, I am sure that no one has appreciated his helpfulness more than myself. I am confident that few of us have the remotest idea of the time and strength given to the work of the convention by our corresponding secretary, and we owe him a great debt of gratitude for his devotion to our work.

His Stewardship

Now perhaps a few words as to my stewardship may not be amiss. Almost immediately after the close of the convention at Indianapolis the president sailed for Europe, as one of a party sent abroad by our Foreign Mission Society. We were received graciously by a large company of our Baptist ministers on our arrival in London, and I had the privilege of bringing to our English brethren the greetings of the Northern Convention, and the still greater privilege when, with the others of the party, I was a guest in the home of England's grand old Baptist hero, saint and scholar, Dr. John Clifford. In Paris I had the opportunity of speaking in four churches on the one Sunday that I was in the city, and on every occasion extended the greetings of our Northern Baptist Convention.

But the real objective was Czecho-Slovakia, and there, beginning at Prague, Doctor Jones and the president travelled all over the beautiful country, preaching the gospel. It was a great joy to address audiences every night that filled to overflowing the largest theaters and halls, and to see the look of surprise that always came when we said we brought the greetings of seven million Baptists from the United States. Every night we delivered an address o religious liberty and then preache an evangelistic sermon. Score and hundreds responded to th appeal and accepted Christ as Sav iour and Lord. Everywhere w were received with cordiality an the people greatly appreciated th interest of their American breth ren. They had never suppose there were as many Baptists in th world as we said there were in th United States.

In Prague the government through Mr. Stepanik, ambassado to the United States, and Mr. Spa cek, the head of the Czecho-Slovak ian legation in Washington, both of whom were there at the time o our visit, graciously entertaine Doctor Jones and myself, attende our meetings, introduced us to th Lord Mayor of Prague, and as sured us of the appreciation of th government of our addresses o religious liberty, which they fel were especially helpful at this time when their new republic is in the making.

In This Country

On my return to this country I found an abundance of opportunity to further the cause by addressing meetings of our brethren all over the country. Of course only a limited number of invitations could be accepted, but it was my privilege to address large gatherings of Baptists in Boston, Hartford, Newark, Trenton, Chicago, Denver, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Columbus, Detroit and other places, and also to visit the state conventions of Illinois, Indiana, New Jersey and Massachusetts. I have attended conferences and committee meetings in various places and carried on correspondence incident to the great convention. Much time had to be given to the offer of the Immanuel Church of Chicago, and perhaps more time was given to that matter than to any other one thing connected with our work. So much for the report of my stewardship.

Now let me speak a word of gratitude for the things which have been and are being accomplished by the convention.

We have many reasons for thanksgiving as we gather here by the sea. I shall mention just a few of the achievements of the past four years. I am afraid we have allowed ourselves to think too much about the things undone, and not enough about the things done. At Denver we enthusiastically and heartily indorsed a program which was to cover five years. We listened to a survey of our needs and opportunities that gave us a vision of our responsibilities and, led by the spirit of God, we arose and said, "We will not be disobedient to the heavenly vision."

While it is true we did not secure pledges for a hundred million dollars, as we had hoped, we did secure pledges for at least fifty-two million dollars, and whatever may be said about our failure to reach the larger goal, we certainly have reason to thank God for one of the greatest achievements in our history as Northern Baptists. We were disappointed of course, but not nearly so much so as our missionaries were, and yet, with characteristic consecration, they have crowded back their tears and made the cuts necessary and carried on.

The First Attempt

Some of us remember the first attempt to raise one million dollars; then six millions; and we remember the desperate struggle we had to get that six millions. How significant that seems now! Let us keep before us the fact that the same people, inspired and enlightened, went out and raised forty-eight millions and put the Northern Baptists at the head of the list of per capita givers of any of the large denominations. Is not this something for which to praise God? More than this; we raised the standard of giving in our churches to a level never before thought possible. Churches that would have been amazed at an apportionment of $10,000 accepted a pledge of $50,000. Churches that were giving an average of $10,000 a year to missions pledged $200,000 and in some cases over $300,000 for the four years, and they are paying their pledges. We have taken a long step forward because of the New World Movement, and we shall never go back to the old standards again.

Again, let us be grateful for the fact that many individuals have been awakened to the needs of our work and have been led to consecrate money in larger amounts than ever before to the work of the kingdom. I think of a woman who visited China and saw the need of a dormitory for boys. She gave the money necessary and that building will soon be dedicated. The other day that same lady sent a check for $1,000 to help on this year's work. Another lady visited Japan, saw the heart-breaking scenes when students were turned away, and the nervous strain under which the principal was working. She came back and, at a great sacrifice to herself, gave the money needed. The balance was raised by a group of her friends and the school was saved to a career of continued and increasing usefulness.

In India, through a gift of Doctor Cole, the Woman's Society has been enabled to erect greatly needed buildings in Nellore, which it was impossible for them to supply.

I am glad that the convention text is "Thy Kingdom Come." I have been hoping and praying that the Christ who loved the sea, and at the seaside performed miracles and called forth leaders, who fed the multitude and quieted the storm and spake parables of the great kingdom; the Christ who encouraged the toilers of the sea who were tired and weary with a night of fruitless effort, will meet us here as we wait by the sea during these days. I am hoping that he will open our eyes and let us see the world as he sees it; feel the need as he feels it, and give unto us the same passionate desire to save it as he always had.

Another very interesting event in the women's work is the buying of property for a nurses' training school and Baptist headquarters in Lodz. There was a wonderful building there, a private hospital, built and equipped by a group of physicians for their private clinic before the war. The war ruined their practice and left the people so poor that it was impossible for them to continue using the hospital. The women were able to get this property for the sum of $25,000, which was still further reduced by a drop in the price of the Polish mark, until the actual payment was less than $14,000. This money did not come to the women through the New World Movement, as it was not in the original budget. Mr. Shepard, one of the men sent out by the Foreign Society to visit Northern Europe, gave the first $1,000, and individual givers made up the rest, but the New World Movement gave the inspiration that led to all these gifts.

But the gifts of individuals have been not only for the foreign field. A half million dollar gift recently came to the City Mission Society of New York, and, in fact, the New World Movement has placed these city mission societies on a much higher level than they ever occupied before. In the city of Detroit the other evening I attended the annual meeting of the City Mission Society and heard the superintendent, Doctor Gleiss, say that four years ago when a budget of $225,000 was suggested as a bare possibility for the next four years they all thought they were facing a heroic task, but they have raised and expended over a million dollars in the city mission work of that city.

Still another achievement of the past four years has been the enrolment of thousands of our people as tithers. The B. Y. P. U. has given a great impetus to this work and the young people of our constituency are not only dedicating their money to God, but they are consecrating their lives for service as never before. At every summer conference one of the most impressive and indeed thrilling services has been the calling of our young people to dedicate their lives to Christian service. Thousands have responded, and in the years to come we shall see many of these in the work of the ministry or on the mission field. Indeed, there are scores of these young men and young women already preparing for the work of the ministry, or for some mission field who caught their vision at these summer conferences.

The Spirit of Evangelism

Perhaps that which causes us to rejoice the most is the wonderful spirit of evangelism which has characterized the denomination all during the period of the New World Movement. There were some of us who feared that the concentration of our minds on the raising of such a vast sum of money as one hundred million dollars would cause us to lose our spiritual fervor, but we have been gratified beyond words to see the splendid spirit of evangelism at home and abroad during these years. Pentecostal showers have fallen on some of our foreign fields, and in Kengtung, Burma, the harvest was so great that probably thousands will be unshepherded because of our inability to care for the converts as fast as they come. Doctor Lerrigo's story of what he witnessed in Africa, as thousands were baptized on one station, is one of the most thrilling stories of missionary victory of recent years. In Europe, especially in Central Europe, people are turning from darkness to light in such large numbers that the figures are astounding. In Czecho-Slovakia over one million people have turned from Catholicism to Protestantism within the past three years. The gospel of religious liberty, which is the gospel of Christ, has borne fruit, and the people of the land of John Huss are turning to the teachings of the man who, although dead for 500 years, seems to be the most vital force in the country today. His picture is found wherever there are Protestants. A great statue has been erected to him in the public square of Prague, displacing the statue of the Virgin Mary which was thrown down by the legionaries on their return from the war. The harvest there is great but, again, the laborers are few. The people are hungering and thirsting for the pure gospel of Christ and they are determined to have religious liberty. What a mission we Baptists have there! In only one other place can it be equalled and that is in Russia. Russia is ripe and ready for evangelism and we are told that over three million Baptists are ready and anxious to carry on the work of evangelism once the way opens. Brethren, we all ought to pray for Russia. Indeed—

"Each breeze that sweeps the ocean
Brings tidings from afar
Of nations in commotion
Prepared for Zion's war."

The Home Mission Society is rejoicing over the remarkable revival that has swept over Cuba where a thousand inquirers have come forward and where classes have been formed to train converts for church membership. This revival spirit is prevalent in Porto Rica and among the Spanish-speaking population of the southwest.

In the Indian schools of this country evangelism has been the dominant note, and at Bacone, Okla., practically the entire student body has come to Christ, and among the Indians along with the evangelistic spirit has come a spirit of generosity which has resulted in gifts totalling over $1,053,000.

In many of our schools and colleges special evangelistic meetings held this year have resulted in entire institutions being permeated with the revival spirit, and the atmosphere of some schools has been completely changed within the past year.

One must not overlook the fact that the New World Movement has greatly enhanced the work of our state conventions and city mission societies. As go our cities so will go the nation, and we are learning that it is positively dangerous to keep pouring money into a hopeless situation in a small country place and to neglect our cities. If the gospel of Christ cannot reach and change life in the city we are lost. But we have seen the advantage of giving our City Mission Society a larger place in our budget and in our thought.

WE know well there are difficulties; there are obstacles; there are dangers. While we have achieved we have had to overcome tremendous odds; and if we are to go on to victory it will not be along the pathway of ease. . . . . We need to see again the vision which held us in its power at Denver. We need to forget the mistakes which we have tried to correct, and from which we are profiting, and get again that great vision and with renewed courage and consecration address ourselves unitedly to the realization of the goal before us.

We are gratified for the recent gift of $500,000 to the work in the metropolitan area, and for the spirit of our city mission men who are charged with tremendous responsibility in these great centers of population. Never were there such great strides made in planning to take our cities for Christ as in the last four years.

Interest in all state convention work has greatly increased in recent years, and I doubt not that almost every state secretary has had his heart gladdened as he has seen the large sums of money released for the kingdom, by those hitherto thought impossible to reach with the ordinary appeal.

In one state with which I am familiar we are raising a new order of men, the Order of Barnabas. We are having men come to the state secretary and hand over their farms, literally following the example of the good man of apostolic days who sold his land and laid the money at the apostles' feet. And so one could go on and mention other things which have come to pass in these days, but I commend to your careful reading the best seller of the past year, a little book called "On the March," which is in itself an achievement worthy of any denomination.

But, my brethren, we know well there are difficulties. There are obstacles; there are dangers. While we have achieved we have had to overcome tremendous odds during these days, and if we are to go on to victory it will not be along any pathway of ease.

Trying Years

The past four years have been years to try men's souls; years which for some of our leaders have been heart-breaking, but years when some of them have learned as never before the power, the love and the friendship of God. In fact, if God had not been in this movement from the beginning it would have been killed long ago. We did not all see "eye to eye" as time passed. Even though at Denver we voted the movement enthusiastically, we soon faced much criticism. Some of it was fair and just, and some of it was utterly unfair and very unjust. It ought to be kept clearly in mind that in every instance where criticism has arisen, every organization involved has been willing and glad to face the criticism, investigate the facts and do everything possible to remedy the trouble. In spite of this there are those who, for some reason, do not care to know the truth and prefer to criticise, rather than to take hold and help in our great program.

One of the obstacles to progress has been the disposition to change. Too much valuable time and money has been spent in an effort to change every plan and meet every criticism that has come. If we could only stay put long enough we could readily accomplish what we once decided to do. It was inevitable that changes would have to be made as the faults of the plan were discovered, but it would have been much better if these changes could have been made without creating trouble and destroying the morale of the whole constituency.

It was said that the Board of Promotion was too large and ex pensive; whereupon it was reduced in size.

It was said that the schools and colleges were hotbeds of infidelity and false teaching. An investigation was made, and Doctor Goodchild's report reassured our hearts.

It was said there were too many salaried persons on the staff; so very competent, and in the thinking of some, very necessary assistants have been released.

It was said that missionaries were teaching false doctrines, and at great expense of time, careful investigation has been made and over and over again these reports have proved to be erroneous.

It was said that if gifts could be designated vast sums would come into the treasury. That defect was remedied, but no extra clerks have been necessary to care for the vast sums, because either the people who were holding up their contributions on that account have decided not to give their money, or have not learned that the change has been made.

It has been said that some way must be found so that every church, as well as any individual, can have certain objects for which the church or individual can contribute. The report of the committee on future denominational program may solve that problem.

In other words, everything possible has been done to meet the criticism of every fair-minded person; therefore, let us go forward into the last year of the program, assured that we can all have, and ought to have a vital interest in its success.

Some time ago a letter was sent to a number of our leaders asking some questions. Among these questions was this one: "What shall we emphasize during the last year of the campaign?"

Honor in Religious Affairs

The answers were remarkable for the unanimity of the opinion expressed. Practically all say the same things, as, for instance, "Stewardship of life and gifts"; "Payment of all pledges," or, in other words, as much honor in religious affairs as there is in ordinary business morality.

One writer says, "We need to emphasize the completion of the New World Movement with honor; the satisfaction on the part of subscribers of paying their pledges in full; the satisfaction on the part of the denomination of paying in full the accumulated indebtedness of the societies; the joy of actually doing new items of work projected in the survey; laying secure the foundations upon the principles of stewardship for future denominational work.

"I feel that a word of caution at this point is necessary for it would be very easy to expect the impossible from the stewardship campaign. Educational processes, especially with a mass of people, are always, it seems, slow. It will take a full generation of persistent missionary education and emphasis upon the principles of stewardship to bring our denomination beyond the point of special financial efforts. We should not deceive ourselves at this point."

Another says, "We need to emphasize most of all the fact that when we launched the New World Movement we had a vision as to our duty and responsibility as a great denomination for world service. While mistakes have been made, it would have been a far greater mistake for us not to have attempted a program in keeping with the magnitude of the task which Christ committed to his church. We need to see again the vision which held us in its power at Denver. We need to forget the mistakes which we have tried to correct, and from which we are profiting, and get again that great vision and with renewed courage and consecration address ourselves unitedly to the realization of the goal before us.

"Where would we be today had we not had the vision at Denver? There is scarcely any limit to what we might accomplish in the last year of this program if we could again come to the mountain-top experience of the presence and power of Christ and agree to throw our hearts and souls into the forward movement."

I agree with all that is said, but I am sure the most important is that which is mentioned last, namely, a new vision.

GOD is the silent partner of every Christian. That business which offends the silent partner, Jesus Christ, is an offensive business. An honorable business may be conducted dishonorably. The money-making gift is a God-given gift. "Thou shalt remember the Lord thy God, for it is he that giveth the power to get wealth." To despise money is to despise power.

—Calendar, First Church, Wichita, Kans.

On the mountain at Denver we saw a world in need. As that wonderful survey was read to us we listened for hours with growing interest. When the whole program was fairly before us we enthusiastically indorsed it. Perhaps Paul's words to the Galatians are true of us; "Ye did run well for a season." Perhaps we have lost our vision. Perhaps we need again to see our Leader, and it may be we are like one of old who started on a venture of faith and then took his eyes off his Lord and fixed them on the boisterous waves.

If this is so I believe that if we recognize our need the same Christ who saved Peter will save us.

The Text

I am glad that the convention text is "Thy kingdom come." I have been hoping and praying that the Christ who loved the sea, and at the seaside performed miracles and called forth leaders, who fed the multitude and quieted the storm and spake parables of the kingdom; the Christ who encouraged the toilers of the sea who were tired and weary with a night of fruitless effort, will meet us here as we wait by the sea during these days. I am hoping that he will open our eyes and let us see the world as he sees it; feel the need as he feels it, and give unto us the same passionate desire to solve it as he always had.

May we give every speaker our prayerful attention. May we listen carefully to the returned heroes of the mission fields; may we see the men and women of burning hearts who are fighting so desperately to hold the lines, and may our hearts respond to the call to a new consecration of life and gifts. We need a renewed faith in an omnipotent God who is still our leader. A renewed faith in our own ability as a denomination to meet the needs of our part of the world field, and we need a faith that will enable us to do the impossible.

One of the boys who was at Chateau Thierry and who was badly wounded was carried back to the hospital, and when the surgeons began their work with him his whole soul was still aflame with the enthusiasm of the fight, and, looking up into the face of the surgeon he said, "I tell you, sir, they did things out there that can't be done." And I am hoping and praying that in these days we shall catch that spirit which shall lead us out to do the things that cannot be done.

"Thy Kingdom Come"

By W. H. P. Faunce

WE live in an age of transition. Did you ever hear any one say that before? Did you ever hear any one speaking on an important occasion fail to say that? Every age is a period of transition. Always we are passing out of yesterday into God's great tomorrow; always we are crying hail and farewell. It is constant change which gives to human life its zest and adventure.

But the period in which we live is beyond all others in the rapidity of transition. Life has been speeded up. The changes which once required 500 years have been telescoped into fifty. The events of fifty years have been crowded into five. The great war has shown us the proudest empires of the world crumbling into dust over night. Crowns have gone into the discard, imperial robes and jewels have been sent to the pawnbroker, princes of the blood been turned into table-waiters and stable-boys.

And the political changes have been hardly more swift than the changes in scientific discovery and invention. It has been computed that if we count up the discoveries and inventions of the first rank, we shall find that seventeen were made in the last hundred years and only seven in all the preceding story of humanity upon this globe. Julius Caesar rode in the same sort of carriage as George Washington—only Caesar had the better vehicle. There was no advance, from the first century to the eighteenth, in method of transportation. Cicero studied by the same sort of lamp as Abraham Lincoln—there was no essential improvement in illumination. But since Washington, even since Lincoln, the mechanical equipment of life has been transformed. We travel by express, through the air, under the sea, we harness electricity to the commonest task, we talk to a half-million people at once, and the conditions of life on the globe have been utterly transfigured.

A Startling Phenomenon

As a result of the change of war and the change of peace are we any happier, wiser, or better than our fathers? One of the most startling phenomena of our day is the questioning of faith in human progress. It is true that we have more than our fathers; is it true that we are more? The locomotive is an immense advance on the old stage-coach of seventy-five years ago. Is the engineer who grasps the throttle any wiser or nobler than the stage driver whose crooked fingers held the reins? A universal questioning has settled down upon us. We look into the grave of Tutankhamen by the bank of the Nile and we ask whether our artistic taste is any finer, our faith in immortality any surer, our human character any nobler than under the Egyptian Pharaohs.

There is no sure answer to that question outside the Christian faith. Those who possess that faith can never fail nor be discouraged. When in the fourth century Augustine saw the Roman empire crumbling all around him, he looked away to the City of God rising out of the ruins in eternal splendor and his vision has inspired the centuries. John Bunyan in the seventeenth century saw around him the follies and failures of the reign of Charles II, but he dreamed of another city whose walls are jasper and whose gates are pearl, and his dream is still our inspiration. So we today, amid the crash of kingdoms, political revolutions and social transformations, look beyond the things that are seen and affirm our faith in the kingdom against which the gates of hell cannot prevail. Let the earthly kingdoms falter and fail and crowns roll in the dust. So much the more eagerly and confidently we cry: "Thy kingdom come." We are here this week for nothing else than to pray and plan for that great end.

THE kingdom of God does not mean mere economic progress. It does not mean simply more comforts and conveniences in the home and the shop. It does not mean merely better wages or salaries or better clothes to wear. It does not mean pure food, porcelain bathtubs, fireless cookers and an automobile for every family. Civilization may be "increased in goods" and yet remain "poor and blind and naked." What is the use of traveling at seventy, or even 200, miles an hour, if we are as discontented at the end of the journey as we were at the beginning? What is the use of talking over wire—or without one—if we have really nothing to say? The promotion of comfort is not the creation of character. To every nation that is boasting of mere accumulation of material comforts God will say at some great crisis: "Thou fool, thy soul is required of thee."

But what is the kingdom which we call "thine?" It is not my kingdom or yours, but His. What do we mean by it?

The kingdom of God does not mean mere economic progress. It does not mean simply more comforts and conveniences in the home and the shop. It does not mean merely better wages or salaries or better clothes to wear. It does not mean pure food, porcelain bathtubs, fireless cookers and an automobile for every family. Civilization may be "increased in goods" and yet remain "poor and blind and naked." What is the use of traveling at seventy, or even 200, miles an hour, if we are as discontented at the end of the journey as we were at the beginning? What is the use of talking over wire—or without one—if we have really nothing to say? The promotion of comfort is not the creation of character. To every nation that is boasting of mere accumulation of material comforts God will say at some great crisis: "Thou fool, thy soul is required of thee."

The kingdom does not consist in ceremony or organization. No ceremony can of itself change the soul of any human being. Useful as a symbol it is deadly as a substitute for experience. First a change within, then the symbol without is the normal order of the kingdom. Organization is the expression of life, but cannot create life. The Interchurch Movement was the apotheosis of organization. It accumulated countless files, catalogs, indexes, charts, as if the kingdom were not like a grain of mustard seed, but like an adding machine. We live in an over-organized world, and we may be devoured by our own machinery. Our great need is not more wheels and pulleys, but more life.

The kingdom is not metaphysics or abstract philosophy. Of course there must be a metaphysics involved in all our living, there must be a philosophy and a theology, but these are not the foundations of the kingdom. If the church fathers, Irenaeus and Origen, were here today, we should find their faith the same as our own, but the reasons they would give for it would be very different from our reasons. Irenaeus said there were four Gospels because there were four winds in the sky. But both for him and for us there are four Gospels and no more.

Can we define a mother in terms of chemistry? Can we say: Take so much oxygen, so much hydrogen, and the result is a mother? Or is there something in motherhood that breaks through all our formulas and escapes? Suppose we had asked Simon Peter if he believed in the two natures in one person? He never heard the word "nature" or the word "person" as the theologians use them. All he could say was: "In that man from Nazareth God has spoken to me. Him I will follow to prison and to death." First stars and then astronomy, first flowers and then botany, first religion and then theology, is the order of all human experience. Charles Lamb understood that when he said: "If Shakespeare were to enter this room where we are now sitting, we should all instantly rise; but if Christ were to enter, we should all instantly kneel." He who kneels before Christ is on the way to all the theology he needs to know.

A Spiritual Kingdom

No, the kingdom of God is not economics, not organization, not metaphysics—it is spiritual. God is spirit and his kingdom is a spiritual domain. Wherever his will is done, there his kingdom is set up. Wherever his will is studied, interpreted and embodied in human lives, there his kingdom advances and triumphs. Wherever God is, there is his throne; wherever his righteous purpose, his eternal love, his overflowing life control the loves and hates and purposes of men, there is the kingdom of God. And since Christ is the express image of God, we rightly say in the unceasing Te Deum of the church: "Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ."

At the center of the kingdom is a person and that person is our Lord. Without absolute allegiance to him, the kingdom in its highest form cannot exist. Let us speak plainly and unmistakably. Christ is to us not one of many teachers. He is the perfect revelation of the Father. Christ is not an important edition of Confucius: he is not a bettered Buddha. We follow Confucius a certain distance and admire him and then we find in him what we can never admire. We follow Buddha a certain distance and then we turn away. We follow Christ without reservation and we follow him forever. We yield ourselves to him with no hesitation or scruple, and we ask nothing more in this world or the next than to know his will and to do it. As Dante said, "His will is our peace."

If any man have not the spirit of Christ—though he have learning, titles, wealth, fame—he is none of his. And if any man have the spirit of Christ—though he have little learning, no reputation and a defective theology—he is one of his. If a church have not the spirit of Christ—it may have oratory, music, architecture and a full treasury—it is not a Christian church. If any church have the spirit of Christ, though it be defective in architecture, in organization, in creed, in ceremony, it is a church of Jesus Christ our Lord.

"Repent Ye"

And how do men or churches enter the kingdom of God? There is only one pathway. When Christ first began to preach he uttered one great cry: "Repent ye, for the kingdom is at hand." To repent is not to weep and moan. The word means "change your mind." The one primal need of the chaotic world is change of mind—not a change in organization or formula or ritual, but a change of mind. But men say, "You can't change human nature." The fact is human nature is the only thing that can be changed. We cannot change the laws of the physical world, the ebb and flow of the tides, the force of gravitation, the stars in their courses, the atoms in their attractions and repulsions. But the loves and hates and purposes of men can be, have been, must be changed. What the individual is changed all the world knows. That Tolstoi was changed from a brutal soldier to a humble disciple, that Jerry Macauley was changed, that George John Romanes was changed we all know. Also nations and races may be changed. Delicate Roman ladies sitting in the ancient Colosseum looked down with delight on the contest of prisoners with wild beasts. No city could endure that sight today. Aristotle declared slavery essential to civilization. No philosopher on earth now believes that. The church in which we worship every Sunday was built by the proceeds of a lottery. No church in civilization would tolerate that method of securing funds today. We cannot change the laws of nature, but we can change the laws, the attitudes, the purpose of men, and wherever men do change their minds and adopt the mind of Christ, there and there only is the kingdom of God.

Hence the foreign missionary enterprise lies at the very center of all the prayer and labor of the church. Christ would not himself leave little Palestine, but he said: "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold." And he commanded his disciples to go into all the world. He himself overleaped all the barriers which are keeping men apart today, the barriers of race and nation and language. To the Roman centurion he found greater faith than in Israel; to the Samaritan woman he poured out His message; to the Syro-Phoenician he brought healing. And in his superb vision of the kingdom, he said, "They shall come from the East and the West, and the North and the South,"—from the East with its brooding thought and the West with its love of action, from the North with its logical analysis and the South with its fervid devotion—they shall come and sit down in the kingdom of God.

Is that all? If we Christianize men in their relation to God, have we expressed the Master's thought? Or must we Christianize the relations of men to one another? No reader of the Old Testament can be in doubt. Christ finely held the balance between the individual and the social. The second commandment is like unto the first. We must Christianize men in their relation;

THE supreme test of any church is this: do the men who enter the sanctuary find there the spirit of Christ? We all know churches where you can find candles and vestments and rituals and dogmas, but somehow fail to find Christ. And when he is absent many dissensions arise because the church has become eccentric—off its center. When he is absent the spirit of charity goes with him, and all divisions among us bulk large and black, just as rocks protrude in the harbor when the tide ebbs out to sea. We overcome the rocks not by blasting them out, but by letting the tide come in. "We have the mind of Christ"—to have that is better than to have all the endowments in the world. When that mind—so broad, so just, so forgiving goes from the church—nothing is left of the kingdom, but only separate quarreling individuals.

that is, as members of a social order. We must not merely help the slave, but abolish slavery; not only reform the drunkard, but abolish the saloon; not only gain converts but establish them in such right relations to one another as to constitute a kingdom. The moment we attempt to do that we face conflict. Do we dare to be Christians today?

In the industrial life around us pagan principles too often prevail. When the industrial world is divided into two parties, one determined to give little labor for much money, and the other determined to give little money for much labor, our industrial life is simply a continuous silent warfare. It then becomes the foe of the home and the church and a caricature of the Christian order of society. Men do not exist to make shoes or barrels, but shoes and barrels are made for men. The object of a Christian society is never profits, but service. Genuine service will bring profits, but they are incidental to the real aim, which in a Christian society is identical with the aim of Jesus of Nazareth. Business should become a profession; and a profession like that of the doctor or the minister aims at more than financial results. Our present acquisitive society must be transformed into a constructive society, aiming not primarily at dividends or wages, but at the service of men in the name of him who even in a carpenter's shop was about his Father's business.

So, also, the kingdom must come in the church life of our country. The supreme test of any church is this: Do the men who enter the sanctuary find there the spirit of Christ? We all know churches where you can find candles and vestments and rituals and dogmas, but somehow fail to find Christ. And when he is absent many dissensions arise because the church has become eccentric—off its enter. When he is absent the spirit of charity goes with him, and all divisions among us bulk large and black, just as rocks protrude in the harbor when the tide ebbs out to sea. We overcome the rocks not by blasting them out, but by letting the tide come in. "We have the mind of Christ"—to have that is better than to have all the endowments in the world. When that mind—so broad, so just, so forgiving goes from the church—nothing is left of the kingdom, but only separate quarreling individuals.

An excellent old lady attending a religious meeting in the Hippodrome said, when she returned, that the best part of the service to her was the singing of a new hymn. When asked what the hymn was, she replied: "Fight in the Corner Where You Are." When Christ is gone we have simply four corners full of dissension. When he is present we hear him saying: "Whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother and sister and mother."

So also the kingdom must come in our education. There is no such thing as Christian mathematics or Christian chemistry, but there is such a thing as a mathematician or a chemist who is a Christian man. I have rejected many men applicants for teaching positions, because I knew that at heart they were cynics. I would not ask any teacher to sign a creed because I would not sign one myself. I would not insist that he be a member of a church, since we know by sad experience such membership does not guarantee a Christian attitude. But we do rightly ask that our teachers shall not blight the buds of spiritual aspiration and not teach a view of the world which makes it incredible that God should love so miserable a planet.

Teaching by Example

Education must be made more personal and spiritual, less machine-like and lifeless. All that I know about pedagogy is contained in a verse in the twenty-third psalm, "My cup runneth over." When the full, strong personality comes close to the small or vacant mind, something spills over and the little empty mind is filled with new inspiration. Our best teaching consists in the things we never try to teach, not in what we say, but what we are. Education is not a matter of files and indexes and catalogs, not a matter of grades and diplomas; it is the touch of life on life, and the truest, highest life is that which shares the insight and the purpose of the Man of Galilee.

The most vital of all tasks today is to make the kingdom come in our international relations. "A nation," said John Milton, "should be one huge Christian personage, one mighty growth or stature of an honest man." Are our nations today like Christian personages, or are they organized on "the good old plan

That they should take who have the power
And they should keep who can?"

Is the fitting symbol of the modern nation the lion, or the dragon, or the "creatures that tear each other in their slime?" The Christian religion cannot endure such a national attitude, and it repudiates all greed and rapacity and oppression even when those things wear the mask of pseudo-patriotism.

The chief havoc wrought by the war was not the slaughter of men now dead, but the poisoning of the minds of those who still live. The terrible bequest of the war is not ruined homes or the flooding of mines, but the flooding of whole populations in a deluge of bitterness and hate. The real devastated regions are in the souls of men. And what is the United States to do about it? We are told that the correct attitude is that of an official observer. I venture to say that if this great nation of over a hundred million can do nothing today but observe, it is playing for the first time in its history a cowardly part. The great trouble is that the question of our duty to the world has been mired deep in party politics and has never been before us on its merits. Somehow the horizon of early Christianity has got to become the horizon of the nation. Christianity says: "The field is the world"—not my city, my state, my country. America will do the best thing for itself when it best serves humanity.

We want not peace alone, but international cooperation in the great tasks of helping the world, and "the world," as Lloyd George said a year ago, "is not a hemisphere but a globe." We want not a vacuum called peace, but a plenum, a fullness, of cooperative endeavor. Science is bringing men's bodies close together and making their voices audible everywhere. Do we want to live in a world where all men are physically near and are intellectually and spiritually asunder? More than science is needed now. Only the religion of Christ can reunite the broken brotherhood of men and extinguish the smouldering fires of hate. Again the old question returns: "Do we dare to be Christians?" The true answer is that we dare not be anything else. It is the kingdom of Christ or the chaos of the devil, and the choice is clear.

IF any man have not the spirit of Christ—though he have learning, titles, wealth, fame—he is none of his. And if any man have the spirit of Christ—though he have little learning, no reputation and a defective theology—he is one of his. If a church have not the spirit of Christ—it may have oratory, music, architecture and a full treasury—it is not a Christian church. If any church have the spirit of Christ, though it be defective in architecture, in organization, in creed, in ceremony, it is a church of Jesus Christ our Lord.

"The Story Told"

BY H. WYSE JONES

"THERE, thank goodness, it is finished!" triumphantly spoke the secretary as she laid the annual report upon the director's desk. "Complete, is it?" asked the director. "Yes, complete, and it tells the story of the year," she replied, and turned away while the director reflected upon her remark.

"Does it tell the year's story?" he queried to himself. "Is that the complete record? Is that all that another year of toil, prayer, preaching, teaching, serving, have brought? Does that lifeless batch of papers tell the story? Is that all that ten evangelists and their associates have to show for the year? Is the story really told?"

Then came an array of interests, and, taking a pencil, he began to place upon a pad some things that reports can never show. Blessed fellowship in the gospel with more than one hundred of God's ministering servants. Many times that number of the saints whose spiritual lives have been refreshed, hopes brightened, faith strengthened, resolutions renewed. A still larger throng of the more than one hundred communities who had felt the tug of the gospel appeal to holier and higher ideals of life and service. Teeming thousands of children whose young hearts had been touched by the beauty and hope of the Christian life. A vast army of college and high-school students, professional and laboring young people stirred in soul, and resolute in purpose to follow the gleam of service on the upper trails of life. Great talents of intellect, heart, soul, dedicated to God for life-devotion. Sweeping spiritual forces turned loose in kingdom work, vast fortunes secured for the spread of the gospel, and thousands rescued from sin and selfishness to spend eternity with God in immortal glory!

"Hold on here," spoke the director, as his figures covered the pad. "Is that all part of the story? Of course it is," he concluded. And again his mind ran off in meditation. "Think," he said to himself, "of the prospective missionaries, ministers, teachers, lawyers, bankers, editors, leaders in all the vast social, economic, educational, business and religious life of the coming generations because of these one hundred meetings in the great Empire State!"

"Secretary" shouted the director, "That report isn't complete!" "What's wrong?" modestly asked the secretary, fearing lest she had made some fearful blunder. "You said that the report was complete, and that it told the story of the year. You are wrong. See here what I have hurriedly dotted down in a few minutes as I have thought over the work of the year. You didn't include these results at all!"

Down the long columns of spiritual forces set going because of the evangelistic meetings of the year she glanced timidly, but wonderingly, as the director said: "This is by no means a rebuke to you for careless records, or incorrect figures. You have done all that any secretary can do. Humanly speaking, your report is correct. But I wanted you to see the dignity and grandeur of the work we are doing. These things, and a vast deal more that I might have mentioned, can never be tabulated. The story is not, cannot be told!"

"Thank you," said the secretary, much relieved, "I thought I had made some dreadful mistake. I see what you mean. You have taught me a great lesson. During the year I have written many hundreds of letters, made the cold records, summed up the financial returns, poured over puzzling questions, mechanically run the typewriter, sometimes I have thought only of the task and aimed at what I unwisely called 'finished.' Why, how vastly bigger, greater, more important, more worthwhile it all is than I had ever dreamed! And so when I had completed the mechanical work of the annual report, I said: 'Now it is done. It tells the story of the year.' Surely I did make a serious mistake!

"When I had recorded the 101 evangelistic campaigns; noted that there were 3,213 confessions; 3,903 reconsecrations; 440 enlistments for life service; 962 baptisms, with many more yet to be gathered into the churches; and that there had been raised for the support of the work $21,698.16, I thoughtlessly remarked; 'That tells the story of the year!' The half has not yet been told has it? Sure enough it will never be told in this world! The report is a fine testimony to the faithfulness of the workers, but it can never tell the far sweeping spiritual verities that have been realized, and the eternal forces that have been harnessed for the on coming kingdom of our God. Hence forth, I shall feel that I am not simply recording facts, but am engaged in the greatest, most glorious work God has ever committed to mortals."

"Thank you," said the director, "That too is part of the story."

The Southern Baptist Convention

Kansas City, May 16-21

KANSAS CITY was a Baptist city at least for the convention week. Baptists were everywhere—in the hotels, in the streets and in the stores, we saw the distinctive badges indicating that the bearers were delegates to the meeting of the Southern Baptist Convention.

As is usual, large groups were found in the exhibit rooms at all hours, enjoying what is one of the great attractions of such meetings; namely, the meeting of old friends and the forming of new associations. Nevertheless, it was manifest even to the casual observer that the messengers from the churches were for the most part conscious that they were in Kansas City for serious business in connection with the world-wide work of Southern Baptists.

Following the custom of the convention, the election of officers is one of the first items of business. All of the old officers of the convention were re-elected except the vice-president. Dr. Edgar Y. Mullins was thereby continued as president of the convention. He seems to have the full confidence of the constituency and is an admirable presiding officer.

In the opening address, which was followed by a supplementary written statement, President Mullins faced frankly the dangers and duties which Southern Baptists face. We are reproducing his address in full.

The Dangers and Duties of the Present Hour

It has seemed to me wise at the opening of our convention to call attention to some of the dangers which lurk along the way of our work, and some of the imperative duties which confront us. First, I name a few of the dangers:

First of all, I mention the danger of the possibility of division among us over secondary questions. Southern Baptists have attained to a remarkable degree of unity. This has been manifest in our work in the $75,000,000 campaign and otherwise. It is perhaps the greatest single asset we have at the present time on the practical side of our efforts. We can accomplish nothing without unity. It would be exceedingly unfortunate therefore, if we were to divide over the question of pre-millennialism or post-millennialism. There is no issue among us over the question of the personal return of Jesus Christ to this earth. We all accept that as a fixed teaching of the New Testament. We all look forward to it as a glorious hope. We are loyal to it. And there should be no division over the order of events which will occur when Christ returns.

If a man says to me, "I believe that Christ will come before the millennium and reign personally on earth a thousand years," I can say to him, "Give me your hand of fellowship; we have no quarrel." If another brother says, "I believe the world will grow better gradually and there will be a thousand years of millennial blessedness, and then Christ will come," I can say to him, "Give me your hand of fellowship; we have no quarrel." If a third brother comes and says, "I do not know whether Christ will reign personally on earth, or whether there will be a thousand years of blessedness prior to his coming; only I believe that he will come in his own time"—I can say to him "Give me your hand. I have no quarrel with you." Southern Baptists would be very foolish to permit this issue to divide them.

Again, there is no division among us on the question of the supernatural in the gospel of Jesus Christ. We believe in the virgin birth of Christ, his deity, his substitutionary atonement, his resurrection from the dead, and his second coming. We believe in salvation by grace through faith. We believe in the coming of a divine power into human life to redeem man from guilt and the power of sin. We are against naturalism and any form of rationalistic philosophy which denies the supernatural. Here we must plant our feet. On this we must insist for all teachers in our colleges and seminaries. This is the standard by which we must measure ourselves. We favor science, but we are against the anti-religious assumptions of so-called science. We are in favor of freedom of research, but not at the expense of the established facts of religion. In my view, the only requirement we can make of our teachers is that they be loyal to the above supernatural facts of the gospel. There may be variations in the way in which they state their positions on other matters. There is room for difference of opinion on many themes. There is no room for difference of opinion on the great fundamental verities. Let us make this the cardinal point—loyalty to the supernatural in the gospel of Christ. Let us not be divided on subordinate variations of opinion.

A second danger confronting us is the possibility of the confusion of thought as to the place and work of the Southern Baptist Convention. There has been considerable discussion of this matter. We need to clarify our function and our work. The convention is called to a great mission. Its organization and work are precisely like those of other general Baptist bodies. All Baptist organizations are under the control of the same fundamental Baptist principle which governs in our churches. A district association is a voluntary association of Baptists who are self-governing and with obligations to carry on certain lines of work pertaining to its own sphere of activity, and it is morally bound in its obligations to other Baptist bodies, but it is under the control of no other Baptist body. Its obligations are directly to Jesus Christ himself, and its relations to other Baptist bodies are surely moral; they are not legal. These are precisely the same characteristics found in the Southern Baptist Convention. It is a voluntary organization, self-governing, and under obligation to Christ to plan its own work, make out its own program and pursue its own purposes. It is, of course, morally bound, like a district association, to consider its relations to all other free Baptist bodies, to embody the fraternal Baptist spirit, to confer and seek common ground in common work. But within its own sphere, fixed by its own purposes, it is a free, self-determining, independent body. These principles may be applied to all other general Baptist bodies, state conventions, unions, and every other form of Baptist organization. Baptists should never introduce legal bonds, making their general organizations in any sense dependent upon each other in any compulsory way. Our danger is that we will convert moral and fraternal obligations into legal relations. It would be a sad day for Southern Baptists if the Southern Baptist Convention should surrender its autonomy or merge its work in the work of any other Baptist bodies in the world, above or below.

THERE is grace enough for thousands
Of new worlds as great as this;
There is room for fresh creations
In that upper home of bliss;
For the love of God is broader
Than the measure of man's mind,
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind.

But we make His love too narrow
By false limits of our own;
And we magnify His strictness
With a zeal He will not own.
If our love were but more simple,
We should take Him at His word;
And our lives would be all sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord.

Capitalize Mistakes

A third danger is the failure to appreciate the tremendous gains of the $75,000,000 campaign. The gains of that campaign, in vision, in morale, in the demonstration of the possibility of unity in our democratic church policy, in the capacity of a free people to cooperate successfully for the great ends of the kingdom, and in many other ways, are of incalculable value to us. Let us not fail to estimate truly the value of these gains. We must not over-emphasize our mistakes. We have made great mistakes. If I were disposed to dwell upon mistakes, I might easily become pessimistic, because the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary has, perhaps, suffered more than any other agency of the convention in the on-going of the campaign. So far as the campaign itself is concerned, the seminary has derived, at the end of four years, less than 7 per cent of the total amount allotted to it from the campaign itself. We have added to our treasury a somewhat greater sum, but the balance came to us from the collection of pledges already made, these having been secured by our own efforts prior to the campaign. We have received from the campaign proper less than $100,000 out of a total of $1,500,000 which was allotted to us.

But I am far from dwelling upon this. I believe in the brethren and in their willingness to make good to us what we have lost. The only thing to do with our mistakes is to capitalize them. They can teach us great lessons.

A fourth danger is the loss of ideals and courage for greater achievement. We face a great crisis in our history as a denomination. Failure at the present time would be disastrous in many ways, and will tend to depress our spirits in efforts to achieve hereafter.

But I have spoken sufficiently of the dangers. I wish now to call attention to some of the duties of the hour, and first I mention our duty to complete the task we now have in hand. We must not fail on the $75,000,000 campaign. The period has been extended until December, 1924. We have twenty months more in which to round out our great undertaking. If we succeed in this, it will mean great things for us. Wrapped up in our success are the following:

1. Our standing in the religious world. We repudiated the Interchurch movement and set out to do our own work in our own way. The eyes of the world have been upon Southern Baptists since that day in 1919 when we took this step. Our success will add enormously to our prestige, and our failure will cause Baptist stock to go down in the estimation of men and women.

2. Our own faith and courage for future tasks. If we win out in the campaign we are now engaged in, nothing will be too great for us in the future. The only spirit in which to meet it is the spirit of David when he went to meet Goliath. We remember God's deliverances in the past and firm faith in the success of his attack upon the giant.

3. The demonstration of the efficiency of religious democracy. Southern Baptists have been demonstrating that a religious democracy is capable of compact organization and effective cooperation, but this demonstration will be largely a failure if our effort breaks down, and if the objective is not attained. Those who believe in centralized church government, with overlords and bishops, do not think Baptists are capable of high achievement in such efforts. They have freely predicted that we will fail. We must disappoint them by the performance of our great task.

Still Greater Tasks

Another duty is to begin great plans for the future. The highest rewards which God bestows upon his people for tasks achieved is still greater tasks. We ought to begin at the present meeting to plan what we are going to do in our next great movement.

We should renew our allegiance to the Great Commission. The center of our Baptist life is in the commission. Our work begins with evangelism; it reaches out to education, to philanthropy, to social service, to civic righteousness. Our task is to build up the kingdom of God in all these respects, but as Baptists understand their work, they begin with the renewal of the individual heart through the grace of God. We preach a gospel which goes directly after the salvation of the individual, and out of the regenerate life we believe all good things in the social order will follow. Evangelism, therefore, is the keynote at home and abroad. Our hospitals, our orphanages, our colleges and theological seminaries and all other phases of our Baptist life and activity follow as an inevitable consequence.

Sometimes a young preacher asks me how much he shall vary his message from the strictly evangelistic message in preaching. My reply is that the evangelistic note should never be absent, though there may be many variations in the theme. When I was a child I could pick out a tune on the piano with one finger so you could recognize it was the tune of "Home, Sweet Home." But I have heard Paderewski play "Home, Sweet Home" with variations. He used ten fingers and the entire keyboard of the piano, and yet at every stage of the piece as he played it the tune of "Home, Sweet Home" was recognized. He played it with variations. So also there is evangelism which may be likened to the playing with one finger, and there is preaching which is like the playing of Paderewski with all the fingers, and yet the tune is always there.

Our duty is to renew the vision of 1919. It was a great hour in Atlanta when we stood together voting the great undertaking. The spirits of all the great leaders of the past, if they were permitted to be present, must have rejoiced with joy unspeakable as they heard what was said and witnessed the scene of that memorable night in Atlanta. We need to come back to that high mountain top and look abroad over the earth again and catch a vision of the coming kingdom of God, and rededicate ourselves to the great tasks with all the fervor of our souls.

WHAT a mighty reformation
We would witness through the land
If the masses and the classes
Could be made to understand
That he wins at least one sinner
From dishonesty and pelf
Who will let alone his neighbor
And just practice on himself!

My mind goes out today to the suffering world. Everywhere humanity is agonizing in its hunger and need for the gospel of Jesus Christ. A newspaper writer the other day who had traveled all over Europe pictured the situation as follows:

Looking at Europe as a whole, this writer said: In the West people are fighting their own race—their own brothers. They say it is in the cause of liberty. Each side is trying to suppress the other by extermination. In truth, they hate; and how they hate. This is Ireland.

Half way between West and East people are starving, defeated, sore at heart, defenseless, sullen. The pride of a nation is being trampled under foot. The people are dreaming of a day to come when they will be avenged, when they will get weapons in their hands and fight and kill. And that is Germany. Oh, how they hate!

Farther East is a great suffering world that God seems to have abandoned and that has renounced God. Indeed, the government has definitely decreed that it will exterminate religion and drive all believers out. They are a great people, enduring great suffering. They also dream of a great day to come when their enemies will be at their feet. And this is Russia.

And in the East, across the Hellespont, there is a world of chaos, a nation defeated, struggling to rise out of its ashes, to recreate itself, throbbing with a great grievance and inflamed with a great spirit of revenge. And that is Turkey.

And in the midst of this Turkish people, full of venom and hate and cruelty, I can see long columns of pitiful orphan children, under the guidance of Red Cross workers, children of Christian parents, marching in all directions to places of refuge and safety from the pitiless cruelty of their enemies. And this is Armenia and the Armenians.

Europe is thus a scene of desolation. This newspaper writer gives a marvellous interpretation. She says: No autocrat can ever bring back peace and prosperity to Europe; democracy cannot bring to Europe what Europe needs; even a League of Nations, by itself, cannot do this. She said that after talking with many leaders of thought—professors, ministers and others—there was one verdict: The only possible salvation for Europe is a spiritual revival. There is only one cure for the dreadful disease of these countries, and that is the coming of God's Spirit and the gospel of Jesus Christ. Europe, she said, is a graveyard, desolate everywhere, without a single lily.

And as we look abroad over the earth, similar conditions prevail, and thus the vision of duty, the vision of sin and the vision of God are made clear to us. Let us humbly and reverently and devotedly recognize God's call to us to go out into this suffering world with the only remedy—the gospel of the grace of God.

The supplementary written statement to Doctor Mullins' address follows:

Science and Religion

1. We recognize the greatness and value of the service which modern science is rendering to the cause of truth in uncovering the facts of the natural world. We believe that loyalty to fact is a common ground of genuine science and the Christian religion. We have no interest or desire in covering up any fact in any realm of research. But we do protest against certain unwarranted procedures on the part of some so-called scientists. First, in making discoveries or alleged discoveries in physical nature a convenient weapon of attack upon the facts of religion; second, using the particular sciences—such as psychology, biology, geology and various others—as if they necessarily contained knowledge pertaining to the realm of the Christian religion, setting aside the supernatural; third, teaching as facts what are merely hypotheses. The evolution doctrine has long been a working hypothesis of science, and will probably continue to be because of its apparent simplicity in explaining the universe. But its best exponents freely admit that the causes of the origin of species have not been traced, nor has any proof been forthcoming that man is not the direct creation of God as recorded in Genesis. We protest against the imposition of this theory upon the minds of our children in denomination or public schools as if it were a definite and established truth of science. We insist that this and all other theories be dealt with in a truly scientific way, that is, in careful conformity to established facts.

2. We record again our unwavering adherence to the supernatural elements in the Christian religion. The Bible is God's revelation of himself, through man moved by the Holy Spirit, and is our sufficient, certain and authoritative guide in religion. Jesus Christ was born of the

Tragedy Stalks Hopiland

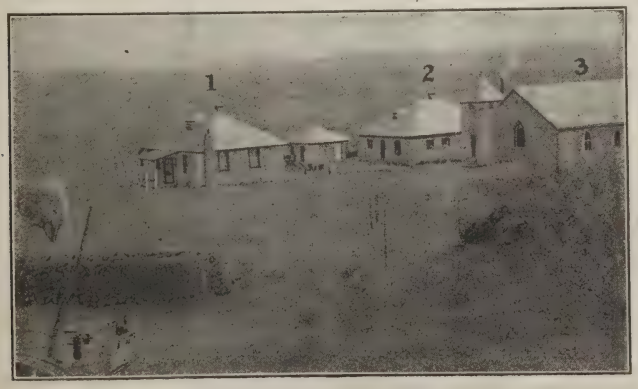
BY CONSTANCE JACKSON

THE last stone had hardly been laid in the beautiful new laundry and bathhouse on the First Mesa Hopi field. Already the Indians were beginning to arrive in great flocks to take advantage of the new facilities for cleanliness. Indian reservations are dry, dusty places, and in Arizona the sun is hot. It had been hard to keep clean with little water and no bathtubs. Even the dirtiest men and women on the mesa were coming for their baths and washing their clothes under the stimulus of the new equipment. And already their homes were showing the effects of this new passion for cleanliness.



The finishing touches were put on the building on the afternoon of Wednesday, April 18. At 3:30 the next morning Tom Pavatea banged at the door of the missionaries' home with cries of "Fire, fire!" They opened their eyes to find flames darting pointed red fingers at the sky. All the men on the mesa rushed to help and proved themselves good firemen. But their efforts could not save the building once the fire had gained such headway. Only the engine room is left intact, and the Hopis are mourning the loss of their beautiful laundry.

The missionaries are mourning it too, since to them the building represented far more than a laundry and bathhouse. For they saw it, in embryo of course, as a splendid community house, destined to draw and hold large numbers of the heathen Indians whom they could win in no other way. The building was located only a few yards from the church, and had a room for general gatherings in addition to the laundry and shower bath rooms. The missionaries had planned to enlist the help of some of the Christian women every day in mingling with the village women as they worked over the wash tub and ironing board. The good news of salvation was to have been told by hymn and story. Even now many of the women love to join in the Hopi gospel songs. As the work gathered strength there were to have been Bible classes to fill the interim while the women waited for their clothes to dry. Sewing machines were to have been installed later to serve as an added attraction in winning the pagan Indian mothers.

The plant cost about $8,000, and the Indians themselves contributed $1,500 worth of labor in hauling stone and building. The government officials were most enthusiastic and cooperated by installing an artesian well whose flow is such that in two days it fills the 200,000 gallon receiving tank. A pump forces this water up the hill from which it is piped to the laundry house.

Only those who have visited the field can appreciate what this means in the lives of the Indians who for generations have had such a limited supply of water.

The plant must be rebuilt if we, as Baptists, are to maintain our influence among the Hopi people. Yet how is it to be done? The Woman's American Baptist Home Mission Society, under whose direction the building was originally erected, is already in debt and hard pressed to keep up its present responsibilities for many fields among other peoples. We can only hope and pray that God, to whom all things are possible, will provide some means from his abundant resources. He alone can inspire those upon whose hearts such a plea falls with poignancy to share in the task of rebuilding this enterprise for his kingdom.

Sunday Radio Service

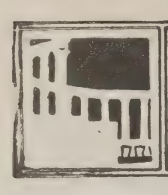
BY FRANK GOODMAN

IN response to the invitation of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the New York Federation of Churches has arranged to broadcast a series of Sunday afternoon services during the summer.

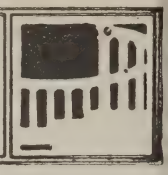
A prominent minister or layman will give the address, and outstanding church choirs, quartets and soloists will render the music. It is planned for the service to go on the air promptly at 3:30 o'clock and to last about one hour. The opening service was held on May 6 with Dr. S. Parkes Cadman as the speaker. The music was rendered by a choir of forty voices from the Central Congregational Church of Brooklyn under the direction of Dr. Harry Rowe Shelley.

The new station of WEAF from which the broadcasting was run off is in the Telephone and Telegraph Building at 195 Broadway, New York City, and is the last word in technical improvements in broadcasting equipment. It greatly improves the quality of radio programs. The studio is well-equipped for religious programs, particular attention being given to the reception room which is large and inviting. The new facilities will result in a marked improvement in the broadcasting of religious programs, and will eliminate long waits in the service which are so distressing to the radio audience.



During the summer months when so many vacationists leave for places far remote from the possibility of attending divine worship on the Sabbath day, the New York Federation of Churches is glad of the opportunity to broadcast under such favorable conditions a service that will meet with the approbation of all. Since the influx of the automobile many church people go in for outdoor life during the hot weather, carrying their tents and other paraphernalia with them. It is safe to say that thousands will include a radio set in the equipment carried along, and the problem of serving such as these with a religious service is one of supreme importance.

When the American people begin to reap the benefits of raido in full, there is one phase of broadcasting that will not be overlooked in appreciation, and that phase relates to the religious message. Radio is coming to be recognized as something far beyond a fad. It is a moving force in our country today. What radio can do, is doing and will do for the cause of religion no man may now say. If our country becomes better, more enlightened through its progress in radio, and the religious appeal finds its way uninvited into many homes and clubs, it is the duty of every Christian to support this service, the importance of which cannot be estimated.



In this age when invention has made possible many privileges not known to the preceding generations, it behooves the Christian leaders of today, out of the fullness of their hearts, to meet this new situation which confronts us by providing the means by which the many thousands who seek rest and recreation during the summer months may become a part of the great congregation on the Sabbath day, and listen to a service arranged for their edification. It is the hope of the New York Federation of Churches that this service rendered each Sabbath by the Christian ministers of the various communions will prove a rich, strong, vigorous expression of the gospel that will feed the souls of those in pursuit of rest and diversion from the toil of their everyday tasks of life.

At the recent graduation exercises of the Bible Institute of the Southern Baptist Convention, New Orleans, sixty-two diplomas and degrees were delivered. President McClothlin of Furman University, Greenville, S. C., gave the closing address, and Dr. J. B. Leavell of the First Church, Houston, Tex., the baccalaureate sermon. This year the total enrolment of the student body is 313 representing fourteen different states and China, England, France, Armenia, Syria and Brazil.

The Open Forum

A QUESTION OF CREDENTIALS

Here is a church that has managed to arouse a strong interest in the Northern Baptist Convention. The chief reason for urging the large delegation to go is that the convention accomplishes a good missionary education so rapidly in those who really attend. This church finds twelve people who will go, paying their own expenses, but is entitled to only seven delegates.

A neighboring church has only two people who can or will go, but is entitled to six delegates. The two churches are well acquainted and neighborly. The question arises as to whether it is proper for the neighboring church to elect as its regularly accredited representatives four of the five people from the first named church. One who is perhaps our Baptist expert in technical matters reports that there is no specific reason why such a representation should not be considered within the requirements of the by-laws. It is a matter of conscience.

The neighboring church has granted the above-mentioned credentials, as a matter of fact; and according to all that the past tells they will have the full rights of delegates. They will not use their right to vote, however, inasmuch as there seems to be some question as to whether a delegate ought to be appointed by a church of which he is not a member.

Their reason for wanting the standing of a delegate is that, after paying their expenses to go so far, they want to be sure that they will see and hear everything.

Tell us what you think as to the situation suggested above.

"PENTECOST OUTPENTECOSTED"

"Outpentecosted" is a good word! At the Jerusalem Pentecost several things were, to say the least, "different," "They then that gladly received his word were baptized, and there were added unto them in that day about three thousand souls." The large number were converts of "that day" apparently, not the result of saving up for a certain day. More important still, they were not on a list of those written in the "official orders" of their soldier general, "giving the names of those accepted for baptism." And once more, they were not "baptized" out of "two bowls, the kind ordinarily found on a Chinese table" held in the hands of their "general" and "a colonel." Otherwise it is all quite "scriptural" but in these respects at least it "outpentecosted pentecost!" Perhaps we wouldn't have thought of these things if we hadn't been reading "THE BAPTIST." Anyhow let us rejoice in the preaching of the glad tidings and in the fact that so many may go on their way rejoicing, even if in some practices they follow not with us as we try to follow the New Testament. And may we have a few more messages just now like that of Doctor Hanley lest, as one prominent laymen said to me last winter, the Northern Baptist promoters and all the promoted "reverse the program of the kingdom of God." I wonder if he meant we were in danger of turning Matthew 6: 33 around and assuming that if we "seek first" all these offerings that somehow the needed evangelism and education and spiritual power will "be added unto us?" Pentecost came with the coming of the Spirit upon a consecrated praying, waiting band of his followers, and in connection with their earnest, effective, witnessing and preaching aftermath. Programs are good. Power is indispensable. First things first.

THE DEACONS AGAIN. GOD BLESS THEM!

The article of Dr. Bruce Kinney in THE BAPTIST some time ago in which the expression "long-haired deacon" occurred, and the reply to that article by an ex-deacon in the Open Forum a little later, has led me to offer this suggestion to our pastors:

Why not come to the rescue of these deacons by telling what kind of deacons we have had. I have often heard the remarks made about long-haired deacons and deacons with horns which imply that deacons are hard on the pastors and are thorns in the flesh to them.

Now, is that true? What about it, brother pastors? Let us hear your testimony. I will start by giving my experience. I have been a pastor in Nebraska for twenty-six years. The first seven years, 1897-1904 I was student pastor serving various churches while pursuing my education. From 1904 until the present time I have served five, including the one I now serve. So that I have known and labored with a number of deacons. And I can say that with one single exception, they were all good men. Some of them were exceptionally good. I never had one bit of trouble with them. They were always good and kind to me. We did not always agree but we never quarreled. I was able to make friends in every church I served and among those friends were the deacons. So that I cannot complain about the deacons being hard on the pastor. And not only my experience but my observation during these twenty-six years of active ministry leads me to say that as a rule our deacons are men of high principles and noble character who are a real help to their pastors.

What kind of deacons have you had?

WESTON, NEB. C. J. Johnson.

A Child Goes to Church

First, all the people sing and then—they say
"Our Father," just as I do every day;
It makes me feel so proud, because I too,
Know how to pray the words that Grown-Ups do.
Right after that, four men march down the aisles—
(My Uncle Joe is one; he always smiles
On week-days—but on Sundays, what a change!
Church seems to make him look so stern and strange!)
They all pass silver plates, and each one there
Must put in money, like you pay a fare.
I carry my own purse, and when it's time
For me to pay, put in a brand-new dime.
I like this part of church, but later, when
The man in robes begins to talk, why then
My thoughts, like birds, go flying anywhere—
(But God, who lives here in this house, won't care
So long as I sit still). The sun shines through Three stained glass windows just above our pew;
One of them shows a Shepherd with a lamb
Cuddled close to his shoulder. Oh, I am
So fond of him! Within that kind, strong arm
No little lamb could ever come to harm.
A lovely Lady in a queer blue gown
From out the second window frame smiles down,
Holding her Baby—'twould be great if He Should climb down from her lap and play with me!
The middle picture is the best of all:
A bearded Man, tall as my father's tall—
Stands underneath a great, big, spreading tree,
And little children gather 'round His knee—
They seem to talk together like dear friends—
His face is beautiful.
When service ends
The organ plays a lively tune, although
It meant to tell us "hurry up and go."
So everybody crowds to reach the door
But I turn back to look at them once more—
The Shepherd and the Lady and the Man—
And say good-bye as often as I can!
Their eyes all follow me—they cannot speak—
But church will be locked up a whole long week,
And they'll be lonely till next Sunday when They know I'll come to see them all again!

Awakening Interest

It sometimes requires considerable urging to get a complacent and self-satisfied school to realize its duty to enlarge its borders. Just as a non-missionary church is spiritually dead, so a non-growing Sunday school is stultified. There will always be those also who think the effort useless. A sermon by the pastor, a talk by a visitor on what some other school accomplished, the persistent effort of a pastor, superintendent, or teacher with a vision is often needed to get things started. After having aroused in the workers' conference a sense of responsibility for those who might be in the school and are not, and having decided to enter upon a campaign for new members, there are certain necessary next steps. The very first of these is a review of the condition of the school to see that all is in good working order. Before asking extra work of the car the motorist tightens the nuts, greases the gears, fills the tanks, examines the tires. Small use to add new members to a boys' class that has no teacher. One of the first efforts will be to provide a teacher for every class. The cordiality of our invitation will be doubted if there are no extra seats for newcomers and not enough song-books to go around, so attention must be paid to our equipment. All that can be done to brighten the Sunday-school surroundings and to improve the order and efficiency and attractiveness of the school program will contribute directly to the success of a membership drive. A solemn face and manner are expected of ushers at a funeral, but the Sunday-school usher should be chosen for his cordiality. His hearty handshake makes the stranger feel at home.

Who is there to invite to the school? Those who once were members; members of church families who do not attend; any one who attends no other school, and newcomers who have not attached themselves to any church. How are these new members to be found? It is not enough to depend upon the vague and indefinite knowledge of the teachers as to where new scholars are to be found. The only sure and thorough way is to have a systematic survey of the entire neighborhood from which the Sunday school draws, or should draw, its support. For the school survey is a necessary annual event. Population is constantly shifting, new people are coming in, new houses are being built, last year's figures cannot be relied upon for this year's work.

In smaller communities it may be sufficient to conduct the survey once in two or three years, though the danger is of too infrequent rather than too frequent repetition.

Once in three to five years (depending upon the rate of change in the community) all the evangelical churches ought to unite in a thorough, systematic community canvass. For this task careful organization must be made, months in advance.

Within the three or five-year period each live church within the community ought to go out with its own special invitation. In a spirit of Christian comity care will be exercised to avoid any suggestion of proselyting. When a family expresses a preference for another church, the canvasser ought warmly to urge their attendance, and loyalty to that church, and a record should be kept so as to notify the pastor and Sunday school of their choice.

But the larger number of families in the ordinary community are indifferent toward church and religion. They have no preferences that have any influence in their lives. In a general survey when cards are sorted among the churches, and a certain machinery must be put into operation before another party calls (if they ever do) and extend them an invitation, this class of the religiously indifferent are likely to suffer.

When one warm-hearted church goes out into the community because it is seeking men, women and children, it will take advantage of the first call and any opportunity which that call affords, to press home a personal, gripping invitation. No doubt will be left in any one's mind but that somebody wants them, wants them particularly, and if they don't come next Sunday to the Baptist Sunday school somebody is going to be disappointed. Why, the visitor even offered to call on Sunday and take them to the school and introduce them.—JAY A. LAPHAM, in "Church School Objectives," Judson Press.

International Sunday School Lesson for June 17

ESTHER, THE PATRIOT QUEEN
LESSON: ESTHER 4:13-5:3
GOLDEN TEXT: ESTHER 4:14

Introductory

It is not known who was the author of the book of Esther. The book takes its name from the principal character. Among the large number of Jews who had been deported to Persia by the order of King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon upon the downfall of Jerusalem were a few members of the tribe of Benjamin. Mordecai was one of these. He was a statesman and a member of the court of King Ahasuerus. Esther was an orphan cousin whom Mordecai had adopted as his daughter. Her beauty won the attention of the king and he made her queen when Vashti was deposed because of disobedience to him. Soon after this Esther learned, through Mordecai, of a plot against the life of the king and revealed it to him, thereby saving him from assassination.

The Lesson

When Hamaan was made chief councilor all bowed down to him except Mordecai, and this was a double offense in the eyes of Hamaan because Mordecai was a Jew. In anger he appealed to the king that all the Jews in the kingdom be put to death. Mordecai communicated this news to Esther and begged her to intercede with the king for her people. But Esther feared for her life as she herself had not seemed to be in favor with the king for several days. Mordecai sent this word to her: "Think not with thyself that thou shalt escape in the king's house, more than all the Jews. For if thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then wilt relief and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place, but thou and thy father's house will perish: and who knoweth whether thou art not come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" It is not possible to know which of the wily statesman's arguments had greatest weight with Esther, but her answer to Mordecai was that he should summon the Jews of Shushan to a three-day fast and she and her maids would likewise fast. At the end of that time she would approach the king.

On the third day Esther put on her royal apparel and stood in the inner court of the king's house. "And so it was when the king saw Esther the queen standing in the court, that she obtained favor in his sight; and the king held out to Esther the golden sceptre that was in his hand. So Esther drew near. . . . . Then the king said, What is thy request? It shall be given thee even to the half of the kingdom.
